Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 18, strike out lines 13 and 14.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I think the time has come when my colleagues will agree that we ought to stop this little petty so-called packing-box business. I have been here three years, and during that three years there has been three regular sessions of Congress. For these regular sessions of Congress there has been allotted to me three cedar chests, three pine boxes, and three oak boxes. Under the prevailing practice for every session of Congress, every regular session which comes once every year, every one of my colleagues has received one cedar chest, one pine box, and one oak box.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not get three boxes at a session.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about one for each session. The gentleman from Kansas has been here for the same length of time that I have, and for that time he has received three cedar chests, three pine boxes, and three oak boxes for every regular session. If he has not got them, he has not got what was coming to him.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman misspoke himself, I think. He said three for each session.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; one cedar chest, one pine box, and one oak box for each regular session. Take, for instance, our good friend, Uncle JOE CANNON, whom all of us love and want to get everything that is good in life, he has been here 44 years. He has received 44 cedar chests, 44 pine boxes, and 44 oak boxes. My God, gentlemen, what has he done with all of them? [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I have not the time now, I have only a few minutes. Now, if it was necessary for us to have these boxes to perform our duties, then all well and good. I want to ask when it comes to a question of right what we ought to do when we have a $3,000,000,000 deficit staring us in the face? I want to ask if there is a single one of us who would take the three cedar chests, the three pine boxes, and the three oak boxes allotted to each of us during the past three years down to our constituents and exhibit them on the hustings when the other fellow is after us this summer and show them what we are getting and try to make them believe it is necessary for us to have them? Why do we get them? Why do we allot them to ourselves, paid for with public money? Oh, we can not camouflage the issue by saying that they are packing boxes; that they are necessary to pack our stuff in when we go home. How many of you pack your stuff in your cedar chests? I hope Uncle Joe will never leave Congress, I hope that he will serve forever, but if he were to go home, how many of these 44 cedar chests he has received would he have left in which to pack his stuff. He has given them away. We all know that. He may have some of his 44 pine boxes or some of his 44 oak boxes left. We ought to stop this thing. I heard one of my Republican colleagues the other day—God bless him—ask in what bill this appropriation came, and he said that if he could just find out where the appropriation appears he would try to stop it. I am putting him on notice now that it appears in this bill, right here in this item which I am moving to have stricken out, and each one of us will have an opportunity to vote it in or vote it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we are going to have a campaign on this summer, most of us, and I want you to remember when you go home that I have given you all an opportunity to vote to cut out this useless, wasteful appropriation, and I want you all to tell the people in your districts that you voted to keep the boxes in the bill given you at public expense. You will be fair with your constituents then. What excuse have we to offer for this appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield, I have only a minute. This is one appropriation for which we can offer no reasonable excuse. I am willing to help appropriate for necessities, and when I can go to my constituents and look them in the eye and say that I voted for a certain appropriation because I considered it necessary, I am satisfied; but I want to say that this appropriation has no foundation and no basis at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I expect to have 15 minutes without objection, unless the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] objects.

Mr. BLANTON. I will not object.

Mr. THOMAS. That settles it. I do not see why such speeches should be made about cedar boxes. I get some cedar boxes, and I would like to have four times as many cedar boxes as I have, as there are many poor widows in my district who would appreciate a cedar box. I would like to have four times as many vegetable seeds as I have. There is always a class of gentlemen like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who is playing both ends against the middle, opposing all appropriations for the purpose of seeds, and then in addition to that he flays Samuel Gompers. I have nothing to say one way or the other about Samuel Gompers, except that Mr. THOMAS is always going to vote as he pleases, notwithstanding any objection of Mr. Gompers, and I know of none, or Mr. BLANTON. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what Mr. BLANTON was talking about, and I do not know that anybody in the world can tell when he talks what he is talking about. I want to ask Mr. BLANTON a question: What were you talking about?

Mr. BLANTON. I was talking about the balmy atmosphere of the mountains of Kentucky.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, that is a great atmosphere down there when you go there in the summer time. But people in Kentucky work. The people of the State of Kentucky are agriculturists. They work. In 1918 they raised over $404,000,000 worth of tobacco, and in 1919 they raised over $500,000,000 worth of tobacco, besides large crops of other kinds. Yet a Republican Congress that says for the sake of economy it will not increase the appropriation $8,000 for the extermination of the tobacco worm.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, if Mr. BLANTON does not object, that settles the matter. The trouble with Mr. BLANTON is that he is a man who has got much sense about some things, but as to a whole lot of things he is not so well informed, and never will be, as long as he lives and keeps up his present gait. I want to tell you, I was raised on a farm.

I plowed corn 12 hours a day for 50 cents a day, and you people come down here, like the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FULLER]—you know Mr. FULLER, who has an automobile factory and makes millions of dollars—you folks come down here and talk about being farmers. I want to tell you that, so far as I am individually concerned, I am not compelled to come to Congress. The Republicans carried my district by over 2,000 the last election, and I will carry it by over 2,000 the next election. [Laughter and applause.] You will see the difference.

I want to talk now about the barberry bush. Some Republican Congressman from Missouri—I do not know who—said we needed $190,000 for barberry bushes, because they made rust on wheat. There never was a barberry bush in the world, in my opinion, that made rust on wheat, and yet in the name of economy this Republican Congress gave $190,000 to eradicate barberry bushes, when the way to eradicate a barberry bush is to take a hoe and cut it down. They never discovered but one barberry bush, I am informed, in the district that this Congressman comes from.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for 10 minutes more.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, we want to get along with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I presume the chairman is going to put the question on the amendment which I offered to strike out lines 13 and 14 on page 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inadvertently did not put the motion. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 3, noes 108.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Legislative reference: To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, $25,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $3,000 per annum.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph. In line 11, strike out the figures "$25,000" and insert "$45,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 22, line 11, after the word "thereof" strike out the figures "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$45,000."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, by reason of the absence of the members of the Library Committee who outrank me in service, it devolves upon me to attempt at this point to secure for the Library a continuance of the funds that have been at its command for this particular work. Permit me again to express my astonishment at a committee system under which a committee charged presumably with the oversight of one of these activities of the Government finds the passing of judgment upon its activities in the hands of another committee. I say this not in criticism of the other committee, but solely in justification of my trespassing on the time of the House in presenting the point of view of those who are supposed, in behalf of the House, to take a particular interest in the activities concerned.

The legislative reference service is not understood by all the Members. Indeed, the facilities at command have been used by only a comparatively small number, because thus far the Congress has not seen fit to develop that very useful adjunct of modern State library service in its application to the needs of the Federal Government to the degree of making it possible to urge Members extensively to resort to those facilities. Let me recall that about 30 years ago Melville Dewey brought to the attention of New York the importance of having the material in the State library at Albany put at the command of the legislators and the administrative officials of the State. That laid the foundation for a legislative reference bureau system which since then has been developed until now nearly all the States have entered into this work to a greater or less extent. In that particular they are going along side by side with all the great corporations of the country, which have awakened to the importance of having experts intrusted with the compilation of material that shall be of practical value and at ready command.

The purpose of this department of the Library is to make it possible for any individual Member of the House or Senate or of any committee to resort quickly and surely to officials in the Library who may ascertain the data necessary for the proper performance of our official duties. All that any Member need do, if he desires to know about the legislation in our own country or in other countries upon any particular subject, is to take down his telephone, ask to be put in connection with the legislative reference bureau, and instantly he will have working for him specialists who will take out of that enormous mass of material on the other side of the square extracts that will be pertinent to his need. For illustration, I had hoped that the House might see fit in the recent railroad bill to apply the Canadian law for the investigation of industrial disputes.

I did not have at hand a copy of that law, but telephoned to this office, and I had within an hour or two not only a copy of the law but an abstract of the important legislation upon this subject in Australasia and wherever the actual experiments have been made. On other occasions I have with equal promptness secured information of the same sort. Other gentlemen who know of the existence of this resource will corroborate me as to its value. The committee has seen fit, doubtless in accordance with that spirit of economy which prompts all of us, to reduce the amount to be made available for this work instead of enlarging it as the Library officials, and I hope I am justified in saying the Committee on the Library, would have desired. In view of the argument for economy I shall not argue that the larger sum, which in the view of the librarian would have made this service more widely and importantly of use, be granted, but I do ask the continuance of the same expenditure as that for the last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LUCE. I ask to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LUCE. This department, besides putting at the command of Members this special information, is engaged in indexing the laws which have been passed by the Congress from the start, and laws passed by the other legislative bodies of the land, in order that we may easily find out what has actually been enacted in regard to any subject with which we are concerned. This work of preparation and compilation occupies those employed by this department whenever Congress may chance not to be in session. The work is progressing. A mass of material is piling up and increasing the utility of the library.

Another work that this department has undertaken is the preparation of abstracts which shall at a glance show the nature and content and bearing of the long and intricate bills that from time to time are put before us for judgment. These abstracts have hitherto been at the command of the Senate. They have not as yet been at the command of the House, by reason, if I understand aright, of the lack of sufficient means to warrant the work, possibly by lack of insistence on the part of the House that we have the same facilities as have of late been at the command of Senators.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. We have the same right to get information there and the same opportunity is presented there.

Mr. LUCE. We have the same opportunity. I am referring to the preparation of abstracts of important bills, which, if I am rightly informed, are now regularly placed on the desks of the Senators, so that by glancing through the abstract they can know what changes are proposed in existing law and understand the essential proposals that may be novel.

Mr. BRIGGS. I wanted to say that bureau has addressed a letter to the Members of the House as well, indicating that they would be glad to furnish them to whomever desired them, and to my office they not only deliver these abstracts but abstracts of the Senate bills.

Mr. LUCE. If they are being generally distributed to House Members, I was not aware of the fact.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman think those abstracts are of any value?

Mr. LUCE. I have not personally used them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have personally examined them, and have never yet found them correct.

Mr. LUCE. That may be due to the condition by which the Congress has seen fit to limit the amount of money that may be paid to any employee of this department, possibly making it impossible to employ the most expert and the best-trained men for this particular work.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But I think they do the work because they are hunting for something to do. They get too much money. They are hunting for an excuse to work.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, if more employees of the Government in Washington hunted for the opportunity to work, the Government would be much better administered. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I confess that I view with apprehension the attitude taken by our esteemed colleague who has just addressed us, who demurs apparently at the proposal to make of greater service this wonderful collection of material. It may be that we are now not pursuing the wisest method, that going slowly and experimentally, we have not yet reached perfection, but is that an argument why we should allow to stand there that glorious edifice, housing nearly 5,000,000 pieces of matter, a number larger than in any other library in the civilized world, and yet hamper and harass our association with it so that we can not even master it for our personal needs? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word on this proposition. This is another example of how from very simple beginnings these activities assume very large proportions. In 1915 the appropriation for this service was $25,000; the same in 1916; the same in 1917; the same in 1918, when they had a deficiency of $2,000; in 1919 it was $30,000; in 1920 it jumped to $45,000; and this year they ask for an appropriation of $69,000. Your committee went to some trouble in trying to get at the facts with reference to this bureau.

Mr. LITTLE. What was the appropriation last year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Forty-five thousand dollars, the same as the gentleman is asking to insert in this bill. We were of the opinion, and are still of the opinion, that it would have been better for the Government if the amount that we allowed had been reduced even to a smaller figure than $25,000. This reference library may be rendering some service. It is of service when a Member of Congress desires some work upon some particular subject; he can take the telephone down and call up the department and ask that that particular work be sent to him. They have an elegant card system in the library—I expect equal to that obtaining anywhere. By reference to that they can very easily ascertain the volume wanted and send it to the Congressman inquiring for it. Aside from that peculiar service, I do not think they are rendering any very valuable service to anybody. And I wish to say that the greatest amount of this money is expended in getting up this so-called calendar or catalogue of bills and a digest of them, and so forth, which, as has been stated, is placed upon the desks of the Senators.

I have one before me that they got up on the railroad bill, and if there is a man on earth that can read it understandingly I would like to see him do it. I have never found one of these yet, and I have taken some pains to look at them, that, in my opinion, would be of the least benefit in doing the work at hand. They are full of errors. They can not be relied upon at all. If we were to follow out to the logical conclusion the idea of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], if we were to have some one delve into all those thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of volumes over there in order that we might have available the information they contain for Members of Congress, we would have an army employed. And perhaps this is a nucleous of what they desire in that direction. There are many, many activities connected with this Government that are in far greater need than the one we are now considering.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. PLATT. As I understood the gentleman, he said the chief duty of this bureau was to send books over to us, or something?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is one of the things.

Mr. PLATT. That is not what they do at all. We get the books by telephoning another part of the library. And if you introduce a bill and want to know the other acts in effect on the same subject they will send the information to us.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I know that if a committee or a Member of this Congress is engaged in an examination of any subject matter, and they telephone over there for information, it is referred to this section of the library, and it is their duty to care for it. That is the testimony.

Mr. PLATT. They dig out matter from books and send it to you.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And here is some of their "digging" that is absolutely unreliable.

Mr. PLATT. I have seen abstracts of bills of mine, and I can not say but that they are very good.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Perhaps the gentleman fixes his bills up in such shape that they do not need to be abstracted. But be that as it may, my particular objection to this provision, and I think the particular objection of the committee to this provision, and what I think should be the particular objection of everyone here to it, is that we are just encouraging the expenditure of money upon trifles, instead of applying it upon substance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the laws of the United States are scattered throughout some 35 books. To find and assimilate and utilize those laws passes beyond the power of any lawyer in the United States as a matter of actual practice to do it with real success as he goes along. There is only one place in the United States where you can find out what the law of this country is, and that is over here in this little legislative reference bureau. There is no book that prints it, but those fellows have built up a card index, and when you telephone to them and say, "What is the law about so-and-so, and what is repealed and what is alive?" they can find it for you. If every lawyer in the United States had access to it, you would not so badly need another revision of the statutes, but no one has access to it except Members of Congress. It is absolutely invaluable to this Congress, and every man in Congress can have the benefit of it.

Yesterday you voted $40,000 to provide six chairmen of committees—that is all—with an additional clerk to show them how to write bills which they ought to be able to write themselves—$40,000, accompanied by much gilded oratory and wild enthusiasm for it. And what did you do? You gave six committees, which means six chairmen, assistants to write bills. We were told that every Member could get it. No Member of this House can get the benefit of that appropriation, and it is not the law that they should. It is for committees, not Members.

Here, gentlemen, is a chance to get something yourselves. The provision that we passed yesterday, to which I have referred, is of no account to the rest of us. If you want to know what the laws are and how to utilize them, you had better sustain this outfit and keep it up. It is true that if we are able to consolidate the statutes and get all the laws together in one book, that necessity will not exist, and then you would not need to expend this money, because everybody could then consult the laws for himself, and you could greatly cut down the appropriations and lessen the number of clerks.

But I am satisfied, gentlemen, from my own experience, that this thing is exceedingly valuable. I have not used it largely myself because I did not know how largely they would be loyal and enthusiastic in cooperating with my work, but I have tried them. I tried the gentlemen for whom we yesterday gave $40,000 and asked them a little question, and it took them a week to answer it; but in a few hours these other fellows in the legislative reference bureau will tell you what the law on any subject is. I have observed it with a view to finding out whether that establishment had any value or not, and I have not found any mistakes committed on their part yet. Sometimes different views may be given to a law. The Supreme Court of the United States might have to pass upon that. But I think, gentlemen, this outfit for the present year is absolutely invaluable. The common, ordinary Congressman, who has not been here long and has not been made chairman of a big committee, can not avail himself of the service of the legislative drafting bureau, because the service of that bureau will be largely used by six big committees; but this legislative reference bureau in the Library of Congress can be availed of by every Member of Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Kansas ought not to make that statement, because he has just received more at the hands of the House to-day than any other Member.

Mr. LITTLE. Perhaps I ought not to make that statement, but everybody else ought to make it except myself. I still think I owe it to the Members, and I thank them, and I thank the gentleman from Illinois particularly, because by your action to-day my committee has been provided with means for going on with its work. But that does not belong to the rest of you. I feel that it is but fair to you that I should give you the results of my experience, even though it seem ungracious in me to say it, after having received so much at your hands to-day.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas after the House has increased the appropriation for the salary of the clerk of his committee to $3,000; I am surprised that he should then get up and say that the most of his information that he has been getting has been from this reference service and wanting to increase the appropriation $20,000.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not say anything of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman did not use those words, but he said that he had found that service valuable and that he had referred to this service, which has a card index, to find out what the law was, and spoke of how valuable this card index was, and yet by our action to-day the salary of the clerk to his committee has been increased $1,000 a year in order that he might telephone over and ask what that card index shows with reference to the laws existing on a given subject.

Mr. LITTLE. I said I had sent to them to find out if they were accurate and reliable, and I said I had found they were invaluable to the average Member. The committee of which I have the honor to be chairman has such a tremendous aggregate of work that that outfit over there can not help us very much.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate the tremendousness of the work involved in the gentleman's committee, and I shall accept the invitation that he has been kind enough to extend to me to call at his office and see some of the work, because I appreciate the importance of getting the statutes of the United States into some correlated form, and I understand that is what he is attempting to do. But I submit that if that is the task on which he is engaged, and we have increased the salary of the secretary to his committee $1,000 a year, it hardly becomes him to criticize Members of longer experience and a service of many more years here because they have examined the work of this service and have found, as will every other gentleman who examines this digest carefully, that it is something you can not rely on, and I submit that they ought not to be permitted to spend the money that is now available in the procurement of inaccurate information.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think the gentleman from Kansas fully understands that he is being disciplined by an older Member of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Let me say that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not attempting to discipline the gentleman from Kansas, because the gentleman is fully aware of the fact that there are other Members here under other party labels, and if the party leaders would undertake the task they might well discipline those individuals, because they come here under one party label and invariably vote and act at the demand or at the request of other party leaders. I am simply making a suggestion to the gentleman from Kansas, and he is taking it in very kindly spirit and has not sent out any distress cry to the great State of Illinois for reinforcement or assistance or help to come to his defense and defend him, because the gentleman from Kansas knows that I appreciate the fact that he has demonstrated that he is perfectly able to take care of himself. [Laughter.]

That is not apparent, I would say, as to some other gentlemen whom I will not name, because I find that sometimes when problems in which they are interested are attacked upon the floor and they seek to defend or to criticize the action of the committee they immediately call upon others to rush to their defense. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois if he is asking me to yield.

Mr. KING. I suppose the gentleman from Massachusetts is paying me the compliment of noticing me.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, not at all. I assure the gentleman that he is not beneath the notice of any gentleman here upon the floor, because he is very successful in getting the notice of Members here.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. WALSH. I answered the gentleman's observation. I did not know that the gentleman had not concluded.

Mr. KING. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he was referring to the gentleman from Illinois in his remarks a few minutes ago? If not, there being a number of others who were in the same boat on the railroad bill, I do not wish to raise any controversy with him.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I was not particularizing.

Mr. KING. I saw the gentleman with his little old lash out in various parts of the Hall of the House during the vote on the railroad bill.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is mistaken. I did not ask a single individual to vote on that bill. The gentleman is stating that which is not so.

Mr. KING. He applied the lash to me.

Mr. WALSH. No; I did not try to. I had better sense than that.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the last word has been stricken out and that debate on that motion is closed.

Mr. WINGO. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman can move to reinstate the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I presume those of us who sit on this side of the aisle are supposed to maintain an attitude of neutrality in this controversy that is going on among our friends on the other side, and even if necessary a position of armed neutrality, because the latter part of the controversy possibly indicated that armed neutrality would be more effective than merely passive neutrality or even watchful waiting.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the question.

Mr. WINGO. I will talk to the question, which is the legislative reference library. If the gentleman will contain his soul in patience—I appreciate the impatience of my good friend. I join with him in the desire to get along with this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not need to apologize to me.

Mr. WINGO. I am not apologizing to the gentleman. I am expressing deep appreciation of the gentleman, but I do not want this taken out of my time. My appreciation of the gentleman is not germane to the bill, but of course out of a spirit of good nature I must express it.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that this legislative reference bureau will be maintained. I think it comes with poor grace for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to castigate the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] simply because the gentleman from Kansas has received extra aid and does not need the legislative reference library. I submit that my genial friend from Massachusetts, the Hon. JOSEPHUS WALSH, from the sacred precincts of New Bedford, ought not to complain, because we gave to his committee authority to employ a maritime lawyer to assist him in making investigations upon land. [Laughter.] Now, I am not criticizing that appropriation, Mr. Chairman. I supported the authorization to give the gentleman from Massachusetts a maritime lawyer, and I can understand the anxiety of the gentleman from Illinois, both of them, because this castigation of Republican inefficiency is not confined to the floor of this House. I read in a leading Republican newspaper published in Illinois yesterday a castigation of the Republican Members because they were not showing any constructive ability. I hope this legislative reference library may be retained, so that they can get some information upon which they may frame some constructive legislation. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] has got his information, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has his, and I am not apologizing for voting for the maritime lawyer, because it occurred to me that not only my friend from Massachusetts but the Republican Party in this House certainly did need somebody who was an authority on maritime law, because the Republican majority in this House are exactly like a ship at sea without a rudder, and they certainly need a guide, one who has information on maritime law. [Laughter.] I hope my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will appreciate this legislative reference library as really of some practical benefit. It is true they may get out some things that are not practical, but, as the gentleman from New York suggested, sometimes we have a bill of a technical character, and we want to know what particular sections of the existing law are affected by it. Possibly it would save expensive legislative hearings if we could send over to the library and ask them to get us up a brief on the particular sections of the law that are affected by the bill which has been introduced. So, in all seriousness, I think the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Massachusetts, and a few of these chairmen of whom complaint is made that they have received some special clerical assistance, ought to be willing to let those of us who constitute the "buck privates" of the House have some organization to which we can look to get information that will aid us to perform our duties as Members of the House more expeditiously and more economically, even though we do not happen to rank with these great chairmen like the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the House for five minutes in support of the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, in this debate I am reminded of the debates we had at the very beginning of the establishment of this great library. In the Forty-ninth Congress, when Mr. Carlisle was Speaker and Mr. Reed, of Maine, was the leader on the Republican side of the House, we started out for the building of this great library, authorizing it and making an appropriation for the plans, and in the Fiftieth Congress an appropriation was made for the beginning of the construction of the library. The cheeseparing suggestions that were then made seem to have been echoed here to-day in this great desire for economy and to cut down the usefulness of what to my mind is the most useful thing in Washington, this great Congressional Library. In those days we had to go around this Capitol until we could find our old friend, Mr. Spofford, who was the librarian. He was an encyclopedia upon most subjects. But it looked more like a carpenter's shop or a blacksmith's shop, and when we went in those days to get information the conditions were so crude and so different from what we have now that I feel that whenever the question of the support of this library comes up that we could not do too much for it. This great branch of the service is doing a great work. Of course, they may issue some things that are not particularly useful. I have heard it suggested that even some statesmen make speeches and print them which are not useful six months after they are issued and circulated, and some of us wish that we had not made them. [Laughter.]

I have never seen such good service as we have had in the past four years from this library, and I have grown proud of the fact that I was one of the fellows that were in at the birth of the library. I am in favor of the extra allowance proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts to strengthen and keep it going. Of course the expense grows. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana says that it grows. It does, and its usefulness has grown.

If you could look down into the old library when we used to have to go there to find things, and see Mr. Spofford, with his very few people, and then come into this great palace, one of the most wonderful in the world, and note its usefulness and utilities, step into the Senate reading room or into our reading room, and note the alacrity with which you are served.

A little while ago I remember asking for a newspaper published in 1873 or 1874, and in less than five minutes the bound volume was before me on the table. As a matter of fact, I believe that the increase of appropriation will add to the usefulness of this library, and I certainly hope that we will not begin the cheeseparing in the brain center of Uncle Sam.

I call it the brain center, because not only Congressmen have the benefit of this great work, but thousands of writers and publishers who come to Washington to look up data have it, and if there is anything in the world which we need in this country it is information and the truth. Thank God, even in the last two or three years there has not been, except at times, a period when they could stop people from going to the public library and getting the truth. Most every other channel of information has been blocked by the censor. [Laughter.] I regard this as the most valuable piece of help that not only the American Congress but the American people themselves who write and lecture have the benefit of. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts may be adopted in the Committee of the Whole. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, as a pro forma amendment, by striking out the figures "$45,000" and inserting "$44,000." Mr. Chairman, the amendment or proposition pending has nothing to do with the very brilliant statement made by my colleague the gentleman from Illinois. It has nothing to do with the support of the library. A few years ago the legislative reference bureau was inaugurated. During the war, and practically as a war measure, the appropriation was increased to $45,000 where it had been $25,000 before we engaged in the war.

Of course, during the war there were a great many questions which Members of Congress were not familiar with and upon which they desired to secure individual information and sometimes committee information. I think it was quite proper that that appropriation should have been enlarged at that time. It is perfectly patent, however, that this legislative reference bureau is not having much work thrust upon it, but that it is seeking for something to do in order to keep its men employed and to use up the appropriation.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I prefer to make the statement I had in mind.

Mr. LUCE. I want to read a brief sentence from the statement of the librarian.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not care what the librarian says; he does not know anything about it.

Mr. LUCE. This is a matter of statistics and not opinion. He says:

> Since the 1st of July demands on this division have increased 29 per cent or more than that, perhaps between 40 and 50 per cent.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That shows how little it was before. I can demonstrate in a few words that they have not much to do. They get out an abstract of bills in the House and the Senate. If they were busy on real work they would not have the time to do that. These abstracts are valueless; they are not dependable. I dare say that the gentleman from Massachusetts, who is one of the brilliant Members of this House, does not undertake to read all the published bills that are reported back to the House. I do, and have for years, examined them carefully, trying to know what is in them, and in order to test the value of the abstracts I have on a number of occasions gone through the abstracts and from memory could easily pick out important matters in the bills that were not mentioned in the abstract at all. I have compared the abstract of a bill and found that the abstract is absolutely useless to me. I could not depend on it for a moment.

The gentleman from Massachusetts says that is accounted for because they could not hire sufficient help. I think it is because they have not much to do and rush in to find something to keep them busy, and it is not their business. These people do not abstract a bill properly and do not understand the matters involved in it. They are not legislators. I am not in favor of abolishing the legislative reference bureau. I think it ought to be retained. I believe in the course of time it will become more and more valuable. I do not think it is very valuable now but I do believe that with the war over the necessity of large appropriations for this bureau do not now exist, and if we are going to have any economy under the Government at all we have got to do what my colleague from Illinois refers to as "cheeseparing."

We have got to pare down these appropriations where we can, all along the line, and if we can not economize in a matter of this sort, right under our control, and cut off an extravagance which is of no benefit, then we need somebody to tell us what to do. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. Gentlemen, your committee has not undertaken in any way to injure this service. This service first went into the bill through a Senate amendment and was pressed by Senator LA FOLLETTE. At that time they asked for $25,000, and they were given the $25,000. That was in 1915. In 1916 they got $25,000; in 1917, $25,000; and in 1918 they got $25,000, all that they asked. That was the appropriation for the legislative bureau up until the outbreak of the war. As I understand it, it is the aim and purpose and intention of all of the Members of Congress to try, if possible, to get this Government as near as we can back to its original expenditures before the war. The Republican leaders have asked your committees to cut these bills down, to cut the expenses of the Government down to what they were when we got into the war. As I said in general debate, I have taken the subcommittee by the hand, and I am willing to take you Republicans in the House by the hand, and I am willing to help you reduce these expenses, and I believe the Democratic side of the House will join you in it. If there is one place where you will do absolutely no injury to anyone, where you will give them back the force and the entire force they had before the war and which they kept for four years after the creation of this service, it is in this appropriation. If you pass the item as it is reported, you will be giving them all that they asked for four years before the war. We thought the proper thing to do was not to cut this out entirely, to do no injury to it, but to leave the matter just where it was before the war.

If you mean what you say, if your leaders mean what they say, then why not use the snickersnee? Are you going to say to this committee, "Go ahead and reduce and pare to the bone," and then as soon as the committee gets to the House, after it brings back a bill that does that, are you going, you Republican Members, to immediately get up and endeavor to load the bill down? With one exception I have heard no Democrat urge any increase in appropriations. We are willing to help you, and I hope the Democratic side will help you. We have gotten through only some twenty-odd pages of the bill, and yet I find that you are wanting to add something like 100 per cent to this item. It is not the amount that you add to one item that counts up in the appropriations, but when you go through all of the thousands of items and do the same thing it rapidly mounts up to millions. We have patiently gone through this bill and have worked from morning until night endeavoring to find places where you can pare down; and yet when we get into the House we find a criticism, and this at a time of all times when, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests, we owe it to the people to do away with every single penny of burden resting upon them that we can until at least we can take care of the $3,000,000,000 of deficit that faces us. We must do something to cut down these expenses. Your committee has done its duty. We do not believe that it will do any injury to this service, and we ask that, in this matter at least, we be given the support of the House.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last 10 words.

The CHAIRMAN. All time upon this has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I move to strike out the last 10 words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion is not in order. It is an amendment in the third degree. All time has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Then I move to amend by striking out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion is not in order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has offered an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Hence the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas would be an amendment in the third degree and would not be in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUCE) there were—ayes 10, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last half of the section in order to reply to a suggestion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, who seems to hint that because the House has decided that the committee of which I happen to be chairman ought to have a clerk at a higher salary than was fixed by the committee that I should not express myself on this subject.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. I will just say this—and I will be done in a second if the gentleman does not interrupt me, and it will take me a good deal longer if he does—that if the House had put me under an obligation which makes it impossible for me to express myself freely like everyone else on this floor, upon anything that comes up, I wish the House would take it back. I do not want any favors from this House which make it impossible for me to speak freely and independently upon this or any subject. I resent that suggestion. I reserve the right to myself to debate any subject that comes up from any standpoint that seems to be best for my constituents.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] does not recall what he said. The gentleman from Kansas—very likely inadvertently, because it was a statement in reply to me by the gentleman from Massachusetts—said that it was only a Member who had been here 20 years and who had gotten to be the chairman of a big committee who could get anything in the way of clerk hire out of the House.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, no——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, do not say that you did not say that. I have not quoted the language of the gentleman, but I have given the substance.

Mr. LITTLE. No; the gentleman has not; nor the spirit.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not yield, though I will in a moment.

Then I asked the gentleman from Kansas whether he thought he ought to make that statement, in view of the fact that not having been here 20 years, not being a chairman of an important committee, he had just gotten the House to give him a clerk at a salary of $3,000 a year, a sum which the clerk of no other committee, with two exceptions, receives. I thought the statement of the gentleman was unwarranted and unintended. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLE. If I said anything of the kind, it was not intended, and if the gentleman will examine the RECORD——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman does not change it when he gets the notes it will appear.

Mr. LITTLE. Possibly I may be mistaken, but what I undertook to say, and what I meant to say, and what I think I did say, and I am quite sure I said it, was that it was only the people who had been here a long time and become chairmen of a half dozen of the great committees who could get the services of the bureau of legislative reference, and that is exactly true, because I have made an effort to get something done for this committee and have been unable to get any assistance. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not infallible, maybe the gentleman said that; but I understood him to state it the other way. That is what we all go on, what we think a man said.

Mr. MADDEN. Both having apologized to each other, it is all right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Temporary services: For special and temporary service, including extra special services of regular employees at the discretion of the librarian, $2,500.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I do it merely to call the attention of the committee to an item which has already been passed over and which unfortunately I could not speak about because of my absence in attendance upon the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is in reference to the paragraph beginning page 20, line 4, for library assistance, "one of whom shall be in charge of the blind room," and I merely want to make this statement in regard to the splendid service rendered by the lady in charge of that room in the library. It has been my happy opportunity to come in contact with the work being done for the blind of this country, especially for the boys who were blinded in the recent war. As probably we all know, there is a great Red Cross institute for the blind at Roland Park, Baltimore, the buildings and grounds being loaned by Mr. Garrett, of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. At the present time there are about 104 men there being instructed in vocational training and in the Braille system of blind reading and all that goes to make a man self-supporting and self-respecting, despite the fact of the loss of his sight. The assistant in charge of this blind reading room in our library was appointed some years ago, and she is receiving a salary of $1,200. That salary at the time of her appointment may have been adequate, but since her appointment there has been placed upon her additional work not only in reference to our blind soldiers but because of the general interest to take better care of those poor unfortunates. The American Library Association, the Red Cross institute at Baltimore, and the other associations who know of her splendid service speak in the highest terms of her work, work which has vastly increased since she was appointed, and yet her salary remains the same. It does seem to me that there should be some recognition of her splendid work, especially in view of the fact that a very large part of it is devoted to the blind soldiers and sailors of our war. I merely wanted to make this statement in compliment to her efficiency, and because I thought it due the faithfulness of one who is giving the best years of her life for the benefit of those who are deprived of the blessing of sight.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of Library of Congress: For purchase of books for the library, including payment in advance for subscription books, and society publications, and for freight, commissions, and traveling expenses, and all other expenses incidental to the acquisition of books by purchase, gift, bequest, or exchange, to continue available during the fiscal year 1922, $80,000, together with the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated for this object for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 20, by striking out the figures "$80,000" and substituting the figures "$90,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Page 23, line 20, strike out "$80,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$90,000."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, if I am too persistent in championing the cause of the Congressional Library, it is not alone because of the duty that devolves upon me as a member of the Committee on the Library——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. I will.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think if the gentleman will submit to a statement he will not pursue this. In this item they have $66,000 of surplus—$30,000 of a free balance and the remainder obligated.

Mr. LUCE. I do not think I understand the gentleman's statement.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I say that there is $66,000 of a surplus of unexpended money out of this appropriation of last year. Thirty thousand dollars of it is a free balance, absolutely unobligated, and all the remainder obligated. So that they have more money now than they can spend.

Mr. LUCE. Will the chairman of the subcommittee inform me why they asked for $100,000? I find nothing in the hearings throwing light on the subject.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Because of the habit they have of asking more this year than they had last year. That is one of the unfortunate things we have in every one of these departments.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, in spite of what the gentleman says, I feel justified in continuing my argument in the matter, by reason of this fact, if no other, that probably at no time in our day will an excess of funds available for the purchase of books be more useful than in the circumstances following the Great War. It is well known to all those who take an interest in these things that one result of the war is the breaking up of numerous libraries abroad and the throwing on the market of rare collections and most desirable volumes which have not hitherto been available. My knowledge of and acquaintance with the management of the library makes me think that the chairman of the subcommittee may have been a trifle unfair to the librarian in intimating that his request was not warranted by the situation. It still seems to me that he was justified in expecting at least the same appropriation that he has had for the last nine years. The committee saw fit to reject my previous suggestion on two grounds—first, that the money was not being wisely expended by the reference bureau, and, second, that the appropriation should be returned to the figure where it stood before the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LUCE. Neither of these considerations here prevails. This is a figure that existed long before the war. Secondly, there is no criticism of the wisdom of the librarian in the purchase of books. Therefore I submit that a return to the figure of $90,000, which has been applied now for nine years, will not be unreasonable nor involve an excessive expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Civil Service Commission, including furniture and other equipment and repairs thereto; supplies; telegraph and telephone service; freight and express charges; heat and light; street car fares not to exceed $100; stationery; law books, books of reference, and periodicals, not to exceed $350; maintenance and repair of a motor truck; in all, $50,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

According to my marking of the bill, this is an entirely new matter. Am I correct in that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. TILSON. Where was it carried last year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It was carried under the Civil Service Commission, and for the purpose of convenience and so that we might know where to find all this legislation we consolidated it under this item.

Mr. TILSON. Has there been any increase in this contingent and miscellaneous expense for the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There has been a reduction of $250.

Mr. TILSON. While I am on my feet I will say that I notice in the next paragraph a provision for the rent of a building for the Civil Service Commission. Are they not occupying a Government building at the present time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. It is under a long-term lease. It is not a Government building.

Mr. TILSON. I withdraw the reservation, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Secretary of State, $12,000; Undersecretary of State, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; Second and Third Assistant Secretaries, at $4,500 each; director of the Consular Service, $4,500; officers to aid in important drafting work—8 at $4,500 each, 5 at $4,000 each, 15 at $3,500 each, $15 at $3,000 each, 17 at $2,500 each, to be appointed by the Secretary, any one of whom may be employed as chief of division of far eastern, Latin American, near eastern, or European affairs, or upon other work in connection with the foreign relations; assistant solicitors of the department, to be appointed by the Secretary—5 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,500 each; chief clerk, who shall sign such official papers and documents as the Secretary may direct, $3,000; law clerks—1 $2,500, 2 at $2,250 each, 3 at $2,000 each; law clerk and assistant, to be selected by the Secretary to edit the laws of Congress and perform such other duties as may be required of them, at $2,500 and $1,500, respectively; chiefs of bureaus—2 at $2,250 each, 5 at $2,100 each; 2 translators, at $2,100 each; additional to Chief of Bureau of Accounts as disbursing clerk, $200; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; private secretary to the Undersecretary, $2,000; clerk to the Secretary, $1,800; clerks—27 of class 4, 30 of class 3, 40 of class 2, 63 of class 1 (3 of whom shall be telegraph operators), 40 at $1,000 each, 10 at $900 each; lithographer, $1,400; chief messenger, $1,000; 8 messengers; 27 assistant messengers; 4 messenger boys at $420 each; packer, $720; 7 laborers; 4 telephone switchboard operators; chauffeur, $1,080; 10 charwomen; in all, $618,840.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY: Page 30, lines 23 and 24, strike out "Undersecretary of State" and insert in lieu thereof "Counselor."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order is too late. I have been recognized to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. The point of order is that it is a change of existing law.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the gentleman that the whole item is subject to a point of order. I have had Mr. Sabine look it up.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the law was passed last year.

Mr. CONNALLY. I had that impression, and the clerk to the clerk to the committee says there is no existing law on it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It was carried in the last appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, there is no existing law on it. It is simply an item in an appropriation bill. There is no existing law at all. It is simply carried on the appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the gentleman's amendment is new law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not catch quite clearly what the gentleman's point was. Is there existing law on the subject?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know whether there is or not, but the gentleman who offers the amendment admits that it is new law and subject to a point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I think this matter was carried in the last appropriation bill simply as an item in the appropriation bill for the purpose of relieving the Secretary of State of the burden that he has upon him. I think the word "Undersecretary" and the whole business is subject to a point of order. The language here, "Undersecretary of State," is new language, and there is no law for it. We created, as I recollect, that office in the Department of State by this appropriation.

Mr. MASON. Was it on the recommendation of the prime minister of Great Britain that we established this office?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] will permit an interruption, I will state that this was placed in the appropriation bill at the last session by an agreement inserted by the Senate, adopted in the conference, and agreed to by the conferees of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the history of this transaction is that they tried to create this office when President Taft was coming in as President, and I took a great deal of pleasure in killing the thing as dead as a smelt, and the only way it comes in now, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] says is on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair in making his first ruling understood the gentleman to admit that there was law authorizing it.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I say there was no law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair did not understand it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, does the Chair hold that there is a law authorizing the appointment of a Counselor?

Mr. MADDEN. I made the point that it was new.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is existing law creating a Counselor. By some act or some bill at the last session of Congress, enacted at the suggestion of the State Department, they took and changed the name and title from "Counselor" to "Undersecretary." There is existing permanent law for the Counselor, but instead of it being called "Counselor," in accordance with the title when the place was created, it is now called "Undersecretary."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is a law creating the Counselor but not the Undersecretary, and therefore the Chair thinks the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is in order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman will yield, I wish to make this suggestion, that I am informed by the State Department, for the information of the committee, that by reason of the immense amount of correspondence that has been had during the attempt at a peace treaty over on the other side, and this Secretary being the gentleman actively engaged in that business, he is generally known throughout the country and throughout the world as the Undersecretary. While it would make no difference so far as the appropriation is concerned, it might result in a great deal of confusion so far as this administration is concerned, and we want to save this administration from all the confusion possible.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like the gentleman to conclude as soon as he can, because I have only a short time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. All right. I am through.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, there is no such office as Undersecretary of State provided by statute. This item has heretofore been carried in appropriation bills in this House as "counselor" up until last year, I believe, when, at the suggestion of the State Department, it was changed to "Undersecretary of State." I will say in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that the duties performed by the counselor under the old law were identical with the duties now performed by the Undersecretary of State. They do not vary at all, and the only reason on earth for changing the designation of this official from "counselor" to "Undersecretary of State" is because it is more like the European nomenclature. Similar officials are called undersecretaries of state in Great Britain, in France, and in other European countries. The change from counselor was made simply in an effort to ape foreign methods and to bring our system of transacting diplomatic affairs more into the fashion of European countries.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think the changing of this name to Undersecretary of State might result in promoting convenience, by using a term that is well understood?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that that character of argument, if extended, would apply to other branches of the Government. I for one believe that we ought to maintain our own individuality, and that we do not need to ape any foreign government with reference to this or any other matter.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will suggest that those countries began their experiments in government a long while before we did, and we even took for the base unit of our money the name "dollar."

Mr. CONNALLY. If we had continued to imitate them we would still be under the domination of Great Britain.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Our dollar is worth more than theirs, but it is still a dollar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. By what authority did the Secretary of State or anybody else change this title from Counselor to Undersecretary of State?

Mr. CONNALLY. Because an item was carried in the last appropriation bill changing it to Undersecretary of State.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They just adopted it in that appropriation bill, did they not?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is all, and I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the change in this designation is not going to affect our facility for transacting business or the polite practices of diplomacy in any way whatever. If they could do business with the counselor under the old régime they can do business with the counselor now.

I want to take advantage of this opportunity to say that last spring when I visited Europe, as an American I was simply disgusted with some things which our attachés and employees around our embassies, legations, and consulates in Europe were doing. They tried to act like Europeans. They tried to dress like Europeans. They walked like Europeans, and carried their canes like Europeans, and be it said not to the credit of some of our Army officers, they disregarded the regulations prescribed by our own Army for the cut of their clothes and wore uniforms that in some particulars imitated the British cut and British style, and even the commander in chief, Gen. Pershing, according to my information, was not guiltless of that practice.

Mr. MADDEN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that Gen. Pershing wore English clothes?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is my information; that the cut of his coat was English.

Mr. MADDEN. I happened to be with Gen. Pershing on more than one occasion when I was over there, and I want to deny that statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that there is not a great deal of difference between the English cut army uniform and the American, but if the gentleman will go and look at Gen. Pershing's uniform he will see that it does not comport with the style prescribed by Army regulations. It is split up the back, and it has the pockets and swagger of the English cut.

Mr. MADDEN. I refer to the collar.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, he had an American collar and the American insignia.

Mr. WINGO. I wish to say that Gen. Pershing kept his head and collar American, but his breeches and coat tails were very English.

Mr. CONNALLY. They were.

Mr. WINGO. I noticed that when he appeared here on the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. But he led the American Army to victory.

Mr. WINGO. I said he kept his head American, but his tail was English cut. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. The only excuse urged by the State Department and gentlemen who want to change the designation of the office to undersecretary was that it was the same term employed and comported with the same office in European practice. That is all the argument they use. I for one do not believe that is a tenable argument. I can not see why we can not hold on to the same designation of Counselor to the State Department and permit him to perform the same duties he is performing to-day. I want to say that the present occupant of the office, Mr. Polk, is a very able and a highly qualified man for the duties he is performing. My motion to strike out this language is in nowise aimed at him individually, but at the tendency which, it seems to me, has been going on even before the war, and with exaggerated momentum since the war, to take things foreign and European as models.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is there not some justification if we are to enter the League of Nations and become coworkers; it might be well to have a uniformity.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say that there are some gentlemen on the floor that are so obsessed with the nightmare of the League of Nations that behind every bush and every obstruction they see bugbears and bugaboos. The gentleman from Connecticut in his expression a moment ago has given to me the first intimation that he is in favor of a League of Nations, and I am glad to note that he has at last come out into the open on this question and announced his allegiance to the League of Nations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman admit that the League of Nations is a nightmare?

Mr. GARNER. It is to the Republicans.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say that it is to the gentleman from Illinois and others who are very anxious to keep it out of the coming campaign.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me say that I would like to have it go into the campaign as far as I am concerned; I would not want any better issue. The people have no use for internationalism.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not for internationalism either. If the gentleman is sincere, he will vote for my amendment. The trouble with the gentleman from Illinois and others is that they only have spasms when a political campaign is on, and seek to interject a foreign question into the discussion. The suggestion of the gentleman from Connecticut was in no wise pertinent and was not germane to the question under discussion. It was only made simply as a matter of merriment and levity. I am not talking jokingly; I am talking about an important office of the Government. I am talking to Members of Congress who are supposed to transact business seriously, and I for one believe our discussion of legislative problems would be better off if we kept out of the disputes and side issues with which the House of Representatives as a House has no function whatever to perform.

Mr. MADDEN. We have a function to perform if the League of Nations becomes a fact. We would be called upon to enact the financial legislation to carry it into execution.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not going to be diverted from my argument to a discussion of the League of Nations.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Texas was making that argument himself.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from Illinois occupies a good part of the time of the House either for the merriment of the House or for its wisdom, but I am serious about this matter. I am glad to know that the ex-Speaker of this House some years ago prevented the engrafting on the State Department of this new office of Undersecretary of State.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. After all, in the language of the poet, "What's in a name?" A Secretary of State by any other name would have a row with the administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. I would say to the gentleman from Vermont that there is never so much glee in the Republican Party as when it can seize upon some dissension in the Democratic ranks, because it knows that it is only then that the Republican Party, standing, as it does, for the policies and practices of which it is guilty—it is only in such a time that his party has any chance of success before the American people. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNALLY) there were 20 ayes and 39 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

San Francisco (Calif.) Passport Bureau: For salaries and expenses of maintenance of the passport bureau, $7,500.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 22, after the figures "$7,500," insert: "Chicago (Ill.) Passport Bureau: For salaries and expenses of maintenance of the passport bureau, $10,000."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no authorization for this. It is new legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I will not.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for storage and garage, $1,500.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman from——
Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.
The motion was agreed to.
Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

BUSINESS IN ORDER ON CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the proceedings in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman taken this matter up with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, which has the call to-morrow?
Mr. MONDELL. I have not taken the matter up with him to-day, but I talked to him about it several days ago. I feel quite confident that he has no special objection. Of course, he would like to go on, if business were such that we could go on quite as well, but under the circumstances I am sure he has no objection.
Mr. GARD. I have no objection if the gentleman is satisfied.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 25, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting reports of useless papers in the files of the navy yards and naval stations which have been destroyed; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

2. A letter from the president of the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting request for authority for destruction of useless documents; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting request for authority for the disposition of certain documents and files of papers; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of War, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the War Department for relocation of military roads between Aqueduct Bridge and Fort Myer, Va., fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 661); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Department of Commerce, fiscal years 1920 and 1921 (H. Doc. No. 662); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Ordnance Department of the Army for Frankford and Picatiny Arsenals (H. Doc. No. 663); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. VESTAL, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 299) extending the life of the National Screw Thread Commission for a period of two years from March 21, 1920, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 671), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HERNANDEZ, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5163) authorizing the Klamath Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 672), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11970) granting a pension to Philip Stokes; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12120) granting a pension to Mary Plum; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BAER: A bill (H. R. 12722) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause a preliminary survey to be made of the Red River of the North and tributaries; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 12723) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to at once construct the Public Health Service hospital at Broadview, Cook County, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HUSTED: A bill (H. R. 12724) to declare Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McKEOWN: A bill (H. R. 12725) providing for the issuing of certificates of indebtedness to honorably discharged persons who have served in the military or naval forces in the war between the United States and Germany and her allies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEGG: A bill (H. R. 12726) granting an increase of pension to James G. Buckingham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COPLEY: A bill (H. R. 12727) granting an increase of pension to A. Judson Graves; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 12728) for the relief of R. W. Lindsey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARRELD: A bill (H. R. 12729) for the relief of Seth A. Welch; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 12730) granting a pension to Etta Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 25, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our highest vision of Thee has come to us in the relation that Thou dost sustain to us as our Father in Heaven. As Thou hast made our cause Thy cause, Thou hast made our life Thy life, and Thou dost glorify human life by the adoption of Thy creatures into sonship and by giving Thy service through them to humanity. We pray Thee to bless us to-day as we address ourselves again to the tasks that are before us, and lead us by Thy spirit to all truth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. WATSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

RAILROAD CONTROL—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I was unavoidably absent from the city on Monday, the 23d, and therefore was not in my seat when the conference report upon the railroad bill was adopted. I had no idea that the subject would be disposed of so expeditiously, and it may be that perhaps my absence from the Senate might be a good thing occasionally if that result followed. However that may be, I deem it my duty to announce that if I had been present I would have voted "yea" upon the adoption of the conference committee report, not because it is satisfactory, for it is not, but because I am convinced that the conference bill was the very best that the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce was able to secure; and that being the case, the popular demand for the return of the roads and not the recitals of the bill itself would have prompted my affirmative vote on that occasion.

AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

Mr. HENDERSON. In order to complete the RECORD of yesterday I ask to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, the resolution and the letter transmitting the same, which are referred to in subdivision (4) of Mr. Hoover's letter to me dated February 23. This letter was inserted in the RECORD on February 24 and appears on page 3383.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter and resolution are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, March 10, 1919.

Hon. HERBERT C. HOOVER,
Hotel Crillon, Paris, France.

MY DEAR MR. HOOVER: The purposes for which the national agricultural advisory committee was called into existence having been fully accomplished, I am to-day, by the consent of Secretary Houston and of the present representatives of the Food Administration in Washington, vacating my offices in the Department of Agriculture and notifying the members of the committee that there will be no further call upon us as such from either of the departments mentioned. It is unnecessary, if indeed it is not impossible, for me to add anything by way of appreciation of your administration to what has already been conveyed to you through the medium of a resolution unanimously passed by the live-stock subcommittee and given to Judge Glasgow and Mr. Snyder with the request that a copy be conveyed to you, and that such use of the resolution would be made in this country as to these gentlemen might seem proper. I wish, however, for myself and in behalf of the entire committee, to renew and emphasize our indorsement, individually and collectively, of your administration and of your splendid achievements as a most important factor in winning the war and now a factor of world-wide importance in the adjustment of the most acute of all the postwar problems. I feel that I represent the sentiment of the committee when I say that we feel ourselves greatly honored in having been coworkers with you in the great crisis through which we have passed; and now that our connection with your work has ceased, we unite in an abiding interest and confidence in your continuing success in even a larger, if not more important, field of endeavor. In a personal sense, if I may be permitted to refer to this side of our associations, I beg that you will accept my own assurances of high regard and esteem and my most sincere good wishes for your happiness in the days that are to come.

Very sincerely, yours,

H. C. STUART,
Chairman National Agricultural Advisory Committee.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 28, 1919.

"Whereas there has come to the attention of the live-stock committee of the national agricultural advisory committee, through press reports and public statements, certain criticisms of the United States Food Administration; and

"Whereas these outgivings have made it clear to us that there is, in some quarters, a lamentable lack of knowledge respecting basic facts connected with the stimulation of production, encouragement of conservation, and control of distribution of foods; and

"Whereas such complaints as have come to our attention have shown no evidence of having taken into consideration the unescapable obligation entered into by the Food Administration to secure increased food supplies for the necessary protection of our own population as well as that of our allies, including both civil and military needs, nor a due appreciation of the difficulties attending the merchandising transition from a war to a peace basis; and

"Whereas the space limitations of these resolutions give no adequate opportunity to direct attention to the broad foundations laid by Mr. Herbert Hoover, the United States Food Administrator, for the purpose of insuring essential food supplies for war needs, but feeling that we can not do otherwise than record our judgment of the purpose, the spirit, and the accomplishments of his administration: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the said live-stock committee, now in session in Washington, That we here record our high sense of appreciation of the extraordinary ability and uniform fairness with which Herbert Hoover has met and discharged the weighty responsibilities which have devolved upon him in stimulating home production, without which we would now be facing a world shortage of food and consequent higher cost of living; in eliminating speculative control of wheat and other essential products, which has ever been harmful alike to producer and consumer; in conserving food and foodstuffs; and in supplying the wants of the millions who were and still are dependent upon American resources for the necessaries of life.

"The committee has not agreed at all times with the policies of Mr. Hoover in dealing with national agricultural interests and questions, but it and all of its members have accepted uncomplainingly his decisions after a full and fair hearing of each case upon its merits. We have seen restrictions placed on consumption through the inauguration of wheatless and meatless days, by the requirement of the use of substitutes, and by other policies which narrowed the markets for agricultural products. This has occurred at times when prices seemed already unduly limited, considering the war costs of production.

"We are, however, convinced that every act of the Food Administrator has been conceived and executed in a desire to deal fairly with the American people, both producers and consumers, equitably yet firmly with the various agencies of distribution, and generously with our struggling allies.

"We are of opinion that no agency or department of the Government has done a greater work, and that no man of the many chosen for important national and international service has earned a higher place in public esteem and admiration than has the man who played so notable a part in guiding and bringing together the producers and consumers of the country, and who, by his rightful possession of the confidence of all classes at home and abroad, brought a united citizenship into voluntary contribution of sacrifice and service."

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. MCNARY. I have in my possession a very excellent statement from a constituent of mine in the State of Oregon on the subject of the League of Nations. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEDFORD, OREG., October 25, 1919.

To the EDITOR OF THE MEDFORD MAIL-TRIBUNE:

With your general position in favor of the League of Nations I agree. However, I have felt many times that you have not appreciated the importance of reservations to the treaty and covenant. From the beginning I have favored the ratification of the covenant with certain reservations. Personally I am for the League of Nations, for I feel that we ought to do everything possible to bring about a condition of world peace and the perpetuation of that peace and to minimize as far as possible the chances of having great world wars. How much this covenant will help to do away with world wars I do not know, but I firmly believe that it is a long step in the right direction and toward the attainment of peace. One thing is sure, and that is that this covenant is the only covenant we have to consider, and at present we have either to take it or leave it alone; and I for one do not care to assume the responsibility of rejecting it.

President Wilson has done many great things. He has contributed much to the covenant of the League of Nations.

I wish that the President had appointed on the peace commission men like Root, Taft, Lodge, and Hughes, as well as such men as Lansing and House, and then given them a free hand to shape this treaty and covenant. By so doing I believe that we would have obtained a far more satisfactory treaty. Neither do I think it was the right thing to do to so draw the treaty and covenant as to leave the United States in a position where in a sense they have to take the bad with the good or else reject the whole thing. To reject the whole thing would be the greater of two evils, in my opinion. Treaties should be made "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate"; and whereas the President initiates treaties, still a reasonable amount of consulting with the Senate should be done. The lack of this has prevented us from getting as good a treaty as we might have obtained. Nevertheless, in spite of all this, I believe the treaty ought to be ratified. It does not have to be ratified just as it is, but it can and ought to be ratified with reservations.

The treaty has already been adopted by three of the great allied powers, which is all that is necessary in order to put it into force. We can stay out if we want to and weaken the whole thing, but I do not think that is advisable. Personally I favor reservations safeguarding such matters as the Monroe doctrine, domestic questions, the United States as the sole judge of its right to withdraw from the league, and any other reservations necessary to safeguard American rights.

On the Shantung question—which I think is indefensible and could have been avoided—I believe a reservation would meet the difficulty, as far as it can be met. The treaty with this in it has already been ratified by Great Britain, France, and Italy, and will be put in force, so that an amendment would not help the situation any better than a reservation. So we might as well handle it by a reservation and avoid the difficulties of an amendment.

As to Senator JOHNSON's amendment on the six-to-one proposition, I believe that ex-President Taft's reservation on this will meet the difficulty. His reservation is to the effect that where disputes arise the vote of each nation shall be the same as the vote of the United States. In the supreme council no one can become a member without the unanimous vote of all. Therefore Canada or Australia must get our vote before either of them can become a member of the council. In matters coming before the assembly the Taft reservation would apply and the United States would be protected.

If this League of Nations does not work out all right, we still have the right to withdraw on giving two years' notice. This, with the fact also that it requires a unanimous vote in the supreme council to adopt a matter, seems to me to protect us fully.

I favor reservations rather than amendments, because amendments require specific action on the part of the other allied nations, which would tend to reopen the whole treaty and tear things all to pieces, whereas reservations would be considered as accepted after a reasonable lapse of time where there were no objections filed by the allied nations.

I think we ought to have reservations in order to make clear the meaning of the treaty and covenant as well as to make clear and definite our obligations and our position. We need reservations to protect our country. We need them in the interest of true Americanism. With reservations I can see no danger to the United States in going into this League of Nations; in fact, I can see much good. We owe it to the world and to humanity to throw our great influence and power in behalf of world peace and the peaceful settlement of world problems.

We have a national vision of high ideals and achievements. We also have a world-wide vision. We believe in joining with the other nations of the world in the betterment of the humanity of the world and in behalf of the world peace. We believe that the highest and most permanent internationalism can best be advanced and preserved by holding aloft the banner of true Americanism. We must preserve our Nation's ideals in order to save the world. So I advocate the covenant of the League of Nations with reservations.

Respectfully, yours,

FRED W. MEARS.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Wayside, Winfield, Lyndon, Harper, Emporia, Holton, Burden, Parsons, and of Leavenworth County, Jefferson County, and Mitchell County, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented memorials of Local Union No. 548, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, of Ludington; of Local Lodge No. 7, Metal Polishers' International Union, of Grand Rapids; of Local Lodge No. 197, International Longshoremen's Association, of Cedar River; of the Central Trades Council of Bay City; and of Typographica Union No. 21, International Typographical Union, of Detroit, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Sterling-Graham sedition bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of Lawton, Mich., remonstrating against the sale of German ships to Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Ann Arbor, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation for the retirement of superannuated Government employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Post No. 384, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Post No. 7, American Legion, of Berkeley, Calif., praying for the passage of the so-called Thomas bill increasing the compensation of certain disabled soldiers, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Post No. 7, American Legion, of Berkeley, Calif., praying for compulsory military training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Selectmen of Nantucket, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for an increase of pay to men in the Coast Guard Service, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of the Washington State Poultry Breeders' Association, praying that a duty be placed on eggs, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Emmett Club, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called Mason resolution providing for the appointment of a minister and consuls to the Irish Republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry Lithuanians, residents of New Britain, Conn., praying for the recognition of Lithuania as a free and independent State, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Federation of Women's Clubs, of Derby, Conn., and a petition of the Equal Franchise League, of Middletown, Conn., praying that an appropriation be made for the continuance of the work of the Interdepartmental Board of Social Hygiene, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Baptist Church of South Norwalk, Conn., praying for the ratification of the treaty of peace, with or without reservations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3725) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions (Rept. No. 448); and

A bill (H. R. 3211) for the relief of Emma J. Spear (Rept. No. 449).

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3530) for the relief of Sarah Shelton, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 447) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1257) to amend an act approved June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 451) thereon.

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1391) to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Calif., and to change the name of said park to Roosevelt National Park, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 452) thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 132) for the relief of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co.; the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co.; and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 450) thereon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10207) providing for service of process in causes removed from a State or other court to a United States court, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 453) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3965) to authorize advances to the reclamation fund and for the issue and disposal of certificates of indebtedness in reimbursement therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 3966) for the relief of the estate of Jay A. Hubbell; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WOLCOTT:

A bill (S. 3967) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Faries; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 3968) authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the foreign-built steamers Hawk and Port Saunders to be documented as vessels of the United States for certain purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3969) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to waive the age limit for admission to the United States Naval Academy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WOLCOTT submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN WOOD PULP.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Rules the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick relative to the claims of American interests now holding leases of Crown lands prior to the passage of restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces.

It is the purpose of the joint resolution to appoint a commission to take up the question of removing the embargo on Canadian wood pulp and wood and authorizing the President to appoint a commission of five to act in the matter and advise with the Canadian Government in reference to the removal of the embargo on wood pulp. This matter is of very great importance to the newsprint paper industry in the United States. The joint resolution is amended by the committee by broadening its scope so as to include not only newsprint paper but book paper.

I should like to have the amended joint resolution read, and then, if there is no objection, I should like to have the joint resolution considered this morning.

I ask that the joint resolution as proposed to be amended may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The READING CLERK. The committee propose to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution and to insert:

Whereas newsprint and other printing papers are commodities of universal use and are indispensable to the educational process of modern civilization, and the paramount importance of a sufficient production of such newsprint and other paper to supply the needs of the people of the United States is a self-evident proposition; and

Whereas practically the whole content of newsprint and other printing paper is composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp wood, the supply of which in the eastern part of the United States is being rapidly exhausted by the growing demand, and the price of which is being advanced to unprecedented levels; and

Whereas the existing scarcity of pulp wood and its threatened total exhaustion in the United States has become a matter of such grave concern to the paper industry, the users and manufacturers of forest products, the Federal Government, and the general public that the Forest Service, the lumber and pulp and paper associations, and the forestry authorities of the country are now formulating a broad and comprehensive national forest conservation and reforestation plan for early adoption; and

Whereas the lieutenant governors of certain of the Provinces of Canada in council did issue orders prohibiting the exportation of pulp wood cut from Crown lands, the chief source of supply of pulp wood, unless manufactured into lumber, pulp, or paper, thereby tending to create a monopoly beyond our borders in the manufacture of paper to the great detriment of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to appoint a commission of five persons, and by appropriate authority to confer on this commission the power, on behalf of the administration and the Congress, to negotiate with said Dominion Government or with said provincial governments in respect to the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council and as well any other restrictions on the exportation of pulp wood and newsprint from the Dominion of Canada to the United States.

SEC. 2. That in the event the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council can not be agreed to by mutual arrangement of the Governments of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, that said commission shall investigate, consider, and report to the Congress what action should be taken by the Congress that will aid in securing the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council or their modification so that they may not continue to militate against the interests of the people of the United States.

SEC. 3. That for the necessary expenses of said commission the sum of $50,000 be, and it is hereby, appropriated from the moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which has just been read as amended. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before agreeing to the consideration of the resolution I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama a few questions. I notice quite a change in the joint resolution as amended from the original joint resolution. I could not closely follow the changes made as the resolution was being read. Will the Senator from Alabama kindly advise the Senate what those changes are; I mean in substance, not in detail?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, in substance, most of the changes which have been made are in the preamble of the joint resolution. There were some declarations of the preamble which might have been too strong to be retained in the event of the appointment of a commission to investigate the subject. The main change in the joint resolution is not in substance but more in theory. After introducing the joint resolution I found that there was some complaint on the part of users and producers of print paper, which was not used for newsprint purposes but for the purpose of printing books, that the joint resolution was not sufficiently broad. So it has been broadened in order that all classes of print paper may come within its scope. That is really the only substantial change which has been made.

Mr. SMOOT. That is about as I thought, Mr. President; but I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama, why retain the preamble at all? It seems to me the joint resolution itself covers the whole subject matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it would be wise to retain the preamble in the joint resolution. It is not hurtful and will be directory to the commission when appointed. I do not think the preamble can hurt in any way, and I think it will be helpful in the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the joint resolution itself covers the whole subject matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it probably does; but I also think it is wiser that the joint resolution shall carry its purpose on its face. There is nothing in the joint resolution except two things: One is to appoint a commission that can officially, on the part of our Government, take up with the Canadian Government the question of the removal of the embargo that has so seriously affected the paper mills of the United States and to try to wipe out the discrimination that voided the contracts that were made by those paper mills in Canada years ago. If that discrimination can not be eliminated, then the second clause of the joint resolution will authorize the commission to make such suggestions to Congress as may in the future relieve the situation.

I am sure that there is no one in Congress who is better informed on the question of the crying need for relief in this matter than is the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire the Senator from Alabama to know that I am in full accord and sympathy with the joint resolution. This matter ought to have been investigated some time ago. I will admit that it has been discussed time and time again in the Joint Committee on Printing, but no action has been taken because of the fact that, from what little investigation we had made, it seemed almost impossible to make a change unless it was effected by retaliatory legislation, and we hardly felt that it was within our province even to suggest such a course. However, I hope that the proposed commission will be appointed, and I am hopeful that they will pay the very closest attention to the matter and will go into it from every angle.

I thought the situation was so serious that the preamble might be considered by the commission as limiting the length to which the investigation should go, and I think the investigation ought to go even further than the preamble would suggest.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the investigation could go further and do no harm, but, on the other hand, I went into this whole question pretty thoroughly 10 years ago. The present tariff law—and I was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House when it was written—attempted to relieve the situation. As the Senator knows, we did succeed in giving newsprint paper the right to be imported free of taxation, but otherwise it was not affected.

Mr. SMOOT. That right was limited to paper costing not more than 5 cents a pound.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was limited to paper costing not more than 5 cents a pound.

It is very necessary that some action should be taken, and this joint resolution goes to the very crux of the situation. If it is broadened we may go into too great a field to secure immediate action, and I should very much prefer to hold it down to the real point in issue. Therefore, I hope that the preamble will remain.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. What is the purpose of including print paper as well as pulp wood?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because both are involved in the proposition. The real question is this: A number of years ago some of the Canadian Provinces leased their Crown lands. There may be a vast quantity of pulp wood and wood that is valuable for making paper in the far West, but it can not be transported to the eastern seaboard because the freight rates are prohibitive; so that all the eastern mills are practically dependent for their supply of wood for making paper on the Canadian forests. A number of years ago they made leases of the Crown lands there for the purpose of supplying their needs, but subsequently some of the provincial governments—not the Dominion Government, but the provincial governments—that owned this land put an embargo on the shipment of the wood, reduced the supply, and tried to force—I will not say they tried to force, but the effect was to force the manufacture of paper in Canada instead of in the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator misunderstood my question. I can see a very good reason why the United States should make an effort to put a stop to the embargo on the exportation of pulp wood to this country, because obviously Canada, in maintaining that embargo or that policy of restriction, is attempting to build up her paper manufacturing institutions; but when she puts a restriction on the exportation of paper to the United States she only does so for the sake of conserving her paper supply for her own newspapers. The thought I had in mind was that we could not blame or criticize Canada for protecting her own newspapers and compelling her manufacturers of paper first to supply Canadian newspapers before they export to the United States. Certainly Canada does not put an embargo upon the exportation of paper for any other purpose, because that would be a destructive course to pursue.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Senator is probably right about that. However, this joint resolution did not originate with me; it has been amended by the committee having it in charge, but it came really from the newspapers of the United States. I suppose the reason it came to my desk was because I had been instrumental in securing the passage of the present law, which sought to relieve the situation by placing newsprint paper below 5 cents a pound on the free list, and which contained other clauses of a remedial nature. I suppose that is the reason it came to me; but the joint resolution is in response to an almost unanimous request of the newspapers of the United States. They desire newsprint paper included in the negotiations as well as pulp wood, because they are both involved. There is nothing, however, in the joint resolution that binds action in that matter. The commission, if appointed, I presume, will properly represent the industry engaged in newsprint paper manufacture as well as the newspapers themselves, the purchasers of it, and that an agreement will be reached that will be satisfactory. I repeat, it does not bind the commission to anything; it merely gives them scope to consider both propositions at the same time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course, no newspaper interest, in my opinion, could expect Canada to permit paper to be exported to this country so as to starve the newspaper supply there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator about that; yet in very recent months there have been some embargoes placed against the exportation of newsprint paper from Canada that are seriously affecting many of the large newspapers of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; we have all been the victims of it; I speak from experience; but even then we can not expect Canada to let us have newsprint paper at the expense of her own papers.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not suppose the commission appointed by the President would take any such position at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the real question is that of the exportation of pulp wood.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator; but I think the joint resolution should be broad enough to cover both subjects.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. In the last three or four days I have had several communications from one of the leading metropolitan newspapers of Ohio in which it is stated that one of the causes leading to the present scarcity in the supply of paper is the fact that coal, which is needed for fuel at the paper mills in Quebec and which has been consigned to those paper mills, has been seized by the railroads in New York and the northern part of the country. It has also been represented to me that if they can not get their coal within a short time the paper mills will be obliged to shut down, and that will stop the publication of certain newspapers in this country which depend on the Canadian mills for their supply. Has the Senator any information on that subject?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; not on that particular subject to which the Senator refers with reference to the failure of coal to reach the mills. I am not very sure in this statement, but my recollection is that, although, of course, we export some coal to Canada, it rather goes to the western portion of Canada, and that the Province of Quebec is supplied with more coal from the Nova Scotia coal fields than from our fields, because they have water transportation.

Mr. POMERENE. This information comes to me in such a way that I think it entirely reliable. I may say, also, that I took up the matter with the Railroad Administration, and found that the coal consigned to these paper mills had priority, and that they did not feel that any coal would be seized except that which was immediately necessary for the operation of the railroads; but it occurred to me that if the purpose of the Senator was to investigate the question of paper supply, it might be well to inquire into that particular feature.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it is relevant, although I think that is only temporary, and does not go to the real question.

Mr. POMERENE. I think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Senate seems to be under a misapprehension. The joint resolution is not before the Senate at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. As I understand, he has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 152.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As amended. I am proposing the consideration of the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was called out of the Chamber, and I do not know what the amendment is, but I want to ask the Senator about the particular matter about which I have received a telegram. As I understand, this joint resolution relates only to Crown lands that were leased prior to the passage of certain orders in council. It deals only with that matter?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think probably the amendment will broaden it sufficiently to permit the consideration of all of the Crown lands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Probably, then, it will meet the situation referred to in the telegram I have here. I will read it.

I have received this telegram from the Everett Pulp & Paper Co., of Everett, Wash. They manufacture a great deal of paper. It reads as follows:

EVERETT, WASH., February 10, 1920.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

All restrictions on exportation of pulp wood from Canada should be removed to help present paper shortage and high prices. The Underwood Canadian pulp-wood resolution should be amended to cover this point; otherwise will not give relief. We urge your support of such an amendment, for while we are importing pulp wood from British Columbia, on which there are no restrictions at the present time, we have no assurance that same may not be placed thereon at any time, increasing the cost of our chief raw material, as has been done by eastern Canada, from which most of our eastern mills producing news, book, and magazine papers are largely dependent for their wood supplies.

EVERETT PULP & PAPER CO.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection in the world to the suggestion that the Senator makes. I think the joint resolution is broad enough to cover what he wants. If it is not, I have no objection to such an amendment as he may propose in the matter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know the nature of the amendment that the Senator has. The Senator thinks, then, that with his amendment the joint resolution will cover this situation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think undoubtedly it will, because the real gravamen of the joint resolution is the appointment of a commission, and that commission will reach an agreement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no direct amendment to propose, and if the Senator thinks his joint resolution will cover that situation, I will not offer any amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is it the intention of the Senator in charge of this joint resolution to press it to consideration this morning?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to have it passed this morning; but, of course, if the Senator desires it to go over, in the first place he has a right to send it over, and in the next place I have no desire to interfere with the Senator's wishes. So far as I know, however, there is no reason why the joint resolution should not pass this morning. It is a mere joint resolution for the appointment of a commission to try to work out with the Canadian Government a situation that is giving a great deal of distress to the American people.

Mr. REED. A resolution was passed by the Senate nearly three months ago for an investigation of the whole newsprint situation. It went to the Committee on Manufactures, and the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], indicated his purpose to take it up immediately. The treaty battle here became so hot that it was impossible to give time to other matters, and when that was over the Senator from Wisconsin was called out of the city to his home by illness and has not yet returned. This seems to anticipate the action of that committee. I have not seen the joint resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, I do not think it has anything to do with that committee. The purpose of that resolution was to direct an investigation about domestic affairs and as to the condition of the newsprint paper industry. This joint resolution relates to a matter that is embraced in the general subject matter of newsprint paper, but it is not a question of investigating the whole industry in this country. The Canadian Government has levied an embargo on certain wood that it has refused to allow to come into this country after our people had made leases to bring it in. Efforts have been made in the past to work out an understanding with the Dominion Government of Canada through diplomatic channels and they have failed, because when it goes through diplomatic channels it must go through the Court of St. James and back to the Canadian Government.

The real purpose of this joint resolution is to make a direct effort with the Canadian Government to secure the appointment of a commission to deal with this industrial question that will not become involved in the intricacies of a diplomatic negotiation. So far as I understand it has nothing to do with the resolution of investigation. It is to appoint a commission to deal with the Canadian Government.

Mr. REED. My opinion is that it has everything to do with the resolution that was sent to the Committee on Manufactures. If I recollect that resolution correctly, it called for an investigation of the whole newsprint paper situation; it called for an investigation of the question of prices, and the question of supply, and the question of demand. Part of that supply comes from Canada, both the manufactured paper and the raw material. We could not investigate the question of the price of newsprint paper in the United States, or of the raw materials from which it is made, without at once being concerned in the Canadian situation. If this commission is appointed, and it shall proceed to make an agreement with the Canadian Government, that agreement will necessarily affect the whole situation in this country. It may be a wise and it may be an unwise thing which is arrived at.

I have not any more faith in commissions to-day than I have had in the past. Generally, commissions do not work with any degree of success. I do not want a joint resolution to be passed during the absence of the Senator from Wisconsin, and without his knowledge, which would so seriously affect the matter he has in hand, and to which he has been giving all the attention he could; and I should like to have this matter go over until to-morrow morning, until I can communicate with him. If it is not deemed by him as a matter that ought to be questioned——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I shall be very glad to have it go to the calendar, and go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. REED. I should like to have it go over until to-morrow morning without losing its place, if that can be done, because I do not want to tie it up if it is a matter that ought to be considered at once.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, of course it ought to go over if the Senator desires to look into it further; but while it will lose its place, I think it is a matter of such grave importance that I wish to say that I shall call it up in the morning hour to-morrow and, if I can, have it considered by unanimous consent to-morrow morning. If not, I shall move at as early a date as practicable that it shall be taken up.

Mr. REED. The Senator can ask unanimous consent now, and I think he can get it, to have it taken up to-morrow morning without prejudice to the position it now holds.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the joint resolution may come up to-morrow, in the morning hour, for consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly think the Senate will do that; but the Senator can ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report, and then he can make the report to-morrow morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will comply with that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to withdraw the report on the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama whether or not the fact that the interests to which he refers in his joint resolution, and particularly in the preamble, own large areas of pulp-wood lands in Canada accounts for the fact that they are not developing pulp-wood manufacture in the United States? I call his attention to the fact that in the Northwest there are large areas of forest that contain valuable pulp wood, and still larger areas in Alaska, in American territory. I have had a good deal of curiosity to understand what the influence was which prevented the development of pulp-wood manufacture in American territory when the price of print paper was going to the extremes to which it has gone, and apparently the country is confronted with an emergency on account of the shortage of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that, while my information is not recent, I once investigated the question pretty thoroughly, when the tariff bill was before the House of Representatives. The reason why the Pacific coast pulp wood—and there is a good supply of pulp wood out there—and the Alaska pulp wood is not available for the eastern mills is because the freight rates are prohibitive. It can not stand the freight charge across the continent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow me to make the suggestion, it could stand a freight charge by ship, I should think, by way of the Panama Canal.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it could. Pulp wood, to be used to make newsprint paper, has to be made cheaply. The essence of the manufacture is the cheapness of it; and the woods on the Pacific coast and in Alaska would not be available either by water or by land, because the freight rate would make the cost prohibitive. The relief of the eastern mills must come in the end from the Canadian forests, or they can not successfully operate. This joint resolution does not primarily come from the manufacturers of newsprint paper. It comes from and is indorsed by the newspapers of the country, the publishers of the country. I think, in addition, it meets with the hearty approval of the manufacturers; and it is a matter of such vital importance, where early action is needed, that I am anxious for the Senate to take it up at once.

I asked a moment ago, Mr. President, that I might withdraw the joint resolution, but, due to the fact that I have reported an amendment and it must go over until to-morrow, I will ask that it take its usual course and go on the calendar, so that the amendment may be printed and the Senate may have the print of the joint resolution with the amendment. But to-morrow or the next day I shall endeavor to get it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will go over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in this connection I ask leave to have printed as a Senate document the report of the Secretary of Agriculture upon the pulp-wood situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. By unanimous consent, the joint resolution will be placed upon the calendar.

AMENDMENT OF FARM LOAN ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McLEAN. I submit the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "and may appoint a deputy registrar who shall during the unavoidable absence or disability of the registrar perform the duties of that office," and also by adding after "registrars," in the sixth line of said paragraph, the words "deputy registrars"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "and may appoint a deputy registrar who shall during the unavoidable absence or disability of the registrar perform the duties of that office"; also on page 1, line 13 of the engrossed bill, strike out the period and insert a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That the first paragraph of section 10 be amended to read as follows:

"'That whenever an application for a mortgage loan is made through a national farm-loan association, the loan committee provided for in section 7 of this act, shall forthwith make, or cause to be made, such investigation as it may deem necessary as to the character and solvency of the applicant and the sufficiency of the security offered, and cause written report to be made of the result of such investigation, and shall, if it concurs in such report, approve the same in writing. No loan shall be made unless the report is favorable and the loan committee is unanimous in its approval thereof.

"'The written report required in the preceding paragraph shall be submitted to the Federal land bank, together with the application for the loan, and the directors of said land bank shall examine said written report when they pass on the loan application which it accompanies, but they shall not be bound by said appraisal.'

"SEC. 4. That the third paragraph of section 11 be amended to read as follows:

"'Third. To fix, under rules and regulations of the Farm Loan Board, reasonable charges to applicants for loans and to borrowers, in order to meet the necessary expenses of the association, and to acquire and dispose of such property, real and personal, as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business.'"

Also, on page 4, line 20, of the engrossed bill, strike out "4" and insert "5."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral $40"; also, on page 7, line 3, of the engrossed bill, strike out "5" and insert "6"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "$40"; also, on page 7, line 19, of the engrossed bill, strike out "6" and insert "7"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend certain sections of the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE AND BONUS FOR SOLDIERS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have been requested to ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a series of resolutions passed by Sagebrush Post, No. 68, of the American Legion, of Brush, Colo., having reference to some features of the civil service, and also to the American Expeditionary Force.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution passed by Sagebrush Post, No. 68, American Legion, Brush, Colo., February 13, 1920.

Whereas there have been numerous reports published in various reputable newspapers and magazines throughout the United States to the effect that there are now upward of 350,000 more employees in the service of the Government than were considered necessary or essential before the late war with Germany; and

Whereas it is charged and generally accepted as a fact that a large majority of said employees are superfluous and a needless and unwarranted expense to the taxpayers of this country; and

Whereas a large proportion of above superfluous employees were exempted from military duty during late war by reason of the fact that they were in Government employ; and

Whereas the chief objection to the granting of an adequate bonus or payment to ex-service men, veterans of the late war with Germany, seems to be that the financial obligations of the United States Government are now so heavy that there are no funds available and none can be raised for such a purpose; and

Whereas at an average salary of $1,200 per year the expense to the United States Government of maintaining the above 350,000 or more supernumeraries is $420,000,000 a year, or more, which with the incidental expense connected therewith means an annual expenditure of at least $500,000,000; and

Whereas assuming that there are 5,000,000 ex-service men now entitled to consideration at the hands of the Government, above sum, being the expense uselessly incurred for one year only, if expended as a bonus for discharged soldiers would give each and every soldier $100; and

Whereas the ex-service men of the United States who took the field of defense of their country at a remuneration of $30 per month are infinitely more entitled to consideration at the hands of a grateful Government than above-mentioned employees, who were sitting at home in safety and security, enjoying in many instances larger salaries than they had ever known before in their lives, and who are even now, 15 months after the end of the war, still enjoying the fruits of their nonavailability for combatant service at the expense of said ex-service men: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Sagebrush Post, No. 68, American Legion, Brush, Colo., in regular meeting assembled, That we protest most strongly against the further employment of this large army of superfluous employees in the Government civil service, and condemn the expenditure of Government funds for their maintenance as a useless and unwarranted extravagance; and be it further

Resolved, That we respectfully petition our Senators and Representatives in the Congress to use every influence and make every effort to secure an investigation of the above condition, to the end that all surplus and unnecessary employees be immediately discharged; and be it further

Resolved, That Sagebrush Post of the American Legion, at Brush, Colo., hereby goes on record as favoring a liberal bonus, either in cash or in the form of bonds, to all honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, same to be made effective at the earliest possible date in view of the fact that a large proportion of the ex-service men of the country are in pressing need thereof to enable them to reestablish themselves in the economic life of the Nation in the face of the prevailing almost prohibitive cost of living; and be it further

Resolved, That the post adjutant be, and hereby is, instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to each Senator and Congressman from the State of Colorado, with the request that same be presented to Congress and inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and with the further request that they in every way possible promote the passage of a suitable bill to accomplish the above results at this session of Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, apropos of the resolutions which the Senator from Colorado has just asked to have printed in the RECORD, I have received, as doubtless all Senators have, many resolutions from these various posts asking that they be printed in the RECORD. I have felt that it was improper, in view of the great number, to ask that they be printed in the RECORD. I would like to know what the policy is going to be, because if we are to print them in the RECORD there will be an inclination upon the part of myself, if not other Senators, to ask similar privileges, and the RECORD will be encumbered every day with a large number of these important resolutions.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have discharged my duty by complying with the request of the post at Brush, Colo.

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I would like to suggest to the Senator from Indiana that I am informed, not directly but by other Senators, that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who is interested in this bill and is compelled to be absent from the Senate at this time, desires to be heard upon the measure. I ask the consideration of the Senator from Indiana to that suggestion.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator when the Senator from Illinois expects to be present?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very soon, I am informed.

Mr. THOMAS. In the next 8 or 10 days?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very likely.

Mr. THOMAS. I can give him ample assurance that he will have time to be heard upon the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to say to the Senator from Indiana that some of us have not had an opportunity to study the bill and the hearings as we would like to do. It is a very important bill, a very unusual bill, a rather strange application of the protective-tariff theory, it seems to me, and I should like to ask the Senator if he has any intention of attempting to hurry the bill? Is there any thought that the bill will be disposed of to-day?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, answering the Senator from Iowa, I will say that I had no notion about it. The bill has been before the Senate Finance Committee for a great many weeks. The subcommittee had a series of hearings, lasting something over two months, and made then a unanimous report to the Committee on Finance, which, after considering the bill in its details, made a unanimous report to the Senate. For the last four or five days it has been noised about that the bill would be taken up at the earliest possible opportunity. It would have been taken up several days ago had it not been that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] was very anxious to continue with the measure he has in charge, and yielding to his desire, I did not press the bill at that time.

By arrangement with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and other Senators, it was agreed that this measure should come up to-day, taking its chances as to debate and passage, of course. But the Senator from Massachusetts served notice yesterday that he is exceedingly anxious to have this measure disposed of to-day in order that the Senate might proceed with the discussion of the German treaty to-morrow.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. LODGE. A motion to take up a bill at this stage is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. The question is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 8078?

Mr. KENYON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. I have promised to take care of him during that absence with my pair, and I therefore must withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I desire to transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD], my colleague being detained at home on account of sickness. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. EDGE. I withdraw my vote, having a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have voted, but observing that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a pair, is not in the Chamber, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. Noting that he is not present, I transfer the pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and let my vote stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is absent on account of illness in his family, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained by the illness of a member of his family.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained at home by illness.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] are absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—57.

Ashurst	France	McLean	Simmons
Ball	Gay	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Glass	Myers	Smoot
Borah	Hale	Nelson	Spencer

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishement of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to renew my inquiry where we left off, if I may.

Mr. WATSON. Very well.

Mr. KENYON. The papers carried a notice to the effect that the peace treaty is to come before the Senate to-morrow, and that it will be kept before the Senate until disposed of. I assume that is correct?

Mr. WATSON. As to that I do not know. All I know about it is that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on the floor yesterday served notice to that effect.

Mr. KENYON. Then, if there is no prospect of passing the bill to-day, is there anything gained by going ahead with it? I wish to say to the Senator from Indiana that my position about it is purely one of inquiry. I want to know. I have not had an opportunity and I do not believe a Senator on the floor, outside of the members of the Finance Committee, has had an opportunity to study the bill. It is a most unusual bill, and I am rather surprised to find the Democrats supporting a high-tariff bill with such unanimity.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply desire to say to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] that the tariff rates in the bill, as reported by the Senate committee, are not those contained in the bill as passed by the House. The Senate Committee on Finance reduced the House rates down to the level of the rates contained in the act of September 8, 1916.

Mr. KENYON. But there are other things in the bill besides the rates.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no increase in the tariff rates over those in the present law, which was passed by a Democratic Congress.

Mr. KENYON. The bill practically amounts to an embargo, as I understand it.

Mr. WATSON. That is precisely what it is, and precisely what it is intended to be.

Mr. KENYON. That is a very frank statement. It was denounced by high-tariff Republicans in the House as going beyond anything that they could agree to. I merely suggest that as leading my mind to think that there will be more or less discussion about it, and whether any good will come from putting in the day discussing it, I do not know. It can not be passed to-day.

Mr. WATSON. That may be true.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] believe that the discussion to-day will attract attention to the provisions of the bill and lead Senators to investigation which a postponement might deprive them of making? In other words, it occurs to me that if there shall be an elaborate presentation of the bill to-day by proponents of the measure—I understand the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], speaking for the minority upon the committee, is going to make an address in its behalf—does not the Senator think that will enable us to get some ideas about the merits or demerits of the bill which will enable us, when it comes up for final passage, to act a little more intelligently?

Mr. KENYON. Possibly so; but I suppose it is the rather universal desire to dispose of the peace treaty——

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. KENYON. Outside of the Senator from Idaho, I will say.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Indiana will still yield, it was my idea that this bill should not supplant the peace treaty, but that to-morrow, as was indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senate would take up for consideration the peace treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Since the Senator from Iowa has mentioned the subject, I apprehend that the discussion upon the dye bill will not last any longer than the discussion upon the treaty. If it is a mere matter of avoiding discussion, we had better lay them both aside. I think it is a good idea to discuss the dye bill for awhile. There is a vast amount of resiliency in variety of discussion, and I think it would be well to go ahead with the dye bill to-day, and possibly we may have something to say upon it to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say that I voted to take this bill up because I recognize that it must be disposed of. I have no idea that it will be disposed of to-day.

Mr. WATSON. Neither have I.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I have an open mind on the bill. Like the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], I have been unable even to read page 3 of it. I think when the Secretary at the desk reads page 3 of the bill the Senate will get a great deal of education and valuable information.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator expect to postpone action on the bill until he can read page 3?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not expect the Senate to wait until I can read it, but I expect to hear the Secretary read it. I was anticipating that the Senator might ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. I would not object to that request as to all of the bill except as to page 3, which ought to be read, and I am going to insist that it shall be read by the Secretary.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I believe that the establishment of any new industry is a matter of prime importance to the people, because it is by the diversification of industry alone that a composite civilization can be maintained. This is peculiarly true of the dye industry, having relation, as it does, not only to the production of the dyes themselves but also to the entire textile industry of the United States, as well as to the manufacture of explosives and toxic gases for the purposes of war, on the one hand, and, on the other, drugs, pharmaceuticals, perfumery, tanning materials, photographic developers, and many other products that are related to and spring out of the dye industry.

We had in 1882 a fair start in the manufacture of dyes, but because of unfavorable legislation it was very seriously handicapped. It crippled along, after a fashion, until in 1899 we were producing in the United States 6,581,850 pounds, valued at $1,806,730, of dyestuffs; but it is worthy of note that all of the intermediates required for the production of those dyes were manufactured abroad, principally in Germany.

In 1909, 10 years thereafter, we produced in the United States 12,658,770 pounds of dyes, valued at $3,683,553. In 1914, before the breaking out of the Great War, we produced in the United States, in seven plants, 6,619,729 pounds of coal-tar colors, with a value of $3,386,212, while in that year we imported from Germany 45,480,466 pounds.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WATSON. I will yield in a moment. I repeat, for it is worthy of repetition in the consideration of this question, that the intermediates used in the manufacture of these dyes were all produced abroad with the exception of a negligible quantity which were produced in the United States. Now I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Indiana has just given the information for which I was about to ask.

Mr. WATSON. As to the intermediates?

Mr. WOLCOTT. As to whether or not the production of American dyes manufactured in 1914, the last year the Senator gave, and in 1909, which, as I recall, was the next preceding year for which he gave the figures——

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Was based upon the importation of intermediates from Germany.

Mr. WATSON. Altogether. I say "altogether," but there should be made the exception of one struggling institution which was manufacturing intermediates at something, as we are told, of a sacrifice.

The necessities of war startled the Nation into a knowledge of our unpreparedness in this respect, for that struggle developed the fact that we were purchasing all of our dyes practically from Germany, and that that country, through her analytical chemists, trained and skilled for years in the dye industry, had learned to manufacture explosives and gases as well as drugs. When the war came on we found ourselves entirely helpless in the face of this situation. The condition that confronted the dye maker in the United States was an appalling one, for this whole industry after all is dependent upon skilled chemists, upon a great chemical industry, upon the training and the development of men so that they will know these chemical combinations. We had no such experts except in small numbers and in rare instances in the United States, because we had had no dye industry in which to develop them, and they are never so well developed in any other industry.

So when it came to explosives and gases we were manufacturing a negligible quantity, and when it came to synthetic drugs, growing out of the dye industry, we were producing but an unimportant amount. Under the stress of necessity and the impulse of patriotism, as well as the desire for profit, many American manufacturers at once sprang up to meet this growing demand. They invested millions of dollars; they began the training of their chemists; they laid the foundation of this industry and proceeded with such marvelous alacrity and such unparalleled skill that in 1917 we produced in the United States 45,977,246 pounds of dyes.

Mr. POMERENE. What was the value of that product?

Mr. WATSON. I prefer to contrast the number of pounds and then the valuation.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. WATSON. In 1918 we produced 58,464,446 pounds. In 1917 the value of the product was $57,796,000, while in 1918 it was $62,026,390.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was as against a value of about $4,000,000 before the war?

Mr. WATSON. It was as against a value of $3,386,729 before the war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator in giving his last figures referred to dollars; in the preceding figures he referred to pounds.

Mr. WATSON. There were produced 58,464,446 pounds, valued at $62,026,390.

Mr. NORRIS. What was the number of pounds produced before the war.

Mr. WATSON. The number of pounds produced during the year before the war was 6,619,729, valued at three and a quarter million dollars, as against 58,464,446 pounds, valued at $62,026,390, in 1918; so that instead of importing 45,000,000 pounds we manufactured 58,464,446 pounds in our own industries, employing our own chemists and our own labor and developing our own resources.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as bearing upon the question of valuation, I assume that the greater value of the product in 1917 and 1918 was made up in large part by the increase in value over what it was during the previous years.

Mr. WATSON. That is the value of what we produced, although, because of the relative scarcity of some of the dyes, the prices of those dyes were higher in 1917 than they were in 1918. I can give an illustration, if it is desired. What is called rhodamine B, which is a very rare color, giving a pink of unrivaled beauty, used in cottons and silks, was sold by the Germans at our ports of entry before the war for 41 cents a pound, but the chemical skill required to produce that particular dye was so great, we knew so little about it, and the raw material appeared to be so rare, coming from anthracene, that when we first began its manufacture it was sold for $75 a pound in the United States.

Men have appeared before our committee, however, who say that it is now selling at $10 a pound, and all of those who testified gave utterance to the prophecy that it will be but a comparatively short time until we will make it as cheaply as it is made in Germany. That is an illustration of how at the beginning, because of our lack of knowledge of the composition of the intermediates in the manufacture of dyes, lacking, as we did, skilled chemists, the prices ranged very high, whereas now they are ranging lower on all of these manufactured products.

All of the sulphur dyes, all of what are called the azo variety, and most of the indulines, which are the great dyes in quantity used in the United States, we are making more cheaply as a whole than in the beginning, and with every promise of their being made as cheaply here within the next few years as they are made in Germany.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator how dyestuffs are now protected by the tariff? Are they not fairly protected?

Mr. WATSON. There is a protective tariff on dyestuffs, but as I proceed, if the Senator will permit me, I shall endeavor to show that the protective tariff now in existence is not sufficient, and that no protective tariff that he or I would be willing to sponsor can be made sufficient to protect this industry.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. Pardon me for a moment. Take the illustration I have just given of a German price of 41 cents as against an American price of $75 a pound, and what sort of a tariff rate would have to be imposed in order to protect that dye? No rate would be at all sufficient; and on many of these dyes it would mean the imposition of a 1,000 or 2,000 per cent rate in order to protect them from Germanic competition. I undertake to say that there is no Senator in this Chamber who would be willing to vote for such a tariff rate as that, much less to go out and defend it before the people, however necessary it might be to establish and maintain this industry.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Touching the point made by the Senator from Indiana, namely, that in order to protect the dye industry by a protective tariff the rate would have to be so high as to make it impossible for any Senator to vote for it, I wish to submit this further thought: In view of the existing low rate of exchange and the high purchasing power of the American dollar in the German market, is it not manifest that a tariff rate of 2,000 or 3,000 per cent, as suggested by the Senator, would have to mount up to something like—well, I have not made the calculation in my mind, but to 10,000 or 20,000 per cent, because, of course, the American dollar has an immense purchasing power in Germany, a purchasing power much greater than it had in normal times, and therefore the tariff barrier must be correspondingly elevated to meet the reduced purchasing power of the German mark here and the higher purchasing power of the American dollar there?

Mr. WATSON. Unquestionably what the Senator says is true. Of course, we trust that the time will speedily come when that condition will be remedied; but at the present time, while we are acting upon this proposed tariff law, we are confronted with the condition which the Senator from Delaware has so aptly described.

Our dye industry had increased in proportions and in strength, until in 1918 there were 215 firms, not including coke-oven plants, gas houses, and plants engaged exclusively in the manufacture of explosives and poison gases, which reported a production during 1918 of chemicals derived from coal tar. Under the tariff act of September 8, 1916, which, I will say to the Senator from Iowa, is the tariff now in force and the one to which we recommend that we shall return, striking out the tariff rate proposed in the Longworth bill, these coal-tar chemicals are divided into three groups. Group 1 comprises the crudes, which are on the free list. What are called the crudes are simply coal tar in its first stages of preparation. That is to say, to be elemental for a moment, all coal-tar products are recovered from bituminous coal. They are derived in by-product coke ovens and in city gas plants, where they can be obtained in large quantities.

We have as great a supply of bituminous coal as any other nation—in fact, much greater—and therefore those raw materials are on hand and can be sold as low here as elsewhere in the world, and the prices of these coal-tar products under American impulse and under the touch of American genius will soon be as low in this country as elsewhere in the world. But I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this industry sprang up because of the absolute prohibition of imports occasioned by the war; and until the war had brought about that condition where our industry could be placed on something like a self-sustaining basis, it was not possible for us to proceed except in a very fragmentary and desultory manner, as I have hitherto described.

Now, as to how these coal-tar products are obtained. They are treated with various chemicals—sometimes acids, sometimes alkalies—and after their treatment the product is called an intermediate. We have really four of those fundamental intermediates—benzol, toluol, naphthalene, and anthracene. Three of those we obtain in very large quantities in the United States because they are found in just as great abundance in our bituminous coal as elsewhere, and they are just as readily recoverable, while that is not true with the anthracene, as I shall later explain.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator spoke of the different companies in this country engaged in this business. How many does the Senator say there are?

Mr. WATSON. I will give those figures to the Senator. I spoke of 215 firms, not including coke-oven plants, gas houses, or plants engaged exclusively in the manufacture of explosives and poison gases. These firms reported the production of chemicals derived from coal tar. Not all of them obtain these chemicals on a commercial scale.

Mr. KENYON. Now, I should like to have the Senator—as he is so familiar with this matter and I am not—go into this question: It has been charged, and charged very openly, that this bill will result in a complete monopoly by the du Pont people of these chemicals and dyestuffs; that there will then be practically an embargo and the matter will be entirely in their hands. I observe in what I have read of the hearings that the du Ponts were very prominent in the hearings and very insistent upon the passage of this bill. I do not know how well founded this charge of monopoly is. That is one thing that I want to know about.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator can not answer, I might say that the report shows that there are 187 dye factories in the United States to-day.

Mr. WATSON. I was going to come to that.

Mr. KENYON. And who controls them? Does the report show who controls them?

Mr. WATSON. Nobody controls them.

Mr. KENYON. What I want to know is whether we are driving this dyestuff and chemical manufacture into the hands of one great monopoly through this bill?

Mr. WATSON. That was precisely what we were seeking to escape when we adopted the embargo plan as against the license plan. I was of the opinion that the license scheme meant a monopoly in certain gentlemen in this country; and then, when I came to the conclusion that it meant that monopoly, so far as I was personally concerned, I insisted upon the committee reporting the embargo plan instead of the license plan. I want further to say, if the Senator will pardon me, that I am opposed to any monopoly in the United States, but if we have to have a monopoly in the dye industry I very much prefer an American monopoly to a foreign one.

Mr. KENYON. So do I, but I see no reason why we should be compelled to have a monopoly at all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to say, for the information of the Senator from Iowa, that there are in my State at the present time 21 corporations manufacturing chemicals, coal-tar products, and dyes, and they are not in any way whatsoever related.

Mr. KENYON. Related to each other?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Related to each other.

Mr. KENYON. Are they related to the du Pont people?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The du Ponts represent one interest. There are 20 interests besides the du Ponts.

Mr. KENYON. Is that the largest one?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the testimony given at the hearings shows conclusively that there is keen competition between these dyestuff manufacturers, and that the average price per pound of the dyestuffs in 1917 was $1.27, while the average price per pound in 1918 was reduced to approximately $1.05.

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Senator for his suggestion.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not want to keep interrupting.

Mr. WATSON. Oh, that is all right.

Mr. KENYON. As I said before, I have been absolutely open-minded, and I am trying to get some information.

Mr. WATSON. I am very glad to have the interruptions.

Mr. KENYON. In response to the Senator from Idaho, I will say that it was charged on the floor of the House by a very high-protection Republican, who opposed this bill, I think it may be fairly said, on account of the dyestuffs provisions, that a certain indigo blue was being held at 75 cents a pound, whereas it could be secured abroad at 13 cents a pound. Does the Senator know anything about that?

Mr. WATSON. I think that is quite true, but it was because it cost that much to make it here.

Mr. KENYON. If you are putting on this embargo, and absolutely cutting out all foreign competition, where is the price going?

Mr. WATSON. I will explain that later on, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. KENYON. All right.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I make one suggestion?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa is already familiar with the fact that the question of the embargo is to be administered entirely by the Tariff Commission, a Government body. As I understand, they are given almost complete powers.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; I am familiar with that, and that is what I can not understand. I can not understand why we should not put on the tariff simply to such a point as will protect this American industry. I can not understand why, when some one may want to import, he must go to a tariff commission to find out whether or not he can import; and I can see but little difference between that and the licensing system, with which the committee itself has found so much fault.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, later on I shall explain the difference between the license system as embodied in the Longworth bill and our proposition, because our proposition, while the Senator may call it an embargo, is after all but selective importation, and that is a very usual provision in our law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question, in the light of the question propounded by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it not a fact that under the embargo system proposed in this bill the Tariff Commission will be required to grant permission to import an article covered by the bill, provided it is shown that the price charged in this country is unreasonable or that the quantity produced in this country is not adequate?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. What provision of the bill would require that?

Mr. SIMMONS. The amendment substituting the embargo for the license system.

Mr. WATSON. If the Senator will read the second section of our amendment—my copy of the bill was taken up to the desk and I do not have it here—I think that is the section referring to that matter.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I can inform the Senator that sections 505, 506, and 507 of the committee amendments relate to the subject about which the Senator is inquiring.

Mr. KENYON. I think possibly that is so. That puts the burden on the man seeking to import to establish these facts and gives him a lawsuit before he can import.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; it does not put the burden upon him. The Tariff Commission is charged with the duty of advising itself with reference to these matters, and it is contemplated that a very thoroughgoing and complete organization will be established in the Tariff Commission, under its control and direction, for the purpose of obtaining the necessary information for the enforcement of this embargo plan. As I understand, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I unfortunately was not able to attend the hearings in full, but, as I understand, if an article is not produced in this country the embargo does not apply to that.

Mr. WATSON. It does not.

Mr. SIMMONS. If an article is produced in this country the embargo applies, but the Tariff Board is required to ascertain and determine whether the quantity produced in this country is sufficient to supply the demand, and whether the price charged in this country is unreasonable; and if it finds that the quantity is insufficient or that the price charged is unreasonable, then it is required to give a license, not general, but to anybody who applies.

Mr. KENYON. Suppose they do not do it?

Mr. SIMMONS. Then that is their own fault, because they are satisfied with the prices. I take it that if any industry is dissatisfied with the prices, or if any industry using dyestuff products finds that it is not able to obtain a sufficient supply in this country, its interest would prompt it to make the application.

Mr. WATSON. Of course we must finally trust somebody with the administration of every law.

Mr. KENYON. Of course; but, as I said, you simply give the man a lawsuit.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think we can assume that the Tariff Commission would decline to discharge its duty or fulfill its obligation. If we start out upon that theory we will pass no laws, merely alleging as an excuse that the officer in charge will decline to do his duty.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator understand—I do not—that the Tariff Commission is given discretion to decline or not to decline? Is it not a fact that if the Tariff Commission ascertains the facts to be that there is not a sufficient supply or that the price is unreasonable, then the Tariff Commission has no discretion in the matter; it must grant the license?

Mr. WATSON. There is no question but that that is the meaning of these provisions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Did the committee take into account, in the consideration of this bill, the impaired condition of Germany, its lack of raw materials, the fact that it has been deprived of its coal and subjected, I was going to say, to an economic boycott; at any rate, that there have been imposed upon it such economic impediments and obstacles that it would be almost impossible for Germany to become a competitor of any nation? If this bill, as the Senator from Iowa says, is for the purpose of building up a monopoly here, of enabling a few men to get together and force the payment of an unreasonable price, it will not commend itself, in my judgment, to the Senators nor commend itself, nor should it, to the American people.

Speaking for myself, I think that opportunities ought to be given to Germany to manufacture and to dispose of her products and to trade with Europe and to trade with the United States; and I think it would be a most selfish and indefensible policy for the American Congress now to foreclose importation for the development of the nations of Europe. We have so many advantages that some of the nations do not have that we can not afford to build up monopolies or to put into the hands of the vested interests or private interests the control of the production of the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have evidence showing Germany's strength and entire capacity at the present time, indicating that unless some legislation of this character is enacted, she will be able immediately to capture the American market.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that under this bill no importation of dyestuffs can be had into this country not only from Germany but from France or England or Switzerland, in each of which countries they are now manufacturing large quantities of dyestuffs. I wish to call his attention to the further fact that it was plainly and clearly disclosed at the hearings that the importation of even 30,000 tons of dyestuffs into this country would be more than sufficient to supply the needs of the dye consumers for more than a year. That being true, as a matter of course, with such an importation the dyestuff manufacturing industry in the United States would at once be put out of business.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Indiana a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I dislike to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. WATSON. I am glad to have the interruptions because the discussion is illuminating.

Mr. KENYON. What amount of dyestuffs are to be turned over to the reparation commission?

Mr. NUGENT. According to my recollection, 40,000 tons.

Mr. KENYON. To be turned over to the reparation commission?

Mr. NUGENT. To the reparation commission, to be divided. We do not get all of it; we will secure only a portion of it.

Mr. KENYON. Suppose we do not get any of it?

Mr. WATSON. We shall get a part of it. The 40,000 tons are to be allocated by the reparation commission, and we are to receive a portion of it. The War Trade Board has had its representatives over there, according to the testimony before our committee, for the purpose of trying to obtain possession of the portion that is coming to us, but up to this time none has been brought in.

Mr. KENYON. There is a statement published in the Daily News-Record of New York, from Mr. Keene, chairman of the advisory committee on drugs, chemicals, and dyestuffs of the American Chamber of Commerce, in which he says:

> Far from being in a position to dump dyestuffs and other chemicals on American, British, and other markets, Germany is actually short, and when she has delivered to the Allies the quantities required by the peace treaty there will be little left to export. The acute shortage of coal and raw materials precludes the possibility of her becoming anything more than a weak competitor for at least a year.

That statement was made by him after a trip into Germany and an exmination of the subject.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, that brings to mind the conflicting testimony before our committee bearing on that very point. We had a number of people before us who were supposed to be well informed, in fact, thoroughly conversant with the situation, who testified as to the quantity of dyes that Germany now has on hand, making the statement that during all the war time Germany had been largely engaged in manufacturing explosives and toxic gas from her dyes, and that the dye became in a sense secondary; that is to say, the dye became the by-product and the explosive and the toxic gas the principal products, and that those things had been laid by and stored up in very great quantities and are now ready to be brought here as soon as opportunity was offered.

On the other hand, we had men come before our committee who had been over there, as these other men had been, who stated that there was a shortage of raw material, and that, while Germany has some dyes piled up, after all they would soon be exhausted, and that there was no danger of serious competition from Germany. While we were in that doubtful situation, and while we were in that dubious frame of mind, we believed that it was the best thing to do to make sure of the establishment of this American industry on American soil for American purposes.

That is why we put a three-year limit in the bill. If I had been drawing it I would have put in a five-year limit. But we made it three years, believing that in that time this whole question could be determined.

I do not know what the Germanic competition is to be in the future, and, not knowing, so far as I am concerned, I want to be sure that the American industry is to be placed on an independent and permanent basis.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, as I stated before, I was not present at the hearings, and I would like to ask the Senator from Indiana whether it was not disclosed in the hearings that during the war not only the United States but England and France, under the stress of the necessities of the situation, like ourselves, undertook to establish the dye industry on a broad and permanent basis by all sorts of encouragement, and whether now those two great nations, living near the German borders, thoroughly conversant with conditions in the German dye industry, in order to prevent Germany from invading their markets to the point of destroying this industry, which they, like ourselves, have tried to build up during the war, have not resorted, for the purpose of preventing that disaster, to practically the same methods which we are proposing to apply here?

Mr. WATSON. And they have gone beyond us, in that both nations have established not only a license system, but England has positively prohibited imports.

Mr. SIMMONS. A thing that we do not propose to do in this case.

Mr. WATSON. Not by any means.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that, although we are now making 300 of these different colors, there are probably some 900 or 1,000 of the colors, and the balance of them we have not yet learned to make. We will not learn to make them until an enormous chemical personnel is built up by this dye industry and investigations have been made and the methods of manufacturing and combinations have been worked out. Until that happens, until we are able to produce these other additional colors which we can not produce now and which our manufacturers must have, the bill places no embargo upon that part of Germany's products, and they come in under the tariff rates prescribed in the act of 1916.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, is it not true that the patents, amounting to over 4,000, have been sold by the Alien Property Custodian to a company which was organized?

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the Senator asking me that question?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is true. I think we have acquired in some way or other, through the Alien Property Custodian, the ownership of these patents. But, Mr. President, acquiring the patents does not mean that we have become able to produce the products according to the patents.

Mr. WATSON. Not by any manner of means.

Mr. KENYON. But it means that we will be able to do it.

Mr. SIMMONS. They will have to be worked out by our chemists. When the war began we had very few chemists who were devoting their time to research in and investigation of these questions. We have now, I think, about 2,000, employed largely by the dye industry, who are engaged in the study of these questions. But it will be, I take it, a very considerable time before they are able to apply the patents which we have been fortunate enough to acquire.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I want to say to the Senator from Iowa, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will pardon me just a moment, that 4,200 German patents were taken possession of by the Alien Property Custodian and afterwards disposed of; that it was found that in the main they had only a nuisance value; that is to say, that the Germans, in taking out their patents in this country, had been shrewd enough not to put in every step necessary, from the crude material on up to the finished dye, but had either omitted or changed some very important steps. So when they came to make the dyes in this country in accordance with the specifications of those patents, they found they did not produce the dye, or, at any rate, did not produce a sufficient yield, and our chemists had to go to work to find out what those intermediates were. They did not state all the steps in the manufacture correctly, through all the processes up to the finished dye.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, the formulæ were properly laid down in the patents, but in such a manner that there was no yield, and consequently it was necessary for the chemists engaged by our manufacturers to make a very large number of experiments before they finally arrived at the stage where they could produce the product.

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, the same difficulty that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has in mind confronted me when I began to read this testimony; that is, what more do we want than access to their patents and knowledge of their processes? But I discovered in reading the testimony that it is one thing to have knowledge of the process and quite a different thing to know how to carry it out—the technical knowledge, the deftness that comes from experience. Sometimes the number of revolutions of a wheel will change the whole nature of a product. That was illustrated by one of the witnesses, who said that after having acquired a knowledge of how to produce a particular dye the first year they did produce it in commercial quantities, but out of their raw material they got about 14 per cent; the next year, with an additional 12 months' experience, they got about 22 per cent, and the next year they got about 35 per cent. The Germans, as a rule, were getting about 98 per cent, and this witness indicated that with the accumulated experience which came in handling the process eventually we would be able to get as much as the Germans did. So, as I said, it is not knowing the process that counts, but it is knowing how to work the process to the best advanage.

Mr. WATSON. That is to say, until this chemical knowledge shall have been scientifically applied as well as scientifically obtained they do not succeed in getting the yield that will make it commercially profitable. After these chemists have worked for months on a given formula, or making new compounds for the manufacture of intermediates or dyes, and it seems as if they will arrive at a great degree of perfection, as evidenced in the laboratories, when they go into the factory and use the same formula they really get no yield, or but a very slight yield, and they have to go back and do it all over.

[At this point Mr. WATSON yielded the floor temporarily.]

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him——

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. NUGENT. For the purpose of demonstrating the difficulties which were encountered in the manufacture of these dyestuffs because of lack of experience, I call attention to the testimony of a Mr. Klipstein, at page 178 of the hearings, where he said:

> Then the next step that comes up is, of course, the question of chemists, the question of people to do this. It is very easy to make all of these products. They are little, simple problems that you get in a primary way in the technical schools of the country. Anyone can go to work and make these dyestuffs with their students, but when you come to deal with a plant that costs $125,000 and material that costs $20,000 for a charge it is a very different question. You have to have the experience, our people have got the experience and they can not do it.
> I can give you an instance that will illustrate that better than anything else. There was a certain raw product that I wanted to make. It was absolutely necessary to several others. I had a man that made it beautifully in the laboratory, so I said, "All right; now put in the machinery." He designed the machinery and started to work. On the first operation he got about a 2 per cent yield. He made a second one. We kept on for three or four months, and he never got any higher than a 10 per cent yield, which made it absolutely impossible.
> I turned it over to somebody else, and he worked on it for a month or two and could not get anything. Finally I put it back under the first man again. He had been thinking about it in the meantime and watching what had been going on. The very first day that he started the old machine up, the same machine, he came back and said he was getting a 90 per cent yield, that it was all right, and that he was going on.
> Now, what do you suppose made the difference between success and failure there? It took him all that time to find it out. He found out that he was running the stirring apparatus in his test kettle five revolutions a minute too fast. He slowed it down five revolutions a minute and got what he wanted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Elkins	Keyes	Pomerene
Ball	Fletcher	King	Sheppard
Beckham	Frelinghuysen	Knox	Simmons
Borah	Gay	Lenroot	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Glass	Lodge	Smoot
Calder	Gore	McKellar	Spencer
Capper	Hale	Moses	Sterling
Chamberlain	Harris	Norris	Sutherland
Colt	Harrison	Nugent	Thomas
Culberson	Henderson	Overman	Townsend
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Underwood
Dial	Kellogg	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Kendrick	Pittman	Watson
Edge	Kenyon	Poindexter	Wolcott

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask why the unfinished business should be laid aside when there does not seem to be any possibility of the dyestuffs bill being disposed of to-day, and to-morrow we will have the peace treaty up and the dyestuffs bill will go over again? In other words, it seems to me that this is simply a waste of time. If there is any special reason why the unfinished business should be laid aside, I will make no objection.

Mr. STERLING. I will simply say that the matter was presented to me as an emergency measure, and I consented on that account on yesterday that the unfinished business might be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the dyestuffs bill to-day, my impression being from what was told me that it would not take very long to dispose of the dyestuffs bill and that it would probably be finished to-day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand from the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] that it will probably be days before the bill is disposed of, even if it should be kept before the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to quiet the apprehensions of my friend the Senator from Washington. I expect to speak at some length upon the bill and in opposition to it. That was the reason for the statement I made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That will be interesting to the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. It will probably be neither interesting nor profitable.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not agree with the Senator on that.

Mr. THOMAS. But I think it is my duty to speak on the bill. Of course, it will interfere with the passage of the bill to-day unless we hold a night session.

Mr. STERLING. Under the circumstances I feel impelled to ask unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily to-day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, as the Senator in charge of the bill makes that request, I shall have no objection.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, in view of the statements made by several Senators, I object.

Mr. WATSON. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the further consideration of House bill 8078, the dyestuffs bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that that would permanently displace the civil-service retirement bill.

Mr. STERLING. I did not understand that the motion would displace entirely the retirement bill. I appreciate the force of the suggestion that it will do so.

Mr. WATSON. I stated to the Senator very frankly that it would displace his bill; and his bill would have to be brought up again.

Mr. STERLING. I did not so understand the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SMOOT. May I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that he could move at any time to take up Senate bill 1699. I do not think there will be any doubt that we can by vote take it up at any time we want to do so.

Mr. STERLING. I feel that I can not consent, under those circumstances, to the displacement of the retirement bill.

Mr. WATSON. I, of course, have every consideration for my friend and seat mate, the Senator from South Dakota, but for the last five or six days I have been waiting for his bill to be disposed of in some way in order to bring up the dyestuffs bill. The bill I am representing here on the part of the Finance Committee is an emergency measure brought out under great pressure of circumstances to meet an exigent necessity growing out of war conditions, and now peace conditions, and therefore, his measure not being an emergency measure and he having the privilege at any time in the future to bring it up, I think that we ought to be permitted to go on with the dyestuffs measure. I therefore insist on my motion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has made a very convincing statement of the advantages of his bill. I do not think that anyone could very successfully dispute his proof of the merits of it. There is another tariff bill that is pending in the Finance Committee upon which just as convincing a demonstration of its need and of the emergency in the industry which is intended to be met by it can be made. I refer to the magnesite bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will not the Senator also include in that the tungsten bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is very likely true, Mr. President. Personally I am not so familiar with the tungsten bill.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. I hope the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] will not say that the pearl-button bill is also included in that category.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think that the committee intend to give full consideration to all the measures that have been presented to them. I have a bill in which the people of my State are very much interested—the question of glass and surgical instruments. I understand that that bill is being considered, but we can not consider more than one bill at a time, and I do not believe that the committee can report more than one bill at a time. I believe that these matters will come before the Senate in due time for consideration; I hope so; but because they have not reported my glass bill I do not intend to object to this other very important question being considered at this time. I hope the Senator from Washington will permit the bill to be considered now inasmuch as there are at the present time many of the industries in the country anxious to know what the policy of the Congress is going to be as to the protection of dyes and coal-tar products.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to hear the encouraging suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey that the magnesite bill may possibly be reported out from the committee.

Mr. WATSON. If the Senator will permit me, the subcommittee heard all the evidence on the magnesite question and made a report—a majority and minority report—to the full committee. The full committee ordered a favorable report, and after that report was made the committee ordered it withheld for the time being. The Senator understands very well the situation. Personally, I am in favor of his measure. I have not any hesitancy in saying that; but I am only one member of the committee and, of course, can not control its action altogether. If I can have my way about it, when this dye bill shall have been disposed of, I am perfectly willing to go on and pass his measure, so far as I am concerned.

Of course, there are a number of other members of the committee—and some of them have different views—whom I am not able to control; but, for my very life, I can not see why the Senator, believing in the merits of his proposition, should object to this proposition, which is being tested here on its merits. If the two stand exactly alike, on a common ground, and one is just as meritorious as the other, why should the Senator object? Is he not putting himself in a dangerous position, for when his proposition comes up somebody will object to it, just as he is now objecting to this?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not object to any meritorious bill of this kind. Such measures should stand upon the qualities which they severally possess; but it has been admitted by the Senator from Indiana that he agrees with me as to the merits of the magnesite tariff bill. One of the essential elements of the policy of protection is that it should operate uniformly for the protection of all the people in any legitimate industry.

I do not know that it is necessary at this time to go at length into a discussion of the various influences which are said to be operating in these matters, which seem to be able to promote the report of a bill for the protection of an industry in which some people are interested and to suppress a bill for the protection of an industry in which other people are interested. No system for the protection of American industry which is based upon discrimination and favoritism can possibly be justified.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. I do not believe that the Senator has well weighed his words when he makes that statement. While the general proposition which he states is true, its application in this case is absolutely untrue; that is to say, there is nothing in the nature of favoritism here. We took up the dye question, considered it at great length, and came to the conclusion that it was of overwhelming importance. Coming to that conclusion, we insisted on its early presentation. Personally, I was just as much for the magnesite bill as for the dye bill, believing that both were equally meritorious; but after all one is of such stupendous importance as compared with the other that we thought we might well take up this bill first and give it immediate consideration.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I want to ask the Senator from Indiana if I understood him to say that the magnesite bill had been reported to the whole committee from the subcommittee?

Mr. WATSON. It has been reported to the full committee by the subcommittee and been reported favorably by the full committee, and then afterwards the report was ordered withheld.

Mr. GORE. Are any other of these single-shot bills in that category?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; the bill as to surgical instruments——

Mr. GORE. And as to zinc, and so on?

Mr. WATSON. The bill relating to chemical glassware and the one having reference to optical instruments.

Mr. GORE. And as to the bills relative to tungsten and zinc, have they reached that stage?

Mr. WATSON. No. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that the bill in reference to zinc has not as yet been favorably considered by the full committee, though it has been favorably considered by the subcommittee.

Mr. THOMAS. By the majority of the subcommittee.

Mr. WATSON. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Colorado—by the majority of the subcommittee.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the senator from Washington suffer an interruption?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, during the war the glass factories of New Jersey captured from German industry the manufacture of laboratory glassware, a product which had never theretofore been manufactured in this country owing to the extreme competition of Germany. At the present time those factories are closed down, it being uncertain whether or not they will be protected against German competition and the low wages now being paid in Germany to the glass workers, 12 cents an hour, as against approximately 70 cents an hour, the amount which is paid here.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Jersey means Japan and not Germany.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; I mean in Germany and in Belgium. The competition of Japan is in surgical instruments, being another item of the bill.

This bill was introduced by Representative BACHARACH, from my State, and has been before the Finance Committee of the Senate; they have considered it, and it has been ordered reported to the Senate. I am extremely anxious that the bill should come before the Senate; but I am not complaining, realizing that it has never been a custom of this body to impede the progress of any legislation simply because the committee has not reported some other bill in which a number are interested. Therefore I feel that in due course of time the Finance Committee will report all of these bills to the Senate for consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, what the Senator from New Jersey says as to legislation on different subjects is undoubtedly correct, but when it comes to legislation upon the same subject, and there is simply a question of the items which shall be included in it, when it comes to the application of a beneficial principle, and the question is as to whether or not that principle shall be applied equally to the benefit of all the citizens of the country who come within its scope, that is an entirely different matter.

The magnesite bill has been, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has stated, ordered reported by the Finance Committee after a full hearing and consideration. In view of that fact, and in view also of the fact that it has been considered by the Ways and Means Committee of the other House and has been passed by the House of Representatives, the same action should be taken upon it by the committee as upon the dye bill.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. WATSON. How does the Senator expect to promote the consideration of the magnesite tariff bill by opposing this bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not opposing this bill.

Mr. WATSON. Then, I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I expect to vote for this bill if we are compelled to vote. I believe that it is a meritorious bill, but I am insisting that we shall have an opportunity, through the medium of a report from the Finance Committee placing it upon the calendar, to vote also upon the magnesite bill at an early date. I object to discriminations; I object to affording an opportunity to vote upon a measure for the benefit of a certain section of the country, or for the benefit of those companies which by reason of their investment in the dye industry are concerned in this bill, and denying a similar opportunity to other great sections of the country and to people whose investments are in magnesite.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not think that I am irreverent to the sacred cause of protection if I suggest that it might be a wise idea to drive these bills in tandem through the Senate, or commit them all to those who are interested in a high tariff and let them offer one splendid, symmetrical bill that will give the people who want a high tariff just what they desire.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington suffer an interruption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield further to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I appreciate very much the sarcasm of the Senator from Utah, but in this case it is not well applied. The President of the United States has already in a message to Congress urged that it was important, not only in order that we might capture from German competition the dye industry and the coal-tar industry, but as a measure of preparedness it was our duty to concern ourselves not only with tariff legislation but with a leasing system in order that we might gain from this war what we had accomplished during the war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the sarcasm, as the Senator from New Jersey has denominated it, of the remarks of the Senator from Utah does not trouble me at all, because I believe in the protective principle. I judge from his remarks that the Senator from Utah does not. I am perfectly willing that the bills shall be driven either in tandem or all abreast through the Senate, if the facts in the case justify the application of the protection principle to them.

This is not a time, it seems to me, when the Republican Party ought to shy at the principle of protection, which it has advocated for more than a generation, because of the taunts of the Senator from Utah or anybody else; but that great principle which has been, perhaps, the most characteristic policy of the Republican Party, could never have been justified, it would never have been approved by the American people, if the application of it in times past had been undertaken in the manner in which it is undertaken now, by selecting an item here and there and if an interest was able to muster back of it sufficient influence to get action upon it, and that others equally meritorious should be denied the benefits of protection.

It is not necessary, Mr. President, that we should vote at the same identical time upon these bills. I realize that so long as they are separate bills we can not do that; but everyone is familiar more or less with what has occurred in the Committee on Finance. It is quite an unusual thing, after a subcommittee has been appointed and has had hearings and has reported a bill favorably to the full committee and the full committee has ordered a report to the Senate, that that report is withheld and, for some mysterious and unknown reason, which is not explained, the order of the committee is not carried out. I should like to know something more about that—what the influences and reasons were.

I have heard some intimation that Senators upon the committee were afraid to go before the country upon the merits of a tariff upon the articles that are covered by these bills. If that is the reason, the same reason applies to the dye bill as it does to the magnesite bill; more so, in fact, because the dye bill in effect places an embargo upon the importation of dyes, whereas the magnesite bill only places a tariff duty of a half a cent a pound upon that essential material.

Mr. President, while it has been pointed out that Germany, by reason of the terms of the peace treaty, is to deliver, as I recall, half of her production of dyestuffs to the Allies—or whatever the proportion may be—magnesite also is a product of a late enemy country. The bill which the committee has been ordered to report and which it has failed to report is intended, as is the dye bill, to protect an industry which was developed through the patriotic efforts of American citizens to supply the needs of the Government during the war.

I am told that some Americans who are interested in the production of steel have an investment in Austria, and that by reason of that fact an influence has been exerted to suppress this bill for the protection of those who have invested in the production of magnesite in the State of Washington and in the State of California. All through the great Rocky Mountain region, in Arizona and in Nevada and other States, there are large deposits of magnesite which are capable of commercial production if they are given the reasonable amount of protection which is provided for in this bill. Our people were appealed to by the Government, when the war prevented the importation of magnesite from Austria, to produce magnesite, to develop these mines, in order that the steel industry might continue. They did so. Now that the war is over, and these gentlemen of Pennsylvania are interested from a financial standpoint in resuming the importation of magnesite from a foreign country, they seem to have forgotten the patriotic services which were rendered in the development of magnesite in this country, upon the urgent appeal of the Government, when we were in the throes of war.

I call attention to the report of the House Committee on Ways and Means. The magnesite bill is set out in the report. It provides:

That on and after the day following the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles named herein, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions, the rates of duties which are herein prescribed, namely:

1. Magnesite, commercial ore, either crushed or ground, one-half of a cent per pound.

2. Magnesite, calcined, dead burned, and grain, three-fourths of a cent per pound.

3. Magnesite brick, three-fourths of a cent per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem.

SEC. 2. That paragraph 539 of the tariff act of October 3, 1913, is hereby repealed; and that so much of paragraph 71 of said tariff act and of any existing law or parts of law as may be inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The Committee on Ways and Means reported to the House of Representatives upon it as follows:

Hearings were had upon the bill to determine the question of adequate rates of duty for the protection of the magnesite industry, at which hearings testimony was offered on the part of the Tariff Commission, the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, and the magnesite producers and manufacturers.

The sworn statements of six of the largest domestic producers were filed with the committee, showing the average cost per ton, without profit, of dead burned magnesite delivered at Atlantic ports to be $41.20 at the present time. The testimony also showed that the prewar selling price of the Austrian product, including profit, in the United States was $16.15, making a difference between the present cost, without profit, of American magnesite laid down on the Atlantic seaboard and the prewar selling price of the Austrian product of $25.05.

While the magnesite producers urged upon the committee that higher tariff rates are necessary than those provided in the amended bill, yet, owing to the lack of showing and knowledge of future conditions in Austria with respect to this commodity, and particularly with regard to the cost of the same, and having regard to all testimony and conditions as presented, the committee resolved the matter upon the basis of the rates specified in the amended bill. They believe that under such rates the domestic producers and manufacturers will be able to compete upon equal terms with the Austrian product.

In this connection it appears that a quotation has been made for the delivery of Austrian magnesite f. o. b. Atlantic ports at $26.50 per net ton, as compared with the prewar selling price of $16.15, above referred to.

I may say at that point, Mr. President, that the only competitor of the United States in the production of magnesite is Austria, and that the deposits of magnesite in that country are located near navigable harbors, so that those who are financially interested in these deposits—and they are American citizens, as I am informed—have the advantage of water transportation practically the entire way from the mine to the consumers, the consumers consisting very largely of the steel manufacturers upon the Atlantic coast, located also near navigable waters; and that is one of the reasons why it is necessary, if this American industry is to be continued at all, that there should be a protective duty levied upon foreign importations. Every principle upon which the theory of protection is based applies in this case. If the committee is going to abandon the principle, then we will have to take our fortune with the rest; but if it is to maintain the principle then let the committee stand for it in this case, as in the case of dye, and let those who are opposed to it oppose it; but there can not be any just discrimination between the two.

We are told by Members who speak without any authority that the magnesite bill may at some future time be reported out; but we have no assurance that it will be. The fact that it has been recalled by the committee, that the report which had been ordered has been suspended, indicates that very likely some influence—probably that which is interested in the Austrian mines—is endeavoring to prevent any report at all; and I insist that before the dye bill is presented to the Senate for a vote the magnesite bill shall be put upon the calendar, at least, where it can be called up at an early date to take its chances with other tariff legislation before the Senate and before the country.

Reading further from this report, Mr. President, it is stated that—

The testimony showed that an ocean rate on Austrian magnesite has been fixed of $7.50 per ton, as against the prewar rate of approximately $2 per ton; and as this material is used as ballast, it is possible that the ocean rate may be subsequently reduced to approximately that of normal times. On the basis of such quotation for present delivery a differential between the present Austrian selling price, including profit, and American magnesite at Atlantic ports, without profit, is $14.50 on dead-burned magnesite, and the tariff rate of three-fourths of a cent per pound provided in the amended bill is therefore deemed adequate.

A tariff of one-half cent per pound has been placed upon crude magnesite ore, as the testimony shows that without protecting the crude material it would be possible to defeat the object of this bill by importing crude magnesite into this country and then manufacturing it into dead-burned or calcined magnesite at such a price as to prevent the production of dead-burned magnesite in this country.

The testimony further developed the fact that it requires 2 tons or more of crude magnesite to make 1 ton of dead-burned or calcined magnesite.

The testimony shows that magnesite brick consists only of the dead-burned magnesite to which water has been added and then pressed into the form of a brick. It was therefore necessary to place the same specific duty on the material in the brick as upon dead-burned magnesite, for the reason that if the brick were imported without this duty they might be broken up, and we would have, in fact, loose, dead-burned magnesite admitted without specific duty, and would thus defeat the purpose of this bill.

Of course, Mr. President, the old question that is one of the fundamental questions involved in a protective tariff system is involved in this bill. That is, the protection not only of American capital invested in the industry but of American labor engaged in the production of this product. On the one hand we have Austrians, who until lately were and as a matter of fact at this moment, in so far as the technical and strictly legal situation is concerned, are enemies of the United States and have been waging war against the United States. They are accustomed to lower standards of living, lower wages, and are competing in the production of this product with the higher paid American workmen, with their higher standards of living.

Yet the American industry is to be suppressed and we are asked here to accept the situation without protest while we pass another bill for the benefit of some one else who has no superior claim to tariff protection.

I do not think it can be justified. I do not think that those who are sponsors for the bill should expect to get the support of those who believe in the protective-tariff system if they are to make selections and discriminations of that kind, and it is only for that purpose that I am making this objection. I know there is some objection to the consideration of the dye bill by those who are opposed in toto to the entire principle of protection and to all of the pending tariff bills. That is not my object. If the necessity is forced of voting upon this bill alone and separately and without having an opportunity to vote upon the other bill, I shall vote for it, because I believe it is meritorious; but I shall not do it without protesting against the denial of the same privilege to those who are interested in the magnesite bill. Nobody has undertaken to show upon this floor, in reporting out one bill and suppressing the other, that the bill that is reported out has a higher claim to protection than the one that is suppressed.

I would like to know why one is reported and the other is not reported, why this sudden change has come over the spirit of the committee. I will not go into the details at this time—I will later if necessary—as to the reasons of the committee for reversing its own action, although not adapting the expedient of recalling a bill which they had already reported or of asking that it be recommitted to the committee, as they could do if they desired to treat all upon an equal basis. It is a most flagrant case of discrimination and favoritism. It would be different if we had any assurance that the magnesite bill would ever be reported to the Senate. I am not asking now that it be passed by the Senate; no man can control that; we would have to accept its fate, whatever it might be, upon the judgment of the Senate. But upon the judgment of the committee itself we are entitled to an opportunity to submit to the Senate that bill, in which the great States of the West are interested, in the same manner that the manufacturers of New Jersey are granted the privilege of a vote upon the dye bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The interest in the dye bill is not limited entirely to New Jersey. There are many other States in the Union where there are manufactures of dyes and coal-tar products. New Jersey, I understand, has about $40,000,000 of the industry, while the entire industry in the United States closely approximates $100,000,000. But there is something more than that, and that is whether this country shall be independent of Germany in regard to the manufacture of coal-tar products for ammunition, for explosives, and for other measures of preparedness.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator is entirely right. I mentioned New Jersey not as being exclusively interested, but because some reference was made a moment ago to some dye industries which are located in that State. I only mentioned it by way of illustration, and I agree with the proposition of the Senator that there is hope that this industry may be further extended, until every section of the United States which has the natural advantages to engage in it may have the opportunity of doing so. Every word that is said to that effect, every argument that can be made in favor of it, can be said with like effect and with equal force as to the production of magnesite from the great natural deposits which lie in the States of the West. We ask the same application of the principle of protection that is granted to the manufacturers of the East.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows very well that I never shy at the word "protection."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would be very much surprised if the Senator did.

Mr. SMOOT. I have never in my life, nor do I ever expect to. I want to say to the Senator now, as far as this bill is concerned, if I had had my way about it it would have been a straight protective bill, providing a specific duty that would protect the dye industry of this country, and I would not have had any embargo provision on it, or any license system as provided in the House bill. I believe in the protective tariff principle, and I would have granted a reasonable rate of protection in this bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am delighted to hear that statement from the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say now to the Senator that as far as the magnesite bill is concerned he knows that if I were going to support any tariff measure, and it became a sectional question—although I never have believed that the principle of a protective tariff is a sectional question—I would be with the industries of the West. As far as the magnesite bill is concerned, I am ready to report the bill just as soon as it can be reported, if the bill can secure sufficient votes to pass the Senate. I think the Senator will criticize that position, and I am not going to take the time now to say why I make that statement. But I can explain to the Senator, and will do so if he insists, why the magnesite bill has not already been reported to the Senate. I want to say to the Senator that I expect the magnesite bill to be reported to the Senate, I expect the tungsten bill to be reported to the Senate, I expect the pearl-button bill to be reported to the Senate, I expect the glass bill to be reported to the Senate, and I expect the scientific-instruments bill to be reported to the Senate.

If the Senator will only have a little confidence in the committee—and I think also that it would perhaps be better to state frankly to the Senator just why I make that statement—I know that the committee is going to do that which is best for the industry. I think I have a right to say it. Because of the fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is absent on account of illness and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is absent on account of illness in his family, I am the ranking member of the committee, and I am going to call the committee together either this week or the beginning of next, and then it will be definitely decided whether all of the bills mentioned by me shall be reported out. And I think if one of them is reported to the Senate, they will all be reported out. That will be my position, I will state frankly.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to ask the Senator from Utah if these other bills have an embargo provision?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President. They are straight protective-tariff bills, and every single bill that I work for will be that kind of a bill. Of course, I know that there are dyes made in this country that perhaps could not be protected to-day with any reasonable rate. Take vat dyes, for instance; the dyes that are used for the dyeing of cotton shirtings and for other purposes, where fastness is absolutely required.

So far those dyes have not been made successfully in this country. They may be made, but with any ordinary tariff duty upon them to-day they could not be protected. I say frankly, just as I said before, I would not shy at a protective duty, particularly if it were limited to three years, as in this bill the embargo provision is limited, to take care of special items. I am not particular what rate of duty is required in order to establish the industry in the United States, for when it is made a successful industry, when the processes are perfected—and by "perfected" I mean when they are manufactured as successfully as in other countries—then it would not require a high rate of duty. This bill is limited to three years, and no industry within that time could be established and begin the manufacture, say, of vat dyes required by a large majority of the cotton manufacturers of the country in a less period of time. Then, at the end of three years, we would know the situation exactly as it then existed. We would impose whatever duty was required, after an examination as to what it cost at the end of the three years to make those goods in this country and the cost of producing them in foreign countries. That is my position in relation to these bills.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to hear that statement from the Senator. But entertaining that view, and feeling on the subject as intensely as the Senator indicates—and I know he is speaking sincerely about it—I do not understand why the Senator should hesitate to report out a bill such as this magnesite bill, which involves those principles, because he says he feels it can not pass the Senate. I do not quite understand why a committee which believes in a great principle like this would not be willing to back its belief and take the consequences of a vote in the Senate. The committee then will have absolved itself, so far as the performance of its duty is concerned. But for the Senator to say that they will not report this magnesite bill out because he is afraid it will not pass the Senate, although he entertains such a profound conviction of its merits, seems to me to be rather a peculiar position. I do not criticize the Senator for any position he would take, but I say it seems to me that he ought not to treat this bill in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say frankly that if I had my way about it we would have an entire revision of the tariff. But the Senator knows that whenever the tariff is revised, whether it be up or whether it be down, the business interests of this country are unsettled, and what is the use of unsettling the business of this country when we know that a protective tariff bill, which will be absolutely necessary when normal conditions arrive in the world, would not be signed at the other end of this avenue, and the only reason why these bills have been passed——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it because they are supposed to be emergency measures?

Mr. SMOOT. It is because, as the Senator says, they are emergency measures. That is all there is to it. I thought, Mr. President, that if I knew beyond the question of a doubt that these bills could not pass the Senate of the United States what would be the use of bringing discussion of them on the floor of the Senate? What good would it do? I say now that if I were personally interested in the production of tungsten, magnesite, or any of the other items covered by these special bills I would very much prefer not to have adverse action on the part of the Senate, because I believe that just as surely as the sun will rise to-morrow morning there will be a change in the administration at the next election. I believe that there will be a Republican President, a Republican House, and a Republican Senate, and then a tariff bill can be passed carrying a general revision of the tariff and covering all items mentioned in the special bills,

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in just a moment to the Senator, but before doing so I want to say to the Senator from Utah that I do not agree with him in his view of expediency. If expediency is going to enter into this matter at all, I believe that the Senate Committee on Finance and the Republicans in the Senate who believe in a reasonable degree of protection for certain industries which have originated during the war and need the benefit of it now, and that if they are going to be saved it can not be deferred, ought not refuse to act for fear that the Democratic Party, which is not a high-protection party, would not support those measures. I believe they should stand upon the doctrines in which they believe. But, although I differ with the Senator as to the propriety of withholding bills for that purpose, I do not believe, even conceding his viewpoint, that any such condition would arise in the Senate, because I am satisfied that the magnesite bill will pass the Senate if it is reported from the committee and the Senate given an opportunity to vote upon it. Indeed, I am assured that it will pass.

I wish also to say to the Senator that it is somewhat difficult for me to reconcile the views of a Senator whose devotion to the principle of protection is so well known as those of the Senator from Utah with his action, which he has just declared, based upon fear that bills containing a reasonable degree of protection for substantial essential industries in which our people, at the request of the Government, have invested their money shall be suppressed and yet report out a bill which goes far beyond any principle of protection and levies an embargo equivalent to a prohibitive tariff duty, which every reasonable protectionist has always heretofore repudiated.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not at this time want to go into the action taken by the subcommittee or what I said in the subcommittee or what I did in the subcommittee in relation to the dye bill or any of the other special tariff bills. In order to explain my position I would have to do that, and therefore I am going to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] not to ask it at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that; I have been in the Senate long enough to know that any action taken upon rumor is very unsafe. When Senators promise there are so many Senators who are going to vote for a measure and I ask for the names of the Senators who are going to vote for it upon that side of the Chamber or this side of the Chamber, or vote against it, I want to see the poll and check it up.

I recognize that the Senator from Washington is deeply interested in the matter, and I thought that as long as the committee had been criticized for not taking action upon the bill he refers to, I should have said what I have.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I have been striving to obtain the floor in order to ask a question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], but in view of the position he has just taken about "open covenants openly arrived at" in the Committee on Finance my question may be out of place.

I wanted to know what sort of canvass, if any, has been made of the Senate on the magnesite bill. I certainly have not been canvassed on that bill, and I have not heard of any activity approximate to that of the agitation on the dyestuffs bill with reference to the matter, and certainly I was unaware of any adverse opinion on the part of the majority of the Senate with reference to the magnesite bill.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, my understanding is that the magnesite bill is upon exactly the same footing, technically, patriotically, and sentimentally as the dyestuffs bill. Magnesite is just as essential for war-time preparation as many of the by-products which are spoken of here with such an air of sanctity as if we must look after them particularly. Magnesite is just as essential in producing certain kinds of steel as certain by-products of coal tar are essential to certain kinds of explosives. Magnesite enters very largely into military work, as some of our men who charged the pill boxes where were ensconced the machine guns learned during their experience on the western front.

I can not understand why a differentiation has been made in the committee between the two bills, and particularly I can not understand why overnight the committee should have changed its opinion so suddenly. But I understand now that whatever the reasons leading to the sudden change on the part of the committee, whatever great light the committee saw as it journeyed toward Damascus on the tariff bill, it is not to be revealed to us, because the Senator from Utah tells us it ought not to be made known to us. I suppose we will have to be content with the absence of that information just as we have had to content ourselves with the absence of other information we vainly asked for in the course of other discussion equally important.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it bears a good deal an appearance of that species of internationalism which does a great deal of boasting about its love of America when it is profitable to do so, but when it finds that following the flag of some other country yields a greater return it is perfectly willing to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The producers of magnesite themselves have told me personally that they would rather that the magnesite bill be not reported if it could not pass the Senate. That position they have taken, and I believe it is a wise one on their part. I think it is a perfectly sensible position to take.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are not taking that position at the present time. They are very anxious that the bill be reported out and put on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Then they have changed since yesterday morning?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; they have changed since yesterday morning, if that was their position yesterday morning, because I am informed of their position this morning. I think the Senator is mistaken, though he may have reasons for his position in his assumption that the bill would not pass the Senate if it is reported out of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not said it would not pass, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood the Senator's apprehension on that subject was the reason for not reporting it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is an apprehension on my part, I will say to the Senator, and I have reasons for that apprehension. I am very glad to learn from the Senator that they are unfounded, but so far I have not seen any evidence that has changed my opinion. I hope that the Senator has the correct information and I am in hopes of receiving it very shortly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In hopes of doing what?

Mr. SMOOT. Receiving the same information which the Senator intimates he has received.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think the Senator need have any apprehensions on that subject.

I wish further to quote from the report of the House committee on this bill, in that part of it which indicates that the only competitor of the United States is our late enemy, Austria:

> It was also necessary to place an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent upon the brick in order to cover the estimated difference in cost of manufacturing magnesite brick in Austria and in the United States.
> Austria since 1888 has been the sole dependence of the United States for magnesite as a refractory mineral—a mineral essential to our welfare in war and peace. Our basic industries, steel, copper, and lead, are dependent upon magnesite as linings for their furnaces, as there is no substitute for magnesite brick.
> The domestic industry was created during the war and on account of the war to furnish these basic industries the magnesite which they required to manufacture war essential material. Permits have already been given to import Austrian magnesite, and the life of the domestic magnesite industry is threatened unless a tariff is granted which will permit the American magnesite industry to maintain itself in competition with Austrian imports.

As I said a moment ago, there is a certain species of internationalism which prates about American policies until it comes to the point where it finds that a foreign investment is more profitable, and then it is perfectly willing to abandon time-honored American principles, even though the interests which are concerned are among the chief beneficiaries of the protective system. I am told that this competitor of the United States in Austria which now opposes a tariff on magnesite is a corporation which is chiefly financed in Pittsburgh, though there is no place which has received more benefit from the protective-tariff system than Pittsburgh.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I will state for the information of the Senator from Washington that while it is true that there are gentlemen in Pittsburgh who have interests in Austrian magnesite, there are also quite a number of them who have magnesite interests in the West, and I find myself very much disturbed by the conflicting communications that I receive upon that subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can appreciate the situation and embarrassment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Reading further, the report states:

> The Sixty-fifth Congress passed a bill appropriating $8,500,000 (Public, No. 322, 65th Cong.) to repay the net losses of American producers of pyrites, chrome, and other essential war minerals. Only such minerals as the Interior Department had to urge the production of were included in the bill. These minerals were not dependent alone upon Austria, as in the case of magnesite. The shortage of magnesite was prevented by the prompt action of producers who, knowing the United States was dependent upon Austria alone, were able to calculate a probable shortage during the war, and the Government was not compelled to stimulate production of magnesite. Had the magnesite producers failed to produce this material, the Government would have had to stimulate production, and then the magnesite producers would have been included in the war-mineral relief bill and have been repaid for their losses. They were not included for the above reason. The proposed tariff will not repay their losses, but will give the magnesite producers an opportunity to endeavor to earn a profit on their war investment of $3,500,000, and at the same time furnish an essential mineral to the steel, copper, and lead industries.
> The quantity of magnesite in the United States was shown by the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines to be sufficient to supply requirements of our country for 25 or 30 years, with the probability of additional development. In 1913 only one magnesite mine was operating in the United States, located in California, which produced 9,600 tons of crude magnesite per annum. In 1917, 65 magnesite mines had been developed in California and Washington, which produced 316,000 tons of crude magnesite, or sufficient to supply the steel, copper, and lead industries when Austrian importations were cut off on account of war. Only about 3 per cent of the domestic consumption of magnesite was produced in this country before the war.
> It would be manifestly a most unwise national and economic policy to fail to afford adequate protection to the industry in question and to permit it to perish, thereby reducing our country again to the position of depending upon a foreign source of supply for this absolutely essential war mineral. The President, in his message to Congress of May 20, 1919, among other things said: "There are parts of our tariff system which need prompt attention. The experience of the war has made it plain that in some cases too great reliance on foreign supply is dangerous, and that in determining certain parts of our tariff policy domestic consideration must be borne in mind which are political as well as economic."

That, Mr. President, is all that I have to say for the present. There are some other phases of the matter that I want to present later on.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the loud lamentations and the noisy objurgations of the predatory interests of the United States, which for years fattened upon the results of the tariff policies of the Republican Party, fill me with profound distress. I am greatly grieved to know that their demands for the enactment of tariff schedules of the character under which they were permitted to exploit the people when the Republicans were in power may not be realized, at least for another year. It will, of course, be heartbreaking to many of the beneficiaries of unjust and criminal tariff laws that the postponement of their demands must ensue, because, as stated by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the President of the United States would not approve of projected tariff legislation. It is interesting to ascertain the present attitude of the Republican Party toward the tariff question, and it is instructive to listen to the disclosures just made relative to its purposes when it shall again be enthroned in power. The observations of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and the statements of my colleague clearly indicate that it is the purpose of the Republican Party, if it is intrusted with power, to enact tariff legislation; and my colleague states that there will be delay in such legislation until after the next election. He indulges in the prophecy that at such election the Republicans will sweep the country, and the deduction is clear from his remarks that when they do the voracious appetite of the high-tariff beneficiaries will be satiated.

I am inclined to believe that the emphatic predictions just made by my Republican friends result from a hope and desire for Republican victory, and a misguided zeal directed by partisan predilections rather than from any tangible evidence or substantial reasons. Permit me to state to my colleague and to my Republican friends who are pluming themselves upon the Republican Party winning at the next election, and already determining what that party will do when it comes into power, that the declarations just made by them are not calculated to further their hopes or to aid their party in the approaching contest. If the Republican Party appeals to the country upon a platform demanding extortionate tariff rates and schedules, I think I may follow the example of my colleague and other Republicans and indulge in prophecy, which is that the next President of the United States will be a Democrat, and the next House of Representatives will be controlled by Democrats, and the next Senate will be dominated by Senators of the Democratic faith.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KING. I yield to my friend.

Mr. WATSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the subcommittee report to the full committee on the dyestuffs bill was unanimous and that the full committee report to the Senate was unanimous. There was no partisanship whatever involved in the discussion, nor can there be any, unless the Senator from Utah and other men like-minded seek to drag partisan politics into the discussion. There is not any partisanship in the proposition.

Mr. KNOX. The President recommended the legislation.

Mr. WATSON. Yes, of course, the President has recommended it. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me while I read what the President said, not for my benefit at all but for his benefit, because I do not claim to follow the President except on very rare occasions, and then only when he agrees with me and I find that I agree with him when I withdraw into solitude and reexamine my mental processes. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Indiana to read to me what the President says, but I wish, first, to say to the Senator that the very best work he has done in the Senate—and he has done good work—was when he followed the President of the United States. I commend to him as a safe and sure guide for his future conduct the splendid and patriotic example which he set in so often following the President, and if he will follow him more often and retreat less frequently into the solitude of his own mind, I can assure him that his services to the country will be far more productive of good and far more appreciated by the people. I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON. I do not care to follow my friend off into this inviting field. It is a subject, however, that might be discussed here to great advantage. However, inasmuch as there is no partisanship involved in this contest, I shall not follow the Senator even as closely as he follows the President, and some times that is afar off. The President in his message of December 2, 1919, said:

Among the industries to which special consideration should be given is that of the manufacture of dyestuffs and related chemicals. Our complete dependence upon German supplies before the war made the interruption of trade a cause of exceptional economic disturbance. The close relation between the manufacture of dyestuffs, on the one hand, and of explosives and poisonous gases on the other, moreover, has given the industry an exceptional significance and value. Although the United States will gladly and unhesitatingly join in the program of international disarmament, it will, nevertheless, be a policy of obvious prudence to make certain of the successful maintenance of many strong and well-equipped chemical plants.

I commend these wise words to the consideration of my friend from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I heard the President deliver the message from which the Senator has just quoted and I have also read the message and am familiar with the paragraph which he has brought to my attention. I respectfully submit that there is nothing in the words of the President which support the past tariff policies of the Republican Party. No support can be found in these words for a Dingley or McKinley Act or for the schedules found in the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act or in the selfish, un-American, and unpatriotic demands of many of the manufacturers and beneficiaries who have amassed swollen fortunes and founded criminal monopolies which were maintained and protected by Republican legislation. The words of the President just quoted are entirely compatible with the Democratic faith, and even if it were my province I could not declare them to be heretical nor unorthodox.

But I am not discussing the pending bill nor the reasons assigned to justify its passage. I express no opinion at this time concerning its merits, and would not have trespassed upon the Senate except for the observations just made by the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and the able Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The Senator from Washington is a conspicuous leader in the Republican Party. His views are entitled to great weight, and his candidacy for the Presidency gives to him additional prominence. Let me add by way of parenthesis that his colleagues in the Senate have a friendly interest in his candidacy, and are greatly interested in whatever contributes to his advancement. I listened with deep interest to the statements made by these distinguished Republican Senators, and the conclusion was inevitable that they regarded the tariff as the paramount issue before the American people. I warn my Republican friends that upon that issue they will meet an inglorious defeat. Once before, and at a comparatively recent date, the tariff rock split the Republican Party. The distinguished Senator from Iowa, the President pro tempore of the Senate, as well as other great Republicans throughout the United States, raised their voices in protest against and denunciation of the mad debauch of tariffism, if I may be permitted that expression, upon which the Republican Party had entered.

Soon after the Civil War certain interests in our country sought to control legislation in order to give them the control of the domestic market of the American people. Their purpose was to exclude foreign products, prevent competition, create oppressive monopolies and trusts, and gather from the toiling masses stupendous fortunes which would give them the control of our country and augment their power in international fields. Legislation was enacted in compliance with their demands, and their power and wealth became a menace to the Republic. Special interests exercised controlling influence in the Republic; these interests became predatory and autocratic, and from time to time they forced through Congress tariff bills which exploited the American people.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt lifted his powerful voice against the iniquities of his own party and endeavored to rescue it from the evil forces by which it was controlled and to purge it from the selfish and sinister influences by which it was guided. A brilliant Senator from Iowa, Senator Dolliver, whose untimely death the country so much deplored, in this Chamber and throughout the country denounced the infamies of Republican tariff schedules and warned his party against the certain retribution which would overtake it if it persisted in its reactionary and un-American policies. Strong men in the Republican Party affirmed that under the leadership of that party class legislation was being enacted and a plutocracy was being established which would be destructive of American liberty and of the Republic.

I need not call attention to the deadly struggle in the Republican Party, and the challenge which was made to the Republican organization by the liberal and progressive forces of that party who followed with enthusiasm and spirit the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt in the great battle which he fought in 1912. The American people repudiated Aldrichism and the reactionary tariff policies which were represented by the Republican organization and by the supporters of their candidate for the Presidency in that memorable contest.

Mr. President, there will be Republicans of standing and courage in this Chamber and throughout the United States who will not look with approval upon the spirit, if I have interpreted it correctly, that was manifested in the attitude of distinguished Republican Senators who have spoken to-day. They will not look with satisfaction upon an affirmation of a policy of their party which again commits it to the indefensible and un-American high-tariff legislation that characterized their party in the past, nor to a revival of the effete and anachronistic policies so at variance with the needs of the hour, and so reminiscent of bygone days of plunder and spoliation within and without the pale of the law.

Mr. President, it is manifest from what we hear from certain business interests and from certain Republican leaders that there is to be radical tariff legislation enacted if the Republican Party shall prevail at the coming national election. It will not be tariff legislation which looks for the replenishment of the Treasury nor to secure needed and imperative revenue. Indeed the tariff legislation demanded by certain manufacturing and other interests in our country avowedly is not for the purpose of obtaining revenue to meet the current expenses of the Government, but to prevent the derivation of revenue from importations. It will not be legislation which provides a differential based upon the higher wages paid in the United States from such as obtain in competing countries. It will be legislation in the interest of corporations and trusts and monopolies and gigantic manufacturing institutions, which will enable them to destroy competition and despoil the American consumer.

Speaking for myself, I shall welcome such an issue tendered by the Republican Party. I hope that those who control the Republican convention will have the courage to boldly declare their purpose and write into their platform policies and pledges which will harmonize with their intent to surrender to the predatory interests of the United States the control of the revenue and financial legislation to be enacted in the event of the triumph of their party. Upon this issue the result of the election will never be in doubt. The Republican Party will be repudiated, as it was repudiated in 1912, and the Democratic Party will be commissioned by the people to control for another four years the destinies of this great Republic.

Mr. President, the demands for tariff legislation coming from many of the great manufacturing and other interests of the United States which seek special privileges and advantages are not based upon any fear of successful competition from other countries or because of the necessity for protecting infant industries. Tariffs so high as to become prohibitive are demanded with equal pertinacity, whether the articles upon which the tariff is to be placed are upon the free list or the dutiable list. Many in their zeal for high tariff affect to believe that the enactment of a revenue law providing protection for substantially all products will prove the panacea for our economic and industrial ills.

Mr. President, I affirm that there can be no defense for the conduct of many of the great manufacturers of the United States who are to-day charging enormous prices for their products and making profits so staggering and so stupendous as to shock the moral sensibilities of decent people. There seems to be an absence of conscience upon the part of some of the producers and manufacturers of our country. There is no limit to their demands upon the public; they would repeal all laws forbidding combinations in restraint of trade and secure the enactment of prohibitive tariff laws so that without impediment or interruption they could despoil and plunder the American people. I denounce the unjust and oppressive exactions to which the consuming public are subjected by many of the great producers and manufacturers of our country.

Many of these corporations and enterprises are paying dividends larger than ever paid before and deriving profits beyond the dreams of avarice. Salaries and compensation are paid and expenses incurred and allowances and charges laid against the enterprises in order to diminish the income and excess-profits taxes, and yet, with all the subterfuges resorted to, the earnings are so fabulous as to excite the skepticism even of those who have knowledge of the facts. In to-day's paper I read that a certain shoe company's profits during the past year were, as I recall, six millions of dollars, two millions more than for the year 1918. These enormous profits were derived after paying all expenses, charges, taxes, excess-profits taxes, and every conceivable factor entering into the calculation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator certainly knows that the tariff has nothing to do with that, because shoes are on the free list.

Mr. KING. I am not contending that tariff is the basis of the profits of this corporation. I am speaking of the course pursued by so many of the manufacturers and controllers of industry in the United States who are taking advantage of conditions and imposing intolerable burdens upon the people. My colleague knows that many of the manufacturers and large interests in the United States, whether they are producing leather, or steel, or shoes, or woolen or cotton goods, or anything else, will, if the Republicans come into power, be heard knocking at the doors of the Senate and of the House, demanding higher tariff duties upon importations, and also the removal from the free to the dutiable list of many articles now found upon the free list.

There are, of course, thousands of corporations and individuals engaged in the manufacturing business and in other enterprises that deplore the profiteering that has characterized some business enterprises and some manufacturing institutions, and the excessive prices laid upon the people. They would be glad to join in any movement to reduce and stabilize prices and bring about normal conditions. They are satisfied with reasonable profits upon their investments, and realize that the best interests of the country, and permanent prosperity, will be promoted by conducting business in a legitimate and honest way and securing the confidence of the American people and the maintenance of a spirit of contentment throughout the land.

It is unfortunate that during the war there were some of our business men and business enterprises who manifested a spirit of selfishness that must call for severe condemnation. There were those who were willing to take advantage of their country and the American people at a time when this Nation was engaged in a titanic struggle to save civilization. In many instances the people were robbed by the extortionate demands of manufacturers and producers and the Nation was the victim of their intrigues and exploitations. Many of these same persons are the ones who are demanding special legislation at the hands of Congress and a change in tariff schedules and the imposition of duties which will commit to their hands unbridled power to impose upon the American people burdens that will prove not only oppressive but intolerable.

I think, Mr. President, that it is an act not only fatuous but unpatriotic for American manufacturers, who are now growing rich by the enormous profits which they are making, to come here and demand of the Congress of the United States that we shall augment the tariff rates, and as a pretext for the demands which they make cite conditions in Europe, point to the skill of German chemists and the German people, and direct attention to the low wages in Germany and in Europe generally. They know that it is impossible that there should be any real competition for some time to come between European countries and the United States except in some very rare instances.

Mr. President, we might derive benefit from a calm consideration of the speech delivered in this Chamber by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] a few months ago. He called attention to the distress in Germany, and, inferentially, to the prostrate condition of the people of Europe. The information conveyed to us almost daily proves the difficulty, if not impossibility, of central Europe becoming a competitor of the United States in the fields of manufactured products for a number of years to come, if at all. But there are evidences that certain interests in the United States, which in the past have profited unduly by high tariffs, plan to seize occasions such as this to urge general and special tariff legislation. Europe is prostrate; it is impossible for Germany for years to become a formidable competitor of the American people. The treaty which has been imposed upon Germany contains burdens and hardships that will make it well-nigh impossible for her to become a competitor in the manufacturing and producing fields of the world for many years; indeed, it would seem impossible for Germany to meet the obligations imposed by the treaty. We can not desire the economic destruction of Germany or any other country. There must be a spirit of tolerance, indeed of friendship, for all nations, including those who were our late enemies.

Mr. President, it has been said—and I am afraid it is true—that war made ten thousand or more millionaires in the United States. Every day we read of the stupendous profits which were made by men who had contracts with the Government, and by the manufacturers of steel and of the multitude of articles which the Government of the United States was compelled to purchase in the prosecution of the war. I was willing, of course, as everybody was, that a reasonable profit should be made, but the inordinate profits which have been made by many of the business interests of the United States gives ground for the unrest in our midst and are seized upon as pretexts by other elements of our country for demands upon their part. Mr. President, we must not permit class legislation; the interests of the American people are single, not divided; we are one people, and the spirit of this Republic and the faith of the fathers touch all alike. As Christianity is a moral and spiritual force which meets the demands and necessities of all men, so this Nation and its spirit and power must bring all into one class and integrate and coordinate all social and political and industrial elements, producing a homogeneous, progressive, and freedom-loving people.

If there is class legislation for the manufacturers or financiers, it will culminate in a demand for class legislation for labor or other factors of the country. If the rich, the manufacturers, the capitalists, secure legislation for their benefit, a cleavage in the economic and industrial structure immediately ensues, and labor will demand enactments which it conceives to be necessary for its protection and the maintaining of a proper equilibrium in the social fabric. Nor can there be complaint if labor asks for class legislation if capital has secured preferential consideration.

Mr. President, the American people are not going to be captured in the next election by any seductive phrases, nor are catchwords such as "protection" going to win their votes. They propose to examine the records of the parties, the platforms of the parties, the candidates of the parties, and they will patriotically support the party which stands for justice and equality, for the preservation of the Republic, and for the peace and prosperity and happiness of the people of our country.

The Democratic Party approaches the November election with supreme confidence. It has a record of achievement unparalleled in the history of this Republic; it has written upon the statute books within the last seven years a greater volume of constructive legislation than was enacted by the Republican Party in any two decades of its history; it carried to a successful issue the greatest war of all time; it brought prosperity to the American people and will preserve unimpaired the principles of liberty and justice which alone can save this Nation. The American people will not prove ungrateful. They will give their support to the Democratic Party and commission it to continue for four years more the duty of administering the affairs of this mighty Republic.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I do not wish to appear odd, but the few observations I intend to make will be about the measure that is before the Senate, namely, the dyestuffs bill.

I am willing to start from the premises laid down by the President of the United States in his message to the Congress, and that is upon the theory that one thing that we have learned, if we have learned anything, out of the grievous experiences of the past four years is that the forces that held the legions of civilization at bay and almost overcame them were the spectacled chemists of Germany. I agree with the President that as a measure of preparedness it is essential that there shall be built up and maintained in this country a dye industry unsurpassed by that of any other country.

I do not propose to advance the ordinary arguments that have been used to support that proposition, but I am satisfied that if Senators will pause to consider they will agree with me that the whole face of the world has been changed by the creative or synthetic chemist within the last 10 or 15 years. We have at last discovered a fundamental truth, and that is that anything that we can analyze accurately and ascertain its constituent elements that thing we can create. I was told by an eminent chemist not long ago, "If you give me a water power and a mountain of limestone, I can almost put the farmer out of business. I can make starch; I can make sugar; I can make other foods essential for the maintenance of mankind."

Mr. President, this country, with its vast wealth, with its rapid progress, with its enormous population, and the speed with which we have been moving along the pathway of civilization, has overlooked many of the things which seem small, but which, when you come to examine them critically and carefully, are perhaps among the greatest of our assets.

Why was Germany in the position that her chemists have achieved much more than the chemists of this or any other country? The simple fact is that in Germany they do not burn their coal; they roast it. They make coke as a fuel, and they utilize their by-products for their chemical purposes, and especially for the manufacture of dyes. In Germany there is not a single beehive oven. A beehive oven is the old-fashioned oven in which the coke is burned, and the gases and the smoke escape into the atmosphere. In the United States probably not more than half of the coke that is manufactured is manufactured in the by-product oven that is used exclusively in Germany. I would amaze you if I were to read to you the value of the by-products which pass off from these beehive ovens in the United States and pass up the smokestacks of the factories, where the gases and the other by-products are not utilized.

I have here a table taken from the testimony that was given before the committee, which shows the total amount absolutely wasted in the course of a year to be in value $930,188,000. It is given by States, and if there is any Senator who is curious to know the loss in his own State I shall be only too glad to read it. Referring to the State of Utah, for instance, the loss there is $9,999,000. It runs from four to eight and ten million dollars in the various States, up to the State of Pennsylvania, where the loss is $329,000,000 per annum.

Although the products of destructive distillation vary within wide limits, yet the following figures may serve to give an approximate idea of what may be got from a ton of soft coal:

From 1 ton of soft coal you get 12,000 cubic feet of gas; liquor (washings), ammonium sulphate, 7 to 25 pounds; tar, 120 pounds, from which when redistilled we get benzene, 10 to 20 pounds; toluene, 3 pounds; xylene, 1½ pounds; phenol, one-half pound; naphthalene, three-eighths of a pound; anthracene, one-fourth pound; pitch, 80 pounds; and coke, 1,200 to 1,500 pounds.

While those are the products of a ton of coal, and there are only 8 or 10 of them in number, yet the chemists will make tens of thousands of articles out of these products by the synthetic process. They make the explosives that kill and they make the medicines that cure.

Take a cord of wood, for instance. A cord of wood, 128 cubic feet, is subjected to a process of destructive distillation and yields, first, 50 bushels of charcoal, 11,500 cubic feet of gas, 25 gallons of tar, 10 gallons of crude wood alcohol, and 200 pounds of crude acetate of lime.

Mr. President, if this measure were a project to invest a billion dollars of Government money for the purpose of building up an industry that would save a billion dollars a year and be a great factor in our preparedness against another destructive war, I would favor it; but it is not that. The gentlemen who propose to build up these industries propose to do it at their own expense, and all that they ask the Government of the United States to do is to prevent for a period of three years the importation into this country of such dyes as are made here in merchantable quantities. The proposition is reasonable. It has nothing to do with the tariff. It is not a question of tariff legislation. It is a question of wise, farseeing preparedness and of wise, farseeing economy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 8078, to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. WATSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Frelinghuysen	Knox	Ransdell
Beckham	Gay	Lenroot	Sheppard
Brandegee	Glass	Lodge	Simmons
Calder	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Capper	Harrison	McNary	Spencer
Chamberlain	Henderson	Nelson	Sterling
Cummins	Hitchcock	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Thomas
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Townsend
Dillingham	Kellogg	Page	Trammell
Edge	Kendrick	Phelan	Watson
Elkins	Keyes	Phipps	Wolcott
Fernald	King	Poindexter
Fletcher	Kirby	Pomerene

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] informs me that he intends to-morrow to take up the treaty in accordance with his announcement upon the floor yesterday. Therefore I shall not press my motion and shall continue my remarks upon the dye bill. This will leave the measure that is in charge of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw his motion?

Mr. WATSON. I will permit it to stand for the present, but I do not desire to have a vote taken at this time.

Mr. President, I was speaking when interrupted some three hours ago, in answer to the Senator from Utah, with reference to the production in the United States of crudes, intermediates, and finished dyes. We had in this country in 1918 35 establishments manufacturing crudes, and they manufactured those products to the value of $22,474,000.

We had 127 factories manufacturing intermediates, whereas before the war we had but one, and they manufactured 354,808,315 pounds of intermediates, valued at $123,817,966.

We had in the United States in 1918 77 establishments manufacturing finished dyes, and they produced 57,155,600 pounds, valued at $61,306,040.

I call the attention of the Senate to the striking contrast between that home production of dye under the prohibition enforced by the war, prohibition on imports, and the 45,000,000 tons that we imported from Germany and elsewhere, largely from Germany, before the war.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, do the Senator's figures in any way show the profits in those industries during war times?

Mr. WATSON. They do not.

Mr. KENYON. The dividends that were declared?

Mr. WATSON. They do not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, can the Senator state the comparative prices charged by dye manufacturers before the war, under the 30 per cent tariff, and during the war, under practical prohibition?

Mr. WATSON. We have somewhere in the hearings an attempt to show an average price. But I want to say to the Senator that it is not a satisfactory statement, for the reason that the production up to this time has been what might be called an unbalanced production. For instance, we are making in the United States certain kinds of dyes in abundant quantities to satisfy the home demand, and in fact, last year we exported 17,000,000 pounds of dyes, instead of importing 45,000,000 pounds. The price has ranged lower on all of those products. That is the general statement that I can make and be justified by the facts.

On some of them the price is still very high, for the reason that we have not yet ascertained how to make the intermediates and how to complete the finished dye, and it will take very much more of research, and very much more of experimentation, before we do produce either a satisfactory intermediate or a finished dye.

For instance, I could give the Senator an example. Take a sulphur black, called Zambesi black. Although we are manufacturing a very great quantity of sulphur dyes in the United States, we have not yet produced an intermediate that will make that particular dye, though when the manufacturers of dyes were before our committee, several of them stated that within a very short time they would have another black that would make a suitable substitute for Zambesi black, and that it would be produced just as cheaply, whereas now none of that is being made in the United States. I mention that to show that it is not a uniform progress that we have made in the manufacture of dyes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator put into the RECORD the average price per pound of dyestuffs before the war and during the war?

Mr. WATSON. I can give the report of the Tariff Commisson very recently made, and if the Senator desires, I shall be very glad to place that in the RECORD.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was the price twice as high?

Mr. WATSON. In some instances it was, and in other instances it was not. In some rare instances where the price was twice as high it has been reduced practically now to the normal price of prewar price. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that in all the group called the azo group, and there was more of that group used than all other kinds together in the United States, and in the group called the sulphur group, some prewar prices are now had, whereas in the other groups that are more difficult to make, more difficult of composition, require more skill, the prices are not ranging so low, and may not for some time to come.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Prior to the war we were in competition with Germany in the manufacture of those articles, and the American manufacturers now have voluntarily come down, as the Senator states, to those competitive prices.

Mr. WATSON. Partially.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then what is the urgency of again installing the prohibition of imports such as we had during the war?

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NUGENT. If the Senator will yield to me for about a moment, I desire to call attention to the fact, as shown by the hearings, that at the outbreak of the war there were but six or seven establishments in the United States engaged in the manufacture of dyestuffs, and that they were not dyestuff manufacturing establishments in the ordinary acceptation of that term, because they were engaged solely in the putting together of the intermediates that were imported into this country from Germany. So, as a matter of fact, there was no vast dyestuff manufacturing industry in the United States at the outbreak of the war and there were but six or seven establishments engaged in the putting together of the intermediates that were imported into this country from Germany.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I understood the Senator from Indiana, he stated that at the present time the manufacturers of the dyestuffs to which he refers are selling them at prewar prices.

Mr. WATSON. Oh, no.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That was the Senator's statement.

Mr. WATSON I stated that some of them were being sold at prewar prices, but out of the three hundred and some different kinds of dyes that we are manufacturing but a very small portion of them are selling at prewar prices. But I did state that the prices are ranging lower on those.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator stated at any time what the emergency is which calls for pressing action upon this bill, with its prohibitory provisions?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to state to the Senator that before the war Germany had absolute control of the American market. Germany had a world monopoly, and that monopoly was in force and prewar prices were very high prices, for the reason that they were monopoly prices, the prices of the German monopoly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am asking my questions upon the basis of the statements made by the Senator from Indiana, and now the question I put to him is this: What is the existing emergency which calls for haste in the passage of this bill, which is designed practically to prohibit for three years the importation of dyestuffs from Germany?

Mr. WATSON. Simply because this is an entirely new industry, and this new industry is being unevenly developed; some prices are ranging lower, and some are not ranging lower. Some we do not manufacture at all. If you take the vat dyes, the dyes of which the Senator spoke a while ago, that are used very largely in coloring common shirtings and ginghams on account of their fastness, we are manufacturing scarcely any of those.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I understood the Senator from Indiana, he pictured to the Senate an enormous expansion of the dyestuff industry in the United States since 1914. This bill is brought in as an emergency measure, although there has been expansion in the business. What is the pressing danger? Are there imports from Germany now coming into the United States?

Mr. WATSON. No; they can not come in because we are not yet at peace.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then what is the hurry? Why is it designed to press the bill through the Senate ahead of all others at this time?

Mr. WATSON. Simply because, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, if the treaty shall be ratified, then these imports will come into this country. We have very alarming reports as to the quantity of dyes which are now on hand in Germany, so much so that the Committee on Ways and Means provided an antidumping clause to prevent large quantities of dyes being dumped into this country and competition with this new industry that we have established, because unquestionably they have at this time, I believe, from the testimony, 30,000 tons that they can send to this country, and the testimony was that 30,000 tons dumped into this country would supply the entire demands of the American textile manufacturers for a year, and thereby shut us out of the market. That is the emergency. It is an emergency proposition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is speaking of very vague reports. The committee has been engaged on this question for some time. Has it any accurate information as to the exact facts? The Senator knows that dyestuffs manufactured in Germany are eagerly desired by the whole world outside of the United States. He knows we have at this time a tariff of something like 40 per cent upon them; and he knows that the dyestuffs of Germany are from now on to a considerable extent under the control of the reparation commission. What is the urgency, therefore, under these conditions, of pushing this bill through? Is it expected that dyestuffs are likely to arrive here within the next 30, 60, or 90 days, or six months?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I have attempted partially to answer the Senator, and I will correct one statement that he made, that all the remainder of the world is trying to gobble up these German dyes, if he will permit the expression. That is far from the situation.

The truth about it is that England has adopted the license system, and not only that but England has absolutely prohibited the importation of dyes into her markets. France has established a license system. Being right on the ground they know the situation.

Mr. NUGENT. Italy also.

Mr. WATSON. Italy also. I thank the Senator. They know the quantity of dyes that Germany has; they know the chemical skill of Germany; and they know the strength and power of this great dye industry in Germany, and they propose to protect themselves by absolute prohibition against the importation into their several States. If they are in that situation, why are not we in the same situation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator surely is mistaken in some of his statements. The treaty provides that a certain proportion—my recollection is 50 per cent—of the existing dyestuffs of Germany shall be under the control of the reparation commission.

Mr. WATSON. That is quite true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And it provides that 50 per cent of all Germany's output shall be under control. The treaty also provides that France and Belgium shall have the right to demand the dyestuffs of Germany as a part of the reparation payment.

Mr. WATSON. That is quite true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is very well known that nations have been starved for lack of dyestuffs and their industries crippled for a number of years because they could not get them. In view of that condition, and the crippled condition of manufacturing industries in Germany, what is the great emergency at the present time that requires such haste in the passage of the bill?

Mr. WATSON. The great emergency is simply this, that we have established under the prohibition occasioned by war an industry. We were never able to establish it before the war because of Germany's competition. That competition is about to be restored, and in order to protect ourselves from the influx of imports we must of necessity adopt some measure. My contention is that a protective tariff is not sufficient as to a great majority of these products and can not be made sufficient. We can not make them sufficiently high, and if we do they are not susceptible of accurate administration.

Let me read to the Senator from Nebraska what the Tariff Commission says about that proposition:

> Attention has been called to the very uneven development in this country of different branches of the industry. Some, indeed, can scarcely be said to show as yet any appreciable development at all. Others, on the contrary, have attained a growth so strong and flourishing that, even if the present duties are left unaltered, they will probably be maintained against foreign competition. Between these two extremes are a great variety of products that are turned out on gradually descending scales of effectiveness and adequacy. It follows that if the rates of the present tariff are retained the industry will not be obliterated in this country, but it will probably be reduced to smaller proportions, and future development is likely to be slow and doubtful.

In other words, we would be placed exactly where we were before the war began. We will be subject to the same competition. In 1882 we had a very promising industry, the dye industry, and while I have no desire to thrust the tariff question into it, that dye industry was obliterated in the United States solely because the rates were reduced to 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator, of course, recalls that the textile manufacturers of the country, the textile industries, were at all times opposed to the imposition of a tariff duty upon dyestuffs.

Mr. WATSON. They always were.

Mr. THOMAS. They always were; and that opposition has manifested itself on the occasion of all tariff bills, whether they were Republican or Democratic. So the dye industry was largely made impossible in the United States because of the hostility of the consumers of dyestuffs, no matter what the character of the administration might be which attempted to reduce the tariff.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator is eminently right in that statement, the reason being that our manufacturers claimed that they must have their raw material as cheaply as their competitors. For instance, the color in a rag carpet may enhance the value of that carpet 3 or 4 cents a yard, and they maintained that they had to have their raw material so they could manufacture their finished product as cheaply as their competitors in order that they might sell in the open markets of the world, and therefore, very naturally, they opposed the imposition of these duties. While that is true, they got themselves in the situation where they were very nearly put out of business, and the truth about it is that if Germany had been permitted to send her textile products into this country, we undoubtedly would have been reduced to a deplorable condition at one time during the war.

Germany realized the situation, because on the 13th of March, 1915, Count von Bernstorff sent a telegram to his own Government in this language:

Serial No. 432 of March 13, 1915. It is reported to me by Hossenfelder, telegram No. 4, that the stock of dyes in this country is so small that by a German embargo about 4,000,000 American workmen might be thrown out of employment.

That was in 1915. Later on in the same year Germany attempted by the withdrawal of her supplies of dyes to force this Government into hostile action against Great Britain, and if she had had the power at that time to send her own textiles into this country in competition with ours we would, indeed, have suffered a blow from which we would have been a long time recovering; but because she was bottled up by the English fleet largely she was not able to send her textiles here, and that enabled our dye manufacturers to begin the manufacture of dyes on a very large scale, and they have continued that under favoring conditions to the present situation. If we will afford them the protection provided in this bill, there is every reason to believe that we shall soon establish this great industry on a permanent and an independent basis.

Some Senators have said to me that the relative importance of the dyes imported to this country is small. That is quite true. As compared with our great manufacturing products it is a negligible quantity, but after all, when we take into consideration the real importance of the dyes, we lose sight of that relative importance that the figures indicate and have a true conception of the genuine value of those products. In fact, I may say that the aggregate value of all the dyes manufactured in the whole world in 1914 was something less than $100,000,000. Germany produced three-quarters of them, and a total of 40,000 men and women would tell the story of all the employees engaged in the dye industry all over the world.

The truth about it is that we imported about $12,500,000 worth of dyes from Germany. Of course, by the time they had been scattered through the various agencies that sold them to the consumers the consumers paid $25,000,000. Twenty-five million dollars is but one-tenth of 1 per cent of the $25,000,000,000 output of our factories in the United States. So that apparently it is a very negligible quantity, but after all those dyes supplied 1,300,000 men working in various institutions in this country that could not work without them; and not only that, but according to the Tariff Commission in other establishments, 56,000 in number, where 1,200,000 more men were laboring, they were depending largely upon these imports of dyes from abroad.

So that in 11,000 establishments employing 1,300,000 men, and in 56,000 other establishments employing 1,200,000, there was a necessity for the dyes. Our manufacturers rose to meet that great demand under, first, the impulse of patriotism, and, of course, a legitimate desire for profit.

Now, Senators, the question has been asked as to the value of dyes in the manufacture of, first, explosives and poison gases; and, secondly, of pharmaceuticals or medicals. Let me read to the Senate, and I think it will be interesting, what was said by Dr. Bogert, who appeared before our committee as a witness in behalf of this industry. Dr. Bogert is professor of organic chemistry in Columbia University. He is also president of the American Chemical Society, a member of the raw materials division of the War Industries Board, and so forth, consulting chemist for a number of Federal departments, a member of the United States Board on Gas Warfare from its organization to its disbanding. He was appointed a lieutenant colonel in the Army, chief of the chemical service section, being acting director of the gas service in this country until the organization of the Chemical Warfare Service under Gen. Sibert, at which time he became a full colonel in the Army and remained such until his honorable discharge in May.

He was asked in regard to this matter and responded in very interesting fashion, as follows:

I would like to make this statement, Mr. Chairman, that in the first place, as one who has had experience in chemical warfare, I have no hesitation whatever in saying that a well-developed synthetic dyestuff industry is absolutely necessary for the security of our country; as an educator that such an industry is vital for the development of research in synthetic organic chemistry; and that the industry has been one of the greatest supporters of advanced research and of the cause of higher education in this country—

As was referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]—

I should like to point out further that the industry of the synthetic dyestuffs is one that touches vitally so many industries in its ramifications that there is no single branch of chemical industry in which the welfare and the happiness and the health and the prosperity and the security of our country are so wrapped up as they are in this synthetic industry. The dyestuff industry, in the first place, is responsible really for the development of the distillation of coal tar and the multitudinous applications of those products, because the by-products and the intermediate products are the products that are finally used in drugs and in photographic chemicals, and so on.

* * * * * * *

When tar is heated for distillation and these various products pass through, they are separated by fractional distillation, taking the temperature up to a certain temperature, and then changing the receiver and the tar is first separated into the rough portions, and then each one distilled, and that process is carried on until we get certain material, and each one of these materials, like benzol—I am embarrassed by the amount of material I have to draw upon for illustration—that benzol can be converted into a host of other materials; that is, into what is known as phenol, known to the layman as carbolic acid. That carbolic acid is then treated with a dilating acid and converted into a compound, one of which through a series of processes become phenacetin, a drug we are all familiar with. Or, if that carbolic acid is subjected to another treatment, if it is dilated still more, it becomes a nitric or sulphuric acid, and then it is converted into a picric acid, a powerful explosive; and the picric acid is also developed through a series of processes to become chloro-picrin, one of the poisonous gases used on the western front.

If the carbolic acid is treated in a little different way, if it is chloroformed, it is converted into a substance known as salicylate fluorid. And by the use of a sodium and acetic acid there is derived a valuable perfume known as coumarin, which is the base of many of our best perfumes, particularly the new-mown hay—which is as near as it gets to new-mown hay. On the other hand, if that is treated with carbon dioxide, which is taken from the air, it is converted into salicylic acid, which may be developed into aspirin, which we were in need of and could not develop, and Gen. Ireland, the Surgeon General of the Army, will tell you that if you ask him.

And so I might go on and elaborate and extend this story out, but I am taking only one of a host of materials. Each one of these cases, as I could show you, is dependent upon an interlocking and interrelated to the coal-tar industry, out of which Germany has made its great profit—

Not only its great profit but in a measure it prepared itself the better for war.

So that he shows the intimate relation between the dye industry and the manufacture of explosives and poison gases, so much so that a distinguished German general said that every dye plant was an arsenal; and Germany for years in making these dyes had secretly prepared herself for the manufacture of these explosives, had made them in large quantities, and had stored them against the day of war, as well as these poison gases that she used with such fatal effect before we discovered the manner in which we might at least measurably repel them.

Dr. Bogert further said:

One or two questions have also been asked here concerning the direct dependence of gas upon dyestuffs. I would like to point out, as I have already pointed out, that chlorine is a very essential ingredient, and is, in fact, the backbone of most of our toxic gases; and that it was the development of the dyestuff industry which provided Germany with an immense amount of chlorine, particularly of liquid chlorine, which she had, and which she was in a position to use at the time of the first gas attack, which was at the beginning of the second battle of Ypres on the afternoon and evening of the 22d of April, 1915.

They had, in the second place, phosgene, of which Col. Fries has spoken, which was a common product of the German dyestuff industries, because they were using phosgene for the synthesis of certain important dyestuffs and intermediates. An important intermediate which is known as Mechler's Ketone, for example, is the basis of at least a dozen valuable dyestuffs. Phosgene was also being used as the basis for the synthesis of certain useful synthetic drugs. In the case of mustard gas, these dyestuff factories had also prepared what was known as chlorohydrin, which Col. Fries has also mentioned. So they were ready in a moment to start in to make mustard gas by that process. It was the presence of these dyestuff industries with their large personnel which made possible these things which, if we had had them, would have saved American lives in the early days of our participation in the war.

Whether we are to demobilize armies and to disband navies, whether we go into war in the future, we must have these measures of preparedness. If we shall go into war, how much more nearly we shall be prepared if we have an independent dye industry in this country ready to turn out explosives and gases as measures of defense.

I might go on at great length to show what had been done in Germany, but it is not necessary because that is well understood. In this country, as the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] well knows, he being the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and familiar with this matter, we were manufacturing more gas, largely because of the dye industry which we had established, than England, France, and Germany all combined at the time of the armistice, and yet at the beginning of the war we were making practically none, showing our possibilities under favorable conditions, because what has been done is the best proof of what can be done, and we can do what Germany has done in these dye plants by way of preparedness if we but place them on a sure foundation.

Now, I desire to refer to just one other matter—and I do not wish to detain the Senate at great length on these propositions—and that is to the testimony of Dr. Stieglitz, to show the relation of dyestuffs to medicine. Dr. Stieglitz is professor of chemistry at the University of Chicago and chairman of the department at that university.

He was chairman of the committee on synthetic drugs in the National Research Council during the war and is still its chairman. He has been for 15 years connected with the council of chemistry and pharmacy of the American Medical Association, and is a very eminent authority on all these and related questions. He says:

This organic chemical industry involves three branhces—one, the explosives and the poison gases, which are used only in warfare; the second, the dyes; and the third, the synthetic drugs and synthetic medicaments and related finer organic chemicals, such as photographic developers and the like. The bulk of the work in peace times must be in dyes, because we require huge quantities of dyes; but, in my judgment, the really important feature of the synthetic work is in the synthetic drug line, because that involves the health and the future of the people of the country. It requires, however, the materials that come with the manufacture of dyes, it requires research facilities, and it requires the research men that we can get through a thriving dye industry.

Then he proceeds—and I call the attention of the Senate to the close relationship between the manufacture of these drugs and pharmaceuticals and a synthetic dye industry—

Each citizen of this country, I imagine, spends not more than 50 cents or a dollar a year on dyes. He spends quite a little more on synthetic drugs, and his health and the health of his family are involved. That is a far more vital question, and I think I can do best by giving you a specific illustration of the development of two or three drugs in this country, especially of arsphenamine, 606, or salvarsan—three different names for the same product. As you know, this is a specific for the cure of syphilis, and it is insisted on by the physician and by the patient.

Even before we started in the war importations were prevented, and the demand was so enormous that for a time absolutely fancy prices were paid for the drug. As soon as it was seen that there would be such a shortage some of the research chemists of the country started preparing arsphenamine, and the results at first, following the patent specifications, were so poor that some of these men thought of appearing in court to have the patents annulled, stating that the product could not be prepared according to the patent specifications. That was wrong; one can prepare arsphenamine according to patent specications, but just about enough to look at, not enough to use. It is altogether a question of yield. There are from three to five steps in the manufacture, and we can easily see that if the yield at each step is, say, but 10 per cent, then with only three stages the total yield would be one-tenth of 1 per cent. With five stages, which were used at first, it would be one-thousandth of 1 per cent. That is, we will use, say, 100,000 pounds of material to prepare 1 pound of arsphenamine, which is, of course, commercially impossible. I have been told that a director of the German company which controlled the German rights to arsphenamine stated that one could manufacture it according to the patent specifications, but he could not get any yield.

Showing that the patents that we took over from the German manufacturers had only a nuisance value; that is to say, if we had used them without confiscating them, when the war was over the owner of the patent might have brought suit because we took the patent from him and used its formula.

Now, let me proceed with this testimony just a little further:

This drug is exceedingly poisonous. It is injected directly into the veins of the patient, and unless it is quite pure it is likely to lead to severe reactions and even to death. Government control was instituted at an early date, and the maximum toxicity which was permitted to go into trade was 60 milligrams; that is, about a grain for 2 pounds of white rat. That was the original quality of the American product.

Now, as to the price:

The German product sold before the war—that is, before 1914—at $3.50 a dose. The first price fixed by the Federal Trade Commission was from $1 to $1.50 a dose, which showed already the tremendous advantage of American manufacture.

In the course of these two years the following developments have occurred: In the first place, the purity of the drug has risen to such an extent that the official standard, instead of being only 60, is 100 milligrams, which is over a 50 per cent improvement. But, as a matter of fact, the American brands run now from 120 to 130. There is practically none on the market now that will not run from 120 to 130. That is twice as good as it was originally. That is the result of research work of about a year and a half. In the second place, the drug is now being sold wholesale to hospitals at 60 cents, and I was told this noon some even at 30 cents a dose. That, of course, means that the drug is from five to ten times as cheap as it was before 1914, and the blessing to the country can not be overestimated.

I then asked the witness:

Was that recently discovered by chemists working in dyestuff plants in Germany?

Dr. STIEGLITZ. It was originally discovered by an organic chemist, Dr. Paul Ehrlich, and he had the cooperation of the Casella Dye Co. The crude material comes from the dye plants, and the product is very much like a dye. It is very closely related to some of the real dyes, simply containing arsenic instead of part of their nitrogen. That is the sole difference.

I might go on and discuss this feature further, but that is not essential. I have read so much in order to show that when we make dyes we not only get the dyes themselves, but we learn how to make, on the one side, explosives and toxic gases, and, on the other side, all of the synthetic drugs so essential to the maintenance of the health of the people. And, Senators, it is because of the overwhelming importance of this industry that I have been content to step aside from a protective tariff to an embargo.

The question is asked what is the difference between the House proposal for a license and the Senate proposal for an embargo. A while ago I said to the Senator from Iowa that the pending bill is an embargo measure. In one sense it does provide for an embargo, and in some instances it verges very closely upon a license system; that is to say, that one must have a permit in order to import; but, after all it is what we call in our tariff laws, as the Senator will realize if he will look it up, a selective importation measure, and such measures have been very frequently employed in the United States.

For instance, under the acts of August 20, 1912, and March 4, 1913, the entry of nursery stock is prohibited unless and until a permit for the importation thereof has been issued by the Secretary of Agriculture and unless the cases or other packages are plainly marked to indicate the nature and quantity of the contents, the district or locality and country where grown, and the name and address of the importer and consignee; which is practically on all fours with this proposition, save that we go so much further and insist that the quality shall be ascertained before the imports shall be turned loose.

Again foods, drugs, insecticides, and similar goods can only be allowed entry into the United States when found to come within the specific requirements of certain provisions of the law, such as the act of June 30, 1906. Such importations are retained in customs custody pending determination of the facts.

Viruses, serums, and toxins and analogous products for the treatment of diseases of man are prohibited entry under the act of July 1, 1902, unless—mark the language—propagated in an establishment holding an unsuspended and unrevoked license. A list of the establishments holding licenses, the number of the license, and the names of the several products produced are published periodically in the Treasury decisions. All importations of such products are detained by collectors of customs pending examination by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service. If the shipment is found to be admissible, it is released upon receipt of a report to that effect from the Public Health Service. If the articles are found not to conform to the law and the regulations, the collector refuses delivery and permits exportation or destruction under customs supervision, at the option of the importer, which is precisely what we provide in the pending measure.

Another law, the act of March 4, 1913, restricts the importation of viruses, serums, and toxins for the treatment of domestic animals.

There is a similar law (tariff act 1913, sec. 4, par. H, subsecs. 1 and 2) concerning the inspection and quarantine of animals, hides, and other products.

The importation of tea inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the standards established by the Secretary of the Treasury, under the act of March 2, 1897, is prohibited. The tea is stored in customs custody pending examination and determination of compliance with the law. Examination is made by tea examiners, subject to appeal to a board of general appraisers known as the tea board.

The importation of skins of fur seals taken in the waters of the north Pacific Ocean is prohibited by the act of August 24, 1912, and exportation is denied, destruction being required by express provisions of law. Exceptions are allowed of skins taken on certain islands or by certain persons.

In the case of skins taken by Indians or Aleuts, there must be furnished an affidavit of the shipper, a certificate by an official of the Department of Commerce specifying in detail the locality in which the skins were taken, and showing the approximate date of taking, the transfer of these skins from the person by whom taken to the shipper or importer, and the names and permanent addresses of all intermediate owners, and the dates of transfer.

All importers of opium or coca leaves or any compound, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, must register with the collector of internal revenue of the district in which his business is carried on, and before any importer is permitted to import such artcles he must file in the customhouse a certificate of such registration. There must be filed with the entry of crude or unmanufactured opium and preparations or derivatives thereof a declaration of the owner or ultimate consignee reciting, among other things, that the goods were expressly imported and intended in good faith to be used by a certain firm or corporation in the preparation of medicine, or are to be sold by a certain firm or corporation for medicinal purposes only, and that such goods are not intended to be used for smoking. Importers are required to keep a record of all sales of imported opium and derivatives and preparations of opium or of articles manufactured by them therefrom, showing the names of the purchasers, their places of business, the date of sale, and the name and quantity of the article sold, which record shall be open to the inspection of customs officers.

This is exactly on all fours with the proposition here involved—not an embargo—selective importation, if you please.

The act of January 17, 1914, provides, among other things, that special preparations rarely imported and usually imported in very small quantities and not known to be used by drug habitues, like papaverine and thebaine, may be imported in small quantities by well-known and reputable firms or institutions upon compliance with the regulations.

We extend this even to sponges.

The act of June 20, 1906, declares it to be unlawful to land, deliver, cure, or offer for sale at any port or place in the United States any sponges taken by means of diving or diving apparatus from the waters of the Gulf of Mexico or the Straits of Florida subject to two provisos: First, admitting sponges taken in certain waters; and, secondly, sponges 4 inches or more in diameter when taken from such waters.

I might also recite that the tariff act of 1913 distinguishes residents from nonresidents, and the amount of personal effects which passengers may bring into the United States, and so forth, the exemption from duty of such effects is restricted in the case of nonresidents to articles actually owned by persons arriving in the United States and in their possession abroad at the time of or prior to their departure from a foreign country and necessary and appropriate for the wear and use of such persons and intended for such wear and use and not for other persons or for sale. In a case under the Revised Statutes, section 2505, which exempted from duty wearing apparel in actual use and other personal effects of persons arriving in the United States, the proper rule, the Supreme Court declared in Astor v. Merritt (111 U. S., 202), to be applied was to exempt from duty such articles as fulfilled the following conditions:

(1) Wearing apparel owned by the passenger and in a condition to be worn at once without further manufacture; (2) brought with him as a passenger and intended for use or wear of himself or his family, who accompanied him as passengers, and not for sale, or purchased or imported for other persons, or to be given away; (3) suitable for the season of the year which was immediately approaching at the time of arrival; (4) not exceeding in quantity or quality or value what the passenger was in the habit of ordinarily providing for himself and his family at that time and keeping on hand for his and their reasonable wants in their means and habits of life, even though such articles had not been actually worn.

Exemption from duty is accorded, under paragraphs 582 and 655 of the tariff act of 1913, to professional books, implements, instruments, and tools of trade, occupation, or employment, in the actual possession of persons emigrating to the United States, owned and used by them abroad, and to works of art produced by American artists temporarily residing abroad.

Here are drugs used for immoral purposes. Such drugs are forbidden importation and entry, and are subject to forfeiture by due course of law. There is a proviso to this law "that the drugs hereinbefore mentioned, when imported in bulk and not put up for any of the purposes hereinbefore specified, are excepted from the operation of this subsection."

Another instance of this character is animals certified by the Secretary of Agriculture to be pure-bred animals of a recognized breed are entitled to entry free of duty under paragraph 397 of the tariff act of 1913, when imported by citizens of the United States for breeding purposes, whether intended to be used by the importer himself or for sale for such purposes.

This provision regards—and I call the attention of my friend the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] to this—first, the thing imported; second, the importer; and third, the purpose. The Secretary of Agriculture must determine and certify certain facts. To that end he must investigate and keep records; duties also devolve upon the importer. Furthermore, both the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury have the duty of prescribing regulations for the enforcement of this provisions—the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture to be for determining the purity of breed and the identity of the animal and the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury to be for the strict enforcement of the provision.

So that the proposition we have here embodied is not new to our tariff legislation, but is in entire keeping with well-established precedents, and is entirely different and as wide apart as the North is from the South or the East from the West from the license system proposed by the Longworth bill in the House.

There is much more that might be said on this question, but I presume the debate will proceed for several days, and there will be yet other opportunities to develop other phases of the question; but, Senators, I believe that this matter is of overwhelming importance. I am an old-fashioned protectionist. I have even been accused—of course wrongly—of being a standpatter; but I have never believed in a license system. I have always believed it to be entirely obnoxious to our form of government.

I do not like an embargo any better than anybody else; but, after all, even if you call this an embargo, I believe that because of the conditions that surround this industry at the present time, and because of the disastrous effects that will come to it by imports from Germany in the future, we should protect it, and protect it beyond all cavil, beyond all dispute, and place it where it may be established on a firm and independent basis, so that we may have within our own borders not only a dye industry but also an industry that will enable us to produce these great measures of preparedness which we will not have without a dye industry, and also those drugs and pharmaceutical supplies so essential to the maintenance of the health of the people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8078.

Mr. WATSON. I withdraw the motion.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Glass	Moses	Smoot
Brandegee	Harris	Norris	Spencer
Capper	Henderson	Nugent	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Thomas
Cummins	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Dial	King	Phipps	Wadsworth
Elkins	Kirby	Pomerene	Watson
Fernald	Knox	Ransdell
Fletcher	Lodge	Sheppard
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Simmons

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 26, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 25, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, increase, we beseech Thee, our longings for the eternal principles of right which Thou hast woven into our souls.

Honesty is the basis of all that is best in man. Honesty for the sake of policy is selfishness. Honesty for the sake of honesty is truthfulness, purity, nobility of soul, God-like. What is true of the individual is true of the nation. The dishonest man, the dishonest nation, seeks refuge in deceit. Diplomacy, if it is honest, is good. Diplomacy, if it is dishonest, is destructive.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10453. An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

PREFERENCE RIGHTS TO SOLDIERS; OREGON RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. What I wish to extend my remarks on is this: This Congress passed House joint resolution 20, reported from House Committee on the Public Lands and approved February 14, 1920, by the President, giving qualified persons who performed military or naval services in the war with Germany preference rights to enter lands hereafter thrown open to entry. There is an area of about 360,000 acres soon to be opened to entry in the Oregon & California Railroad land grants in the State of Oregon. A small part of this land is in the State of Washington. The Interior Department has just formulated regulations concerning these preference rights to these entries. I wish to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein the regulations formulated by the Interior Department.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman about these preference rights of which he is talking. Suppose John Smith, a civilian, never having had anything to do with the war, filed on 160 acres, and a soldier comes along subsequently and files on it. Who has the preference?

Mr. SINNOTT. The preference right begins May 10 and ends July 8, but under the regulations soldiers will have a right to file applications commencing with April 12, at 9 o'clock a. m., for 60 days, or until May 8. After July 9 the lands are thrown open for general entry.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, how does the preference right work?

Mr. SINNOTT. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I say how does this preference right work?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, for a period of 60 days, beginning May 10, soldiers have the exclusive right to make entry, and no one else during that period may file application and defeat the soldiers' applications; but the soldier may file his application April 12 and up to May 10. All soldier applications between April 12 and May 10 will be treated as filed simultaneously and allowed as of May 10, but after July 9, 1920, the lands are open to general entry.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And soldiers stand on the same footing with the others after 60 days?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; after July 9, 1920.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do civilians have time before these 60 days begin ?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; they have no time before the 60 days, except a few settlers who have been on the land since December 1, 1913.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this one of the bills which have been reported by the Committee on the Public Lands?

Mr. SINNOTT. This is a bill which was reported from the House Committee on the Public Lands and is now the law. It was House joint resolution No. 20, and is now public resolution No. 29, Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. GARD. It is now the law?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. GARD. It is not one of the bills which are to be considered in the future?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; it is now a law. The following is a copy of the law:

[Public resolution No. 29, Sixty-sixth Congress (H. J. Res. 20).]

Joint resolution giving to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of homestead entry.

Resolved, etc., That hereafter, for the period of two years following the passage of this act, on the opening of public or Indian lands to entry, or the restoration to entry of public lands theretofore withdrawn from entry, such opening or restoration shall, in the order therefor, provide for a period of not less than 60 days before the general opening of such lands to disposal in which officers, soldiers, sailors, or marines who have served in the Army or Navy of the United States in the war with Germany and been honorably separated or discharged therefrom or placed in the Regular Army or Naval Reserve shall have a preferred right of entry under the homestead or desert-land laws, if qualified thereunder, except as against prior existing valid settlement rights and as against preference rights conferred by existing laws or equitable claims subject to allowance and confirmation: Provided, That the rights and benefits conferred by this act shall not extend to any person who, having been drafted for service under the provisions of the selective service act, shall have refused to render such service or to wear the uniform of such service of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make any and all regulations necessary to carry into full force and effect the provisions hereof.

Approved, February 14, 1920.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Are these 360,000 acres all in the State of Oregon?

Mr. SINNOTT. They are all in the State of Oregon except a small portion in the State of Washington.

Mr. BLANTON. This particular order and the rules and regulations prescribed, as mentioned by the gentleman, relate only to this tract of 360,000 acres of Oregon land?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes, as I understand.

Mr. BLANTON. In regard to other lands which may be thrown open under this resolution No. 20 for entry and sale to soldiers, other rules and regulations will be promulgated later on?

Mr. SINNOTT. Undoubtedly they will be formulated, if they have not been.

Mr. BLANTON. None of these lands in Oregon mentioned by the gentleman will be open for entry prior to April 12, as I understood from the gentleman?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; that is correct; but a few settlers on the land since December 1, 1913, have preference rights.

Mr. BLANTON. And these regulations give full directions to any soldier who would like to make entry there, showing him how to file his entry upon this land?

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. They are to be filed, of course, with the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. SINNOTT. With the local land office.

Mr. BLANTON. That is, the local land office receives the application, and it is passed upon finally by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SINNOTT. Eventually, yes; but first by the register and receiver, and then by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Under the law and rules and regulations, does the soldier have to go to Oregon in order to make his entry, or can he make his application through an agent, as the soldiers of the Civil War could make application?

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not recall whether the regulations touch upon that or not. I just got them this morning, but I understand that applications must be made at the local land office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The regulations referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 24, 1920.

INFORMATION—RESTORATION OF OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD GRANT LANDS.

The area of lands of class 3 restored to homestead entry by the order exceeds somewhat 360,000 acres. Particular attention, however, is called to the fact that while classified as agricultural under the law, considerable portions of these lands are not adapted to cultivation.

The time when settlers who resided on such lands since December 1, 1913, must exercise their preference right of entry begins 9 o'clock a. m., April 12, and ends 4.30 p. m., May 8, 1920.

Qualified persons who performed military or naval service during the war with Germany and who were honorably separated or discharged from such service, or were placed in the Regular Army or Naval Reserve, are given, under the provisions of House joint resolution No. 20, approved February 14, a preference right of 60 days within which to make homestead entry on said lands. The period of such preference right begins May 10 and ends July 8, 1920. Beginning at 9 o'clock a. m., April 12, persons entitled to the provisions of H. J. Res. 20 may file application under the homestead law in the land district in which the land is situated. Such applications will be subject to the preference-right applications of settlers who maintained their residence on the lands since December 1, 1913. All applications by qualified persons under H. J. Res. 20 filed after 9 o'clock a. m. April 12 and before 4.30 p. m. May 8, 1920, will be treated as filed simultaneously, and where not in conflict with settlers' preference right applications, or with each other, will be allowed on May 10. Such applications will be rejected if in conflict with entries or applications by preference-right settlers, and if in conflict with each other a drawing will be held on May 14 to determine such conflicts.

Lands not applied for or entered by preference-right settlers or by those entitled to preferences under H. J. Res. 20, will be subject to entry under the general provisions of the homestead law as modified by said act of June 9, 1916, on and after July 9, 1920.

The greater portion of the land is situated in the Roseburg, Oreg., land district. Small portions are in the Lakeview and Portland, Oreg., and Vancouver, Wash., land districts.

Copies of regulations and schedule of the land will, as soon as printed, be furnished by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on request.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 24, 1920.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING RESTORATION OF A PORTION OF THE LANDS TITLE TO WHICH WAS REVESTED IN THE UNITED STATES BY THE ACT APPROVED JUNE 9, 1916 (39 STAT., 218).

THE SUPERINTENDNET OF SALE, OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD GRANT LANDS.

SIR: The act approved June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., 218), revested in the United States the title to which are known as the Oregon & California railroad grant lands; required that such lands, after examination in the field, be classified as, class 1, power-site lands; class 2, timberlands; class 3, agricultural lands; provided for the reservation, subject to additional legislation, of lands of class 1; extended preference rights of entry to qualified persons who since December 1, 1913, resided on lands of classes 2 and 3, under the conditions therein prescribed; and authorized the restoration of lands of class 3 under the general provisions of the homestead laws as modified by said act.

Pursuant to the authority of said act, it is directed that all such lands of class 3 described in the attached list, and all surveyed lands of classes 2 and 3 to which a preference right of entry attached, and is still existent, under the provisions of the said act of June 9, 1916, whether included in such list or otherwise, situated in the Vancouver, Wash., Portland, Roseburg, and Lakeview, Oreg., land districts, be restored to entry and settlement under the general provisions of the homestead laws as modified by said act, and subject to the preference rights conferred by said act and House joint resolution No. 20, giving to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of homestead entry, approved February 14, 1920, in the manner hereinafter indicated, and not otherwise: Provided, That if the settlers on lands of class 2 shall not avail themselves of the preferences to which they are entitled, the lands thereby affected shall not be otherwise subject to disposition hereunder.

SEC. 1. Explanation of words and terms used herein: To avoid repetition, and for a full understanding thereof, the following words and terms, as hereinafter employed, unless otherwise indicated by the context, shall be construed to mean:

"General law": Section 2289, Revised Statutes, as amended and as modified by the act of June 9, 1916. (39 Stat., 218.)

"The proviso": The proviso to section 5 of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., 218), extending preference rights, under the conditions and limitations therein provided, to qualified persons who since December 1, 1913, resided on lands of classes 2 and 3.

"H. J. Res. 20": House joint resolution No. 20, approved February 14, 1920, giving to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of entry.

"Minor soldier": A person under 21 years of age at the date of executing his homestead application, who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the war with Germany, and who was honorably discharged or separated from such service, or was placed in the Regular Army or Navy Reserve, and who did not refuse to perform such service or to wear the uniform thereof. (See eighth section of the act approved Aug. 31, 1918 (40 Stat., 955); joint resolution amending said sec. 8, approved Sept. 13, 1918 (40 Stat., 960); departmental regulations under said sec. 8, as so amended, of Oct. 9, 1918, circular 622 (46 L. D., 451); and H. J. Res. 20.)

"Application": A homestead application under section 2289, Revised Statutes, as amended, and as modified by the act approved June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., 218), on the usual form, and accompanied by all payments required; whether under the general law, the proviso, House joint resolution 20, or by a minor soldier, there must be included therein or be attached thereto a sworn statement, executed before an officer authorized to administer oaths in such cases, setting forth all the facts essential to the allowance of such application.

"Declaratory statement": A declaration, under oath, accompanied by the proper payments, by a person entitled to exercise the right that he intends to enter the described tract of land under the provisions of the homestead laws. Under sections 2304, 2307, and 2309, Revised Statutes, as amended, an officer, soldier, sailor, seaman, or marine who served for not less than 90 days in the United States Army or Navy during the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, or the Philippine insurrection, and who was honorably discharged, and, if he be dead, his widow, if unmarried, and in case of her death or remarriage his minor orphan children by guardian duly appointed, may file such a declaratory statement, either in person or by agent; and under the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919 (40 Stat., 1161), the officers, soldiers, and nurses of the Army, and sailors, seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States, who served for more than 90 days in the Army or Navy in connection with the Mexican border operations or during the war with Germany and its allies, may file such declaratory statements in person, but not by agent. Particular attention is directed to the fact that the preference rights conferred by the proviso and by House joint resolution 20 can not be supported by declaratory statements but must be protected or exercised through homestead applications. Such declaratory statements should therefore not be filed until the land becomes subject to disposition under the general law.

The words "officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines" as employed in House joint resolution 20 are generic terms, and embrace privates, seamen, nurses, and all other persons, male or female, who, by enlistment or otherwise, were regularly enrolled in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States and who could not voluntarily terminate such service, but does not include civilian employees or officers, nurses, or members of other organizations not so enrolled in the Army or Navy.

SEC. 2. Payments required with all classes of applications and declaratory statements: (a) Applications: A fee of $5, if the area be less than 81 acres and $10 if 81 acres or more; commissions at the rate of 3 per cent on lands at $2.50 per acre, or a flat rate of 7½ cents per acre; and, in addition thereto, 50 cents per acre for the area embraced in the application, as first installment of the purchase price of the land, must be paid.

(b) Declaratory statements: There must accompany a declaratory statement, which may be filed after the land becomes subject to disposition under the general law, a filing fee of $3 and a sum equivalent to 50 cents per acre for the area included in such statement; and if an entry is made pursuant to such statement the fee and commissions required with other applications must be paid and the moneys deposited with the declaratory statement as the first installment of the purchase price will be applied.

SEC. 3. Execution and presentation of applications and declaratory statements: (a) Any application, except that by a minor soldier, must be sworn to by the applicant before the register or receiver of the United States land office for the district in which the land is situated, or before a United States commissioner, or judge, or clerk of a court of record residing in the county in which the land is situated, or before any such officer who resides outside the county and in the land district and is nearest or most accesible to the land. After an application has been so executed it may be presented to the register or receiver of the proper land office in person, by mail or otherwise. No person shall have pending more than one application.

(b) Declaratory statements filed in person must be executed before one of the officers, and may be filed in the manner indicated for the execution and filing of applications. Where filed by an agent, a soldier may execute the power of attorney before any officer of the United States having a seal and authority to administer oaths, but the agent's affidavit must be executed before one of the foregoing officers.

(c) A minor soldier may execute his application before any officer authorized under the laws of the State of Oregon to administer oaths. Among those qualified may be mentioned notaries public or clerks of courts of record in the United States, and Diplomatic or Consular officers of the United States. In connection with the applications of minor soldiers, particular attention is invited to the limitations and conditions attaching to entries made thereunder by joint resolution approved September 13, 1918 (40 Stat., 960), and departmental regulations, Circular 622 (46 L. D., 451).

SEC. 4. Preference rights under the proviso: (a) Filing application: An application for a preference right under the proviso must be filed in the land office in which the land is situated on or after 9 a. m., standard time, April 12, and prior to 4.30 p. m., standard time, May 8, 1920, and unless so filed all rights under the proviso will be forfeited.

(b) Showing required: The prior exercise of the homestead right by any such applicant will be no bar to entry, but with this exception: Such person must make the same showing required of other applicants under the general law. A person entitled to a preference right under the proviso may enter lands of either class 2 or class 3, but not of class 1. The exercise of the right is limited to the quarter section upon which such person has resided. He can not, therefore, embrace in his application lands of more than one quarter section. If the quarter section upon which he has resided contains no more than 1,200,000 feet, board measure, of timber, he must enter the entire quarter section. He can not select therefrom the desirable subdivisions and leave unentered any portion thereof. If such quarter section contains more than 1,200,000 feet, board measure, of timber, the right is limited to the tract or lot or lots containing approximately 40 acres, upon which the principal improvements of the settler are situated, and he may enter no more. He must file with his application to enter, and make a part thereof, his sworn statement showing that since December 1, 1913, he has resided on the tract applied for at least seven months in each year, and that he has improved the land, and has devoted some portion thereof to agricultural use; and he must describe such improvements and indicate such agricultural use and the area so affected; and where the entry is sought for land containing more than 1,200,000 feet, board measure, of timber on the quarter section he must show that his principal improvements are situated on the tract or lot or lots containing approximately 40 acres applied for. While a preference-right settler under the proviso must protect his rights by an application to enter, and not by filing a declaratory statement, he may, if otherwise entitled thereto, and he has entered the military or naval service of the United States, avail himself of the applicable privileges conferred by chapter 420, joint resolution approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 671), and the acts approved July 28, 1917 (40 Stat., 248); October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 391); December 20, 1917 (40 Stat., 430); and March 8, 1918 (40 Stat., 440).

(c) Disposition of applications: Applications under the proviso will be examined and acted upon by the register and receiver as soon after their receipt as may be. They will be allowed, rejected, or suspended, as the facts may warrant. An application meeting all the requirements herein for lands of class 2 or class 3 will be allowed. An application materially defective in substance, or not accompanied by proper payments, or for unsurveyed lands, or for lands the title to which is covered by an outstanding contract, or for lands classified in class 1 will be rejected. An application accompanied by the proper payments and the showing entitling the person filing it to a preference right, will be suspended if the land embraced therein has not been classified, or the title thereto is in dispute or is in process of adjudication.

(d) Final proof: After entry a preference right claimant, under the proviso, must comply with the law in the manner required of other entrymen, but he may submit proof at any time when he is able to show that he is entitled to final entry.

SEC. 5. Preference rights under H. J. Res. 20. (a) Units: To avoid confustion in the disposition of the applications and to provide equal opportunity, as far as may be, the lands of class 3 affected hereby have been arranged into units of approximately 160, 120, 80, and 40 acres, respectively, and all persons, excepting those asserting preference rights under the proviso, shall, prior to May 22, 1920, observe such units in filing their applications to enter. No person will be allowed to embrace in his application the lands in more than one unit nor leave unentered any portion of the unit invaded. A person who, under the law, must restrict his application to to less than 160 acres, or who desires to enter a less quantity, must select a unit conforming in area to his qualifications or desires. On and after 9 o'clock a. m., standard time, May 22, 1920, any lands of class 3 restored hereunder may be entered in the form authorized by the homestead laws, without reference to the units designated herein.

(b) Presentation of applications: Any person qualified under the general law and who is entitled to exercise the preference right conferred by H. J. Res. 20 may, on and after 9 o'clock a. m., standard time, April 12, 1920, execute and present his application to the local office for the district in which the land applied for is situated. Such application will be subject to the rights of the preferred claimants under the proviso.

(c) Showing required: Any person seeking to avail himself of the special privileges conferred by H. J. Res. 20, must show either as a part of his application, or by an accompanying statement sworn to before an officer qualified to execute homestead applications hereunder, that he served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps on and after April 6, 1917. He must give the approximate period of service and name the unit or units in which such service was performed, and that on (stating date) he was honorably separated or discharged from such service, or placed in the Regular Army or Navy Reserve, and that he did not refuse to perform such service or to wear the uniform thereof. He should attach to his application a copy of his honorable discharge or separation, or the order placing him in the Regular Army or Navy Reserve, as the case may be, certified as correct by an officer with a seal, but he will not be required to file the original order of discharge or transfer. A minor soldier must show in addition to the above that he was under 21 years of age at the date of the execution of his application.

(d) Disposition of applications: All applications presented hereunder received by the register and receiver on and after 9 o'clock a. m., standard time, April 12, 1920, and prior to 4.30 p. m., standard time, May 8, 1920, shall be treated as filed simultaneously, and where there is no conflict such application, if in proper form and accompanied by the required payments, will be allowed on May 10, 1920. If such applications conflict, in whole or in part, the rights of the respective applicants will be determined by a public drawing, to be conducted under the supervision of the superintendent of sale, Oregon & California Railroad grant lands, at the United States land offices in which the land is situated, beginning at 10 o'clock a. m. on May 14, 1920. The names of the persons who presented the conflicting applications will be written on cards, and these cards shall be placed in envelopes upon which there are no distinctive or identifying marks. The envelopes shall be thoroughly and impartially mixed, and after being mixed shall be drawn one at a time by some disinterested person. As the envelopes are drawn the cards shall be removed and numbered, beginning with No. 1, and fastened to the applications of the proper persons, which shall be the order in which the applications shall be acted upon and disposed of. If an application can not be allowed for any part of the land applied for, it shall be rejected. If it may be allowed for a part but not for all the land applied for, the applicant shall be allowed 30 days from receipt of notice within which to notify the register and receiver what disposition to make thereof. During such time he may request that his application be allowed for the land not in conflict and rejected as to the land in conflict, or that it be rejected as to all the land applied for, or he may apply to have the application amended to include other lands which are subject to entry, and to inclusion in his application, provided he is the prior applicant. If an applicant fails to notify the registrar and receiver what disposition to make of the application, it will be rejected as to all the land applied for. Applications presented after May 8 will be received and noted in the order of their filing, and will be acted upon and disposed of in the usual manner, after all such applications presented on or before that date have been acted upon and disposed of.

(e) Disposition of moneys: Moneys tendered with applications on or before May 8 will be deposited by the receiver of the local land office to his official credit, and properly accounted for. When a homestead application is allowed in whole or in part, the sums required as fees, commissions, and purchase money will be properly applied, and any moneys in excess of the required amount will be returned to the applicant. Moneys tendered with applications which are rejected in whole will be returned. If an applicant fails to secure all the land applied for, and amends his application to embrace other lands, the moneys theretofore tendered will be applied on account of the required payment under the amended application. If it is not sufficient the applicant will be required to pay the deficiency, and if it is more than sufficient the excess will be returned. Moneys returned to applicants will be by official check of the receiver. Moneys tendered with applications presented after May 8 will be deposited by the receiver in the usual manner.

(f) Termination of preference right period under House joint resolution 20: The 60-day preference right period provided by House joint resolution 20 begins on May 10, the first day on which applications thereunder may be allowed, and terminates on July 8, 1920.

SEC. 6. Applications under the general law: Beginning 9 o'clock a. m., standard time, July 9, lands of class 3 restored hereunder will become subject to disposition under the general law. To the end that the applications and declaratory statements under the general law may be disposed of in an orderly manner, such applications and declaratory statements may be filed in the office of the district in which the land is situated on and after July 1, 1920, and such applications and declaratory statements, together with those filed or presented at 9 o'clock a. m., standard time, July 9, shall be treated as filed simultaneously, and disposed of in the manner required by section 5 (d) hereof, the drawings, if necessary hereunder, to be conducted at the several land offices, beginning at 10 o'clock a. m., standard time, July 12. Applications and declaratory statements under the general law will be rejected if found to conflict with entries or applications under H. J. Res. 20 filed prior to July 9. When the lands become subject to entry under the general law, those entitled to preference rights under the proviso or H. J. Res. 20, and who failed to avail themselves of such preference rights, may proceed on terms of equality with other qualified persons. Moneys deposited with declaratory statements as part of the purchase price will, if such declaratory statements are allowed, be retained until such time as entry may be made thereunder, and if no entry be made within the time prescribed by law such moneys will then be returned.

SEC. 7. Settlement before entry: On and after 9 o'clock a. m., standard time, July 13, 1920, rights to lands of class 3 restored hereunder may be initiated by settlement before entry in the manner recognized by the general provisions of the homestead laws.

SEC. 8. Compliance with law after entry; final proof: Section 2301, Revised Statutes, does not apply, and no entry made under the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., 218), may be commuted. No patent will be issued until the entryman can show that he has resided on the land for three years, in the manner required by the homestead laws, and has cultivated a sufficient area thereof to demonstrate his good faith. Such an entryman may apply military or naval service in lieu of such residence, to the extent authorized by the homestead laws, and he may otherwise enjoy the privileges accorded to other entrymen under such laws. The act approved February 25, 1919 (40 Stat., 1161), extends the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes, touching credit for military service in lieu of residence under the homestead law, to all such service rendered in connection with the Mexican border operations or during the war with Germany and its allies.

SEC. 9. Contests: Entries hereunder, whether allowed under the proviso, H. J. Res. 20, or the general law, will be subject to contest for any reasons affecting their legality, in the same manner that has been or may be provided hereafter for other entries under the homestead laws.

SEC. 10. Final payments: When final proof is submitted the entryman must pay final commissions at the rate of 3 per cent on lands sold at $2.50 per acre and the last installment of the purchase price, to wit, $2 per acre for the area included in the entry.

Very respectfully,

CLAY TALLMAN, Commissioner.

Approved:

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute to make an explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I presume none of us believe everything printed in the newspapers, but when an article is sent out by the Associated Press and is printed on the front page of a metropolitan journal like the Evening Star I assume we all would feel that we could regard it as absolutely truthful. On Monday, at the close of the addresses on President Washington, unanimous consent was granted at my request to have read from the Clerk's desk a newspaper clipping taken from the Star of February 22, which contained an extract from a speech delivered by Abraham Lincoln in 1842 on the life and public services of Gen. Washington.

This clipping contained the statement that it had never before been printed, not even in the life of Lincoln by Nicolay and Hay. Mr. Lucien Hugh Alexander, of Philadelphia, is quoted as having made the statement that this extract from Mr. Lincoln's address had never before been in print, and that he had discovered it in the Sangamon Journal, of Springfield, Ill., on file in the Congressional Library. On inquiry I find, as a matter of fact, that not only this portion of Mr. Lincoln's address was printed in the Nicolay and Hay history, but the entire address delivered on that particular occasion. It has also appeared in other histories of Lincoln and in certain magazines. I therefore ask unanimous consent, in the interest of historical accuracy, that this portion of the RECORD of Monday, the 23d of February, containing this clipping, be excluded from the permanent RECORD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what objection can the gentleman have, even though he was inadvertently deceived as to the authenticity of this statement?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Simply this: By continuing this statement in the permanent RECORD we are perpetrating a falsehood, which we should never undertake to do. It is very evident that Mr. Alexander made a misstatement or was misquoted, and the statement should not, in my opinion, be continued in the permanent records of Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But does not the gentleman think that people might want copies of that speech, although these facts were stated inadvertently, and that it might be desirable to have it perpetuated?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is perpetuated in the authentic histories of Lincoln.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I will.

Mr. FESS. Is this a statement from Mr. Lucien Alexander, of Philadelphia?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. FESS, I express to my colleague great surprise if Mr. Alexander——

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Let me read a portion of the clipping for the information of the gentleman from Ohio, who was not here on Monday.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Alexander is one of the recognized expert research men of America.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Let me quote:

Mr. Alexander, a student of Lincoln, came upon the unknown address while on historical research work. He declared that in his judgment it is destined in the years to come to be read or recited at virtually every celebration of Washington's birthday the country over.

I now quote from Mr. Alexander's statement:

"Hay and Nicolay, and also Ida Tarbell, missed it," he said, "and so have all of Lincoln's biographers, so far as I can discover. Indeed, I believe this is the only encomium extant by Lincoln upon the Father of his Country; and if so, its importance from a purely historical and sentimental standpoint can not be overestimated. This really wonderful quotation will be sure to link their names together in a most unusual and beautiful way from now on every February 22."

On yesterday I read from the Nicolay and Hay History of Lincoln not only this extract but found there the entire address that was delivered and from which it was quoted.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I will.

Mr. IGOE. If you get this consent, you will take it out of one issue of the RECORD and put it into another.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. We have it in the daily issue of the RECORD, but we should exclude it from the permanent RECORD.

Mr. IGOE. It will be in the permanent RECORD that carries to-day's debate. I would also suggest that the gentleman should exclude to-day's debate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think it ought to go in the RECORD.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the House bill 12610, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000; assistant to the Secretary, $5,000; three Assistant Secretaries, at $5,000 each; clerk to the Secretary, $3,000; executive clerk, $2,400; stenographer, $1,800; three private secretaries, one to each Assistant Secretary, at $1,800 each; Government actuary, under control of the Treasury, $4,000; clerks—one of class 4, four of class 3, two of class 2; chief messenger, $1,100; two assistant chief messengers, at $1,000 each; messengers—three at $900 each, five at $840 each; in all, $69,600, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Page 33, line 20, strike out the following: "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, but not on this paragraph, under a motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order on this particular paragraph.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I want just five minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The trouble is we have been granting too many of these five minutes during the reading of the bill; and there will be opportunity for the gentleman when we get to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

For two additional Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury at the rate of $5,000 each per annum, in accordance with the authority contained in the deficiency appropriation act approved October 6, 1917, and for a private secretary to each of the said Assistant Secretaries at the rate of $1,800 each per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated to provide for their compensation from July 1, 1920, to a date not later than six months after the termination of the present state of war.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I have not taken up much time and do not propose to take up much, but I want to talk about the general question of economy to some extent in connection with this item, as well as in connection with the whole bill. I want to ask the Members of the House to read the part of the RECORD of to-day which shall contain what I shall ask to insert in it in reference to the Department of Commerce and the items in this bill affecting it. That department, in my opinion, is one of the most important departments we have now to legislate for.

The world will be new after this war. I want to call the attention of the entire membership to the estimates of appropriations made and furnished the Committee on Appropriations and the testimony before the committee with reference to the necessity for the appropriations asked for by this department. The department asked for $1,658,420 for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, but that bureau's appropriations were cut down to $487,470. We whose committee work is directly related to our foreign commerce feel a deep interest in this subject, so much so that when we saw this cut we apppreciated its unfortunate consequences and asked the Secretary of Commerce to appear before us—that is, before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries—and give us such information as we thought essential to our full and clear understanding of the matter. I want it understood that this action of our committee was not at the instance of the Department of Commerce, but on our own initiative. We asked the Secretary to come before us. Instead he sent Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Brock, whom we examined at length, and it seems to me that every Member of the House ought to familiarize himself with the testimony taken by us, bearing specially on the appropriations for the support of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The whole appropriation for the Department of Commerce in this bill seems to indicate a complete lack of appreciation. That department to us is of the utmost importance, and it is important not preeminently to the agricultural interests I represent but to the great manufacturing interests of the Northeast, and it is of great importance to every section of the country. The particular proposition in this bill which I want the Members as a whole, Democrats and Republicans, to study is the cutting down of the service of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce by removing from it certain of its necessary and important officials. The whole commercial attaché system, which every other prominent nation is increasing and strengthening, is wiped out by this bill. The foreign trade commissioners are reduced to uselessness almost, and in every way there has been a tendency to lop off and cut and slaughter.

And this at a time when every European country, especially Great Britain, is earnestly, actively, and intelligently bending every energy toward expanding and developing its commerce. They are increasing the numbers of their commercial attachés and trade agents, while we are dismissing. They are doing everything in their power to occupy and hold the territory that is opening up everywhere for trade, while we by this bill are deliberately retiring from the field. If we pursue the policy indicated by this bill, we become among the civilized nations the sleeping-merchant nation of the world, the goods on our shelves and in our warehouses, all that we can not consume ourselves, being covered with dust, while our commercial rivals and competitors go out and supply the market and secure the trade of the world. Surely, Mr. Chairman, we have little need and no possibility of a great merchant marine if our Government intends to pursue a policy that will help to leave the markets of the world to our competitors.

It may be economy in a way to cut down the expenses of this great department by abolishing its essential agencies for the advancement of our commercial interests, but it will be an economy that will blast our fairest hopes of commercial and industrial expansion and unrivaled national prosperity. It is as if a physician, seeking to aid a patient, forgot all his other remedies except that of the surgeon's knife. It is cut, cut, cut, with reason and without reason, and it does seem to me that while we talk about "economy" a policy which economizes by the destruction of essential elements of prosperous and successful commerce ought to be well looked into. We want our ships to carry our products to every port of the world, and to bring back to us the goods our country shall import, and to that end we ought to increase and not decrease the means and agencies that will help our producers and consumers, our sellers and buyers, our exporters and importers, in the world-trade war.

Mr. Chairman, I ask to extend my remarks on this question by the insertion in the RECORD of an interview given out to the Associated Press by the Secretary of Commerce on the 19th of this month. It is mild, it is modest, it is rational, and I invite every Member of Congress who knows the Secretary, Judge Alexander, to weigh it. I also wish to insert such of the testimony as I think appropriate to the subject taken before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries yesterday, and to that end I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The interview referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 19.

"American trade with the world is endangered by the action of the Appropriations Committee in cutting down the foreign trade estimates of the Department of Commerce from $1,658,000 to $490,000," Secretary Alexander declared Thursday in a formal statement.

"This is the most serious blow ever aimed from within at our foreign trade," the Secretary said. "The sum allowed is only one-half the appropriation now used.

"At the very time when the European and Japanese Governments are striving to perfect their trade-promoting machinery through enormously increased appropriations, this bill proposes to scrap the American machine, the most effective and smoothest running that any Government has ever been able to assemble.

HANDICAP TO AMERICA.

"When our rivals have an almost overwhelming trade advantage in exchange rates, this bill proposes to handicap American manufacturers by practically withdrawing the helping hand of the Government. Almost on the day when our merchant marine becomes a fact it is virtually announced that foreign trade is not worth supporting.

"Funds for the promotion of Far East trade are cut in half," he added, stating that this means "a great slackening of effort" in a district where Japan, Germany, and England are redoubling their efforts. "The great markets of the East will return a thousandfold every dollar this Government spends there," he said.

"The effect of the bill," he asserted, "is the abolition of the department's commercial attachés and the reduction in the number of foreign trade commissioners.

"As a result of the cut in appropriations," he stated, "district offices must be abolished in New York, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, San Francisco, Seattle, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Dayton, Los Angeles, and Portland, Oreg.

"The bill aims to abolish the commercial attachés entirely," Secretary Alexander said. "This service was established in 1914 at the request of American business. As now conducted it costs $165,000, a trifling and inadequate sum. There is not an office in the service that does not turn in more than that every year in actual business, and the contracts obtained by American houses through some of the offices run into the millions of dollars. That is taking into account only the promotion work figured in dollars and cents. Twelve commercial attachés—men trained and experienced in commercial and economic matters, who at present are attached to embassies and legations in a dozen foreign capitals, where they are charged specifically and solely with the promotion of American business interests at this critical period—will be withdrawn peremptorily within three months' time and dismissed.

IS NOT ECONOMY.

"At least 15 trade commissioners, who are reporting on rapidly changing commercial conditions in European countries from Denmark to Austria, will have to be recalled by the 1st of May.

"If this bill is passed, I shall have to close up almost all the district and cooperative offices in this country. The cutting off of help in the Washington office means decreased efficiency all around. It means a smaller 'commerce report' and delayed trade figures.

"This is not economy. It is downing tools at the most critical stage of our commercial history. If this bill goes through it will cost ten times as much money to put the plant in running order when the grave error of shutting it down has been demonstrated. And it will be demonstrated in a very few months."

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I incorporate only such parts of the testimony of Mr. Philip B. Kennedy, Director Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, February 24, 1920, as are not stricken out:

Mr. KENNEDY. The estimates of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which were submitted, amounted to a total of over $1,600,000. The amount of money which we have to expend for the present fiscal year is slightly under $1,000,000. Before putting in these increased estimates I had talked with the business men of the country and explained to them that we were constantly losing our most efficient men, who went into business positions, and that if we were to make this service permanent, something that would offer a career to well-trained men, we would have to obtain the resources necessary to make this possible. They were very much interested in this and were anxious that we put in estimates considerably larger than we did; but, considering the fact that the present fiscal year is one when we have to practice economy, I took the view that if we were to develop, steadily year by year, in a sound fashion, that we could encourage the men we have to stay with us.

A committee composed of the American Manufacturers' Export Association, the National Foreign Trade Council, and the Civil Service Reform League have been going over this question and have advised that we have not made our estimates high enough. I had asked, for example, for no increase of salary in Washington, which is a very serious fault. These estimates of over $1,600,000 were cut down to under $500,000 by the appropriation committee.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How much under?

Mr. KENNEDY. To $489,000. The first cut is in the amount provided for expenditure in Washington, which is reduced by $58,000. That will mean we will lose 6 out of 10 division chiefs and 32 other important officials in the bureau.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is the governmental agency which distributes commercial information to American business men. This information comes not only from our own foreign representatives, but also from foreign representatives of the State Department.

Mr. WHITE. What is the personnel of that bureau now—the total?

Mr. KENNEDY. The total, the last time I reckoned it up, was about 175.

Mr. BROCK. Of which about 135 are in Washington.

Mr. KENNEDY. About 135 in Washington, and this cut reduced it by 38.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You said the total was 175?

Mr. KENNEDY. Including our district office staff.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That would be 40 elsewhere. Where are the 40?

Mr. KENNEDY. They are in our district offices in New York, Boston, Chicago, New Orleans, St. Louis, San Francisco, and Seattle.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did the 175 include the commercial attachés?

Mr. KENNEDY. No. Neither the commercial attachés nor the trade commissioners abroad.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How many of those have you or have you had?

Mr. KENNEDY. We have had abroad a total of between 90 and 100 people.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And how were they divided, as between commercial attachés and other representatives?

Mr. KENNEDY. We have 12 commercial attachés.

Mr. LAZARO. Is it not a fact that right now Great Britain is increasing their number of attachés looking after foreign business while we are decreasing ours?

Mr. KENNEDY. That is entirely true, as it is also in France.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is the status of these commercial attachés in the foreign embassy or legation?

Mr. KENNEDY. May I leave that until a little later? The point I wish to emphasize here in regard to these employees in Washington is we have the sole duty of distributing all this foreign commercial information, from whatever sources obtained, to the American business men, through our Washington office, through these seven district offices, and through some eight or nine cooperative offices in leading chambers of commerce.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just what character of information do you distribute so as to develop foreign trade?

Mr. KENNEDY. The reports of a commercial character made by representatives of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce abroad, by the consuls and others, all of which come to our bureau. We are receiving at the present time at the rate of about 40,000 consular reports a year in addition to all of our own reports. That material we publish in the form of Daily Commerce Reports and in the form of special monographs on trade. We also publish the foreign trade statistics. We are writing large numbers of commercial letters in answer to specific inquiries about commerce. I think we write about 3,000 letters of that kind every week from our Washington headquarters.

Mr. HARDY. To whom?

Mr. KENNEDY. To nearly all the business firms in the country, to banks and manufacturers and exporters—a very wide range of different kinds of people interested in the increase of our foreign commerce.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Can you state some of the features of that correspondence?

Mr. KENNEDY. We have our work in the bureau divided into divisions. We have one division on tariff information. That division receives tariff laws from all over the world. It has the finest collection of laws on foreign tariffs in the United States, if not in the world. That division receives inquiries as to the tariff on a certain article in a certain country and as to the procedure which has to be followed. Their correspondence is very large. For instance, they have specific and definite information on what is the tariff on lawn mowers in Brazil and what procedure has to be complied with. That division has also handled restrictions. There have recently been restrictions on the importation of American goods into European countries, including restrictions on exchange. All these laws have been compiled there and that information is made available to the American exporters.

Mr. HARDY. How many of those letters, the 3,000 per week, are in answer to communications to you and how many of them are merely general form letters sent out to different people—what proportion?

Mr. KENNEDY. This does not include the form letters, of which we send out a very large number.

Mr. HARDY. These are answers to specific letters addressed to you—some 3,000 per week?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes. We have one single division that has to answer about 1,000 letters a week. That is our commercial information division. The tariff division which I spoke of answers about 250 letters a week. All of those are in answer to specific questions. The commercial information division receives all the letters which can be answered from our files without highly technical information. These letters come in from everywhere. A man wants to know about a market for certain goods in certain countries. Trade letters that come in from our own representatives and from the Consular Service have the essential information taken off and put on a sheet of paper in our file. In this commercial information division we have files containing this recent and essential information about markets for all kinds of American goods in different countries. When a letter comes in that file is consulted. We have right there conveniently at hand the latest information. In this commercial information division we have correspondents who are answering those letters, every one of which is a specific inquiry.

Certain letters come in that are more technical in character. Some one wishes certain information about the Far East or Latin America or western Europe or Russia. We have geographical divisions with experts in charge, men who have been in those countries, who are continually assembling information particularly on those markets. All these geographical divisions reply to these specific inquiries of a technical character on their respective markets.

* * * * * * *

We also have a statistical division which publishes the import and export statistics of the United States. They are constantly receiving letters asking for the most recent statistics of imports and exports of a certain article to a certain country. They have a large correspondence.

* * * * * * *

What we need is a steady policy in our foreign trade. Bankers whom I have been conferring with realize this. Instead of closing up the book and giving up this question, they are studying it more carefully to-day than, I believe, they have ever done before in the history of this country. And just at this time, when the ablest and most experienced business men in this country want our information, it is very discouraging to feel that our Washington staff, which has to handle it, instead of being increased and more highly paid, as it ought to be, is to be severely cut. If that cut is made, we will not be able to give out this information in the way it is required.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They propose to cut the salaries $60,000, as I understand it?

Mr. KENNEDY. $58,000.

Mr. HARDY. Is that a cut in the salaries or a cut in the number of employees?

Mr. KENNEDY. It is entirely a cut in the number of employees in Washington. We will have to dismiss 38 of our most experienced men, who are already receiving salaries much too low. We recently lost a man we were paying $2,000, to take a salary of $5,000. I could go on and enumerate a long list of them.

Mr. CROWTHER. With what sort of a concern did he go?

Mr. KENNEDY. He became the manager in Rio de Janeiro for the American Express Co. He was the assistant chief of the Latin America division. We had spent five years in developing that man as a clerk to commercial attaché in different parts of South America, and just when he became valuable we could not give him any advance in salary and he was taken away.

Mr. BANKHEAD. These 38 men include men of high responsibility in the department?

Mr. KENNEDY. They include six of our division chiefs.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How many divisions have you?

Mr. KENNEDY. We have a provision in the bill for 10 division chiefs, which is what we now have. Six of those are to be dropped. They are the key men. We have a director, two assistant directors, and then follow these 10 division chiefs.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will you tell us over what six divisions those six men preside?

Mr. KENNEDY. We have not yet decided as to which men we will have to dismiss. We hate to face that question.

Mr. HARDY. You have 10 now and the bill will call for your retaining only 4?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to state right here that a reduction in our Washington staff, for one thing, will undoubtedly be an embarrassment to the Shipping Board. We have been giving them information about traffic routes. Our different division chiefs have been conferring directly with men in the Shipping Board about traffic to South America, to the Far East, and to other different territories. Judge Payne appointed Maj. Cushing, chief of operations, and Secretary Alexander appointed me, to keep constantly in touch with one another so that our commercial information could help the Shipping Board.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Upon what hypothesis did the appropriation committee cut this appropriation? Were any of your representativse before them?

Mr. KENNEDY. We endeavored to explain the situation fully to them. So far as this item is concerned, that is, our staff in Washington, I do not think the argument of duplication can enter one iota, because this is a service which the Department of State does not deal with at all. It is the specific duty of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to distribute commercial information to American business men.

Mr. DAVIS. After you appeared before this subcommittee did they not restore this appropriation and then was it not again reduced by the full committee?

Mr. KENNEDY. I have not been informed as to that.

Mr. DAVIS. I have heard that or read it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest that the witness go next to the reduction in the appropriation for promoting foreign and domestic commerce, which is cut $150,000 below the current appropriation.

Mr. KENNEDY. In this fund for promoting commerce we asked for $500,000. We had $325,000 this year. It has been reduced to $175,000.

Out of that fund we have to pay for running our district offices; and we are permitted, according to this bill, to spend $63,000 on our district offices, which is about what we spent this year. But it is very questionable whether, with the reduction in our Washington staff, we can run these district offices. In order that these district offices may be useful the material from abroad has to flow through the Washington office. These district offices have done a great deal of good. They are located in different cities where business men can personally call. They have files of material. They have information about all these restrictions abroad. I fear that this reduction, for one thing, will strike out these district offices.

The rest of the fund is for the promotion of foreign commerce outside of Latin America and the Far East, where we have special funds. If this limitation goes through we will have to withdraw in two or three months about 15 trade commissioners in Europe—from Denmark and Austria—who are reporting on rapidly changing conditions.

I was in London myself during the war as commercial attaché. I feel very keenly the need of our following what is going on in Europe. We may not be able to do much trade there for the time being, while exchange is against us, but we should follow developments. Great Britain, for the year ending January 1, had a greater foreign trade than we did, considering both imports and exports. British ships are putting up the keenest kind of competition on the high seas. British factories are in far better shape than they were a year ago. The president of a large American company, who himself has run a plant in England, returned recently. He told me that manufacturing in Great Britain was much improved over what it was when I left there 10 months ago. He said labor is getting down to work; they have their raw materials; they are reaching out for foreign markets. He said that they are going to give us the keenest kind of competition. At a time when our foreign trade is in the balance we ought to follow what is going on in Great Britain.

As regards France, our commercial attaché, Mr. Snow, who has just come back to the United States, recently took a swing around the industrial cities of France. Every place he visited he went to the chamber of commerce or the labor bureau and asked: "How many unemployed have you?" He was struck with the fact that in the industrial cities of France there are now virtually no unemployed. The factories were working full time. He believes that the French manufacturing industry is going ahead very vigorously.

It is not all dark in the picture of Europe. It is possible the American foreign trade in the future may run up against the keenest kind of competition.

Take Europe as a whole, I feel that it would be a very grave error for us to be forced to withdraw within two or three months these 15 trade commissioners that we now have reporting there. They are men who know those countries, who have had commercial training. Of course, the consuls are reporting, too. We receive the reports of the consuls through the State Department. We know the reports we are getting from our trade commissioners are not covered by the consuls. We know there would be a great loss of information to the American trade and to American shipping if our men were recalled. Just at the time when this readjustment is going on, when the future is being made, it impresses me as being a great mistake to think of withdrawing experienced men and saying that we have no interest in European trade because those nations can not pay for their goods at the present time. That seems to me a short-time rather than a long-time point of view. This appropriation for promoting commerce, which has been cut, is a small amount of money considering what is at stake.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Right there I want to ask this question, even if it breaks in on your statement, because this is the issue that is going to be before the House: You say, as a matter of fact, there is no duplication between the work of those trade commissioners and that of the consuls in furnishing information. You take that position?

Mr. KENNEDY. I say that there is very little. These trade commissioners are, as a rule, men of special training; they are devoting their entire time reporting on commercial subjects and advising with business men.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is one thing you have not explained yet to my satisfaction; you may have to the others. I want to know what trade functions your trade commissioners perform and report to your department that are not performed by the consuls of the State Department, that gives an advantage in their retention?

Mr. KENNEDY. This applies both to the trade commissioners and the commercial attachés. I think, however, it is generally recognized by the State Department that these trade commissioners are men who do not conflict with their consuls, because these trade commissioners are, as a rule, specialists. A man will go out with a knowledge of leather or shoes or some technical line. For example, in England, we have a trade commissioner who was for three years the representative of the Grotton & Knight Leather Co., in London. He is a man who is technically trained in leather. He can go out and make reports on leather which no man could make who was not a technical man.

It is where the trade commissioners are technical men that they fill a special field. A trade commissioner, also, is a man who can pursue a line of investigation on one topic. A consul can not do that. A consul has to sit in his office. He has to attend to the passports, shipping, and notarial functions; all these various things come to the office of a consul. He can not travel from city to city; he can not take the topic of leather, for instance, and go around to different cities of Great Britain and confer with leather people and make a technical report on that subject. As a rule, I think, there has been no feeling that these trade commissioners duplicate the work of consuls. That charge has been leveled mainly against the commercial attachés who have been largely resident. Of course we have a few trade commissioners who are resident, but that is only temporary.

* * * * * * *

Mr. KENNEDY. This will only take one paragraph. They have cut us down in our promotion of trade in the Far East, I believe, under a misconception. The chairman of the subcommittee stated on the floor of the House that there was not much trade to be obtained in the Far East and there was no use spending money on it. The exchange is running against us in the Far East. We are sending silver over there and the Treasury is anxious to increase our trade with the Far East so as to protect our bullion. There is, in fact, a great opportunity for trade in the Far East, and I can conceive no reason whatever for cutting that appropriation from $100,000 to $50,000. I think it must be because of misunderstanding of the facts.

About South America, I will not deal particularly with that, because they have given us the same sum we had this year. I think we ought to increase it because the exchange is running against us in South America. They are sending us more goods than we are sending them. We have a very fine opportunity there, and we ought to extend our work rather than hold it as it is.

Now, as regards commercial attachés. This item has been dropped entirely from the appropriation bill. This service was established six years ago in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce after a referendum of the commercial organizations of this country by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States that was overwhelmingly in favor of the establishment of that service in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

* * * * * * *

Mr. LAZARO. According to a report in this morning's Washington Post the United States Chamber of Commerce has addressed a letter to Members of Congress, calling attention to the fact that right now Great Britain has 50 of these attachés to this country's 18. Is that correct?

Mr. KENNEDY. I could not say as to the number appointed by Great Britain. Lord Farrington was chairman of the parliamentary committee which recommended commercial attachés. He is one of the Scotch bankers in London and has become a power. They made a very careful study of our system in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, he told me. Lord Farrington told me, further, that he considered our system very efficient. The British have proceeded to adopt many of our ideas. The business men of Great Britain have been displeased with the service rendered by the consuls in the foreign office, because they have felt it was not a business service. And they have put the consuls, as well as the commercial attachés, under the overseas-trade department. They have taken the consuls out of the control of the foreign office, which corresponds to the State Department, because they think that diplomatic atmosphere is bad even for consuls.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CROWTHER. Speaking of duplication and some of the information that is gleaned by the attachés and by the agents you have, I remember during the hearings of the Division of Operations of the Shipping Board they had also appointed some very high-grade men—all college men, I believe—as supercargoes, and their reports were read here—a great many of them. A great many I read were very comprehensive, very illuminating, and had a vast fund of information. Did that information come from you or did the Shipping Board conduct that? That information was with regard to dock facilities, harbor facilities, coaling facilities, oil facilities. And still, further than that, those supercargoes had gleaned information as to the interior of the country extending from the port where they were located, as to the probability of a return cargo for the things we manufactured that might be brought back. Did the Shipping Board conduct that on its own initiative, or did they depend on you folks for the information?

Mr. KENNEDY. They have made available to us any information obtained by the supercargoes and there has been a perfectly frank interchange of information. The Shipping Board has been very anxious to play the game.

Mr. CROWTHER. You think there should be somebody else, necessarily, some resident attaché, rather than to get the information in that way, as they have, through their supercargoes? That would not be enough, you do not think; you think this other service should be maintained?

Mr. KENNEDY. I think that the supercargo spends, of course, a great deal of time on the water, and when in a port he has business functions to attend to in connection with his work, and he has not a great deal of time to get commercial information. He is not there long. Sometimes he gets hold of some good information. I think he is just like the consul. The consul is a man who has most of his time taken up with routine and notarial work of various kinds, but he does get hold of good commercial information at times, which ought to be utilized.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will you kindly tell us, in a concrete fashion, what the duties of the commercial attachés are?

Mr. KENNEDY. The commercial attachés, according to law, are directed to report to the Secretary of Commerce on industry and commerce in their districts. The root idea of establishing the commercial attaché was that he should view the country as a whole. In Great Britain, for instance, we have consuls at all the principal cities who sit at their desks and learn a good deal about the business of their districts. It was felt that some one should look at it from the national point of view—should consider the commercial policy of the country as a whole. That has been the principal function of the commercial attaché. In most cases he has been the commercial adviser to the American ambassador.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Have you more than one commercial attaché to a country?

Mr. KENNEDY. Only one to a country.

Mr. WHITE. He is appointed by the Department of Commerce but is attached to the consulate?

Mr. KENNEDY. No; to the embassy or legation. He is accredited by the State Department. The commercial attaché, as a diplomatic official, is entitled to deal direct with representatives of the Government. A consul has no authority to deal direct with officials, say, of the British Government; but a commercial attaché has. Of course, he has a responsibility to the ambassador for the character of those negotiations. A commercial attaché is a very useful person to the ambassador.

Mr. HARDY. From what you say, it seems to me the commercial attaché should more properly be appointed by the State Department than the Department of Commerce.

Mr. KENNEDY. No; but I am glad you asked that question. The commercial attaché is a very important arm to the ambassador and is very helpful to the ambassador, because he is the commercial member of his staff with business contacts. His essential business character and direct relation to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce makes him a specialist similar to the military and naval attaché. State Department representatives in the Diplomatic Service are interested almost exclusively in politics and diplomatic procedure as well as in purely social relationships. The commercial attaché is the direct representative of American business on the embassy staff. Put him in the State Department and his business character will be lost.

Mr. HARDY. The attaché to the embassy for the Army is appointed by the War Department?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. And for the Navy by the Navy Department?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. And the attaché for commerce you think properly should be appointed by the Department of Commerce?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes. I think that the distinctly professional character of the commercial attaché should be maintained.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, the fact that the commercial attaché is attached, as his name indicates, to the embassy or legation, proves that he is not in the position of a consul or consular agent?

Mr. KENNEDY. That is where some of this trouble has arisen, because the consuls are, some of them, offended at the superior position in which the commercial attaché has been placed. I do not blame them. I have no personal feelings in this whole question. I have a great deal of friendship for the American Consular Service and I would like to see it built up and improved; but I think it is proper that the commercial attaché should remain on the staff of the embassy as the representative of American business, considering commercial policy for the country as a whole. His work is not similar to that of a consul. He has a strictly commercial job of broad character.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. To what extent do other countries have these commercial attachés?

Mr. KENNEDY. The practice of the civilized world is favorable to the position which I maintain that is controlled by the Commerce Department. Great Britain has, within the last two or three years, entirely revised her system. The business men felt that they were getting virtually nothing from the consuls. They have made the consul subservient to the commercial attaché, from the commercial point of view. For instance, in the United States the commercial secretary of the British Embassy receives copies of the commercial reports made by all the British consuls in this country, and he can ask them to look up particular things in different parts of the country, so that all that information is assembled here in the British Embassy in Washington to help the ambassador in his conduct of policy. The consuls are put under the direction of the commercial attaché, so far as the commercial work goes. Great Britain has extended that system all over the world. They are trying to relieve the consuls of their shipping work, so that they can do more commercial work, and they head it up through their commercial attaché.

France is establishing under the minister of commerce a commercial attaché system, and some of their representatives have been through our bureau and studied it very closely, and they are just now in process of appointing some 15 or 20 commercial attachés, who are to report to the minister of commerce. In every country these commercial attachés are reporting to the minister of commerce, because that is his business. They universally want to get away from the foreign offices, where there has been a lot of red tape and delay and a great deal of secrecy, and where men have been more interested in political and diplomatic questions. The business men want something that has a business character. That is the reason that in all these foreign countries, including Japan, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Holland—every country that I know of—they are making these commercial attachés directly responsible to the minister of commerce.

Mr. WHITE. How many of these commercial attachés have we outside the United States at the present time, and how much of a contraction of the service will be required if this appropriation bill stands as it is reported?

Mr. KENNEDY. The present fiscal year we had an appropriation of $165,000, which provides, at the maximum, for 11 or 12 commercial attachés and their offices. If these men are withdrawn that will mean we will have to dismiss from the service 11 or 12 commercial attachés and such clerks as they have. Those commercial attachés are at present in London, Paris, Madrid, Rome, The Hague, Copenhagen, Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Santiago, Pekin, and Tokyo.

Mr. WHITE. This bill carries nothing in its present form for those commercial attachés and their clerks?

Mr. KENNEDY. It wipes them out.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARDY. Then I understand the greater distinction is you have only one commercial attaché to any country, and he supervises these trade commissioners and their work and comes in direct contact with your ambassadors?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. And, through him, with our own people?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. So that he is really the head of the trade commissioners?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. As well as the channel through which they communicate?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes. And nearly all the ambassadors and ministers have very highly commended this service.

Mr. HARDY. You might name them appropriately the chiefs of the trade commissioners to certain countries?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes; they are, really.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Would it not be better for the interests of the country, if we abolish one or the other, to abolish the trade commissioners instead of the attachés?

Mr. KENNEDY. I should say that the commercial attachés were the nervous system of the Department of Commerce. If you take them away we will be inert. We will not be in a position to protect the business interests of the country. I feel that it is possible for the present system to avoid duplication, and I think that it has been very largely done in the past. We receive the reports of the consuls in our bureau to distribute to the business men. We can read those over, and we can see where they are reporting on the same things as our commercial attachés. As a matter of fact, it is very seldom that there is any overlapping, because the consuls report on something local to their district, whereas the commercial attachés are usually considering broad commercial policies of the country as a whole; and the trade commissioners' reports are so technical and so complete that the consuls do not make any such reports.

Mr. HARDY. Even the trade commissioners are not confined to a particular port or locality?

Mr. KENNEDY. Oh, no. Some of them go out and make a trip of two years.

Mr. CROWTHER. By whom are they appointed?

Mr. KENNEDY. They are appointed by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Mr. CROWTHER. On examination, the same as the commercial attachés?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Picked for their special adaptability to certain lines of investigation?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes For example, Mr. Brock is a trade commissioner who spent two years going all over the West Indies and South America investigating the market for American shoes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Are they allowed traveling expenses?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes; they are allowed $4 per diem, which is ridiculous. They are allowed the actual cost of transportation and $4 per day in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What about these other items here? There are four items which have been stricken out altogether, I believe, by the Appropriations Committee. For instance, trade development through motion pictures.

Mr. KENNEDY. Of course, that motion pictures are really dependent upon whether Congress passes a bill which has been put before it, and I do not consider that as prime interest.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then, post allowances, $100,000.

Mr. KENNEDY. If we are to maintain that commercial attaché service and the trade commissioner service, we are going to be handicapped without post allowances. The State Department has been given post allowances for their representatives. The living conditions in different parts of the world are so upset at present you have to give a man more money if you send him to some places where he is going to have a very hard time and the exchange is against him, and everything of that kind. And if the commercial attachés are to be really backed up and made effective we ought to have post allowances.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What about the other two items, transporting the remains of officers and employees, $1,500, and transportation and subsistence for families of officers and employees, $50,000?

Mr. KENNEDY. The $1,500 is a sort of provision in case we should have anyone die abroad. The State Department has a small sum which they use for bringing back the remains of their people who die abroad. And if we have foreign representatives, we ought to have some small sum which, if necessary, could be used to bring a man's body back home.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then, transportation and subsistence to families. Is not that something of the same nature as the post allowances?

Mr. KENNEDY. No. When you send a man out to a post—take Mr. Arnold, our commercial attaché at Peking; he has a wife and four children. According to the present arrangements we pay his own transportation, but do not pay for the transportation of his wife and four children. And we only pay him $4 a day in lieu of subsistence. If he stopped at a hotel, why his own living expenses probably would run $10 a day, and then with all this family you can see it is a very expensive thing for him to go out at all.

Mr. CROWTHER. What salary does a man like that get?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Arnold is getting $8,000, but the exchange is running so much against us in the Far East it is not worth more than about $4,000 to $5,000 at the present time. He is a man who has been 17 years in China.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does he have to suffer from those conditions?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Reinsch, the minister to China, told me in my office that Mr. Arnold is one of the most public-spirited men he ever saw; that he can leave us at any time at three or four times the salary in private business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For two additional Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury at the rate of $5,000 each per annum in accordance with the authority contained in the deficiency appropriation act approved October 6, 1917, and for a private secretary to each of the said Assistant Secretaries at the rate of $1,800 each per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated to provide for their compensation from July 1, 1920, to a date not later than six months after the termination of the present state of war.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, on page 34, line 4, I move to strike out the words "state of."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 34, line 4, strike out the words "state of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Federal Farm Loan Bureau: Four members of the board, at $10,000 each; secretary, $4,500; assistant secretary, $3,000; 4 private secretaries, at $2,000 each; custodian of securities, $2,500; examiners of securities (not to exceed 6 in number) at not more than $3,000 per annum each, $14,700; 12 registers at $4,000 each; chief land bank examiner, $5,000; 2 land bank examiners at $3,000 each; accountant, $1,800; 12 clerks and stenographers for registrars, at $1,200 each; engineer (irrigation and drainage), $4,800; clerks—3 of class 3, 5 of class 2, 8 of class 1, 9 at $1,000 each; stenographers—3 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each; 3 messengers; in all, $194,620.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: On page 43, line 3, before the word "two," insert the following: "Chief of the Bond Division, $3,600; supervising appraiser, $3,600." And, in line 8, strike out "three messengers" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "five messengers." And, in line 9, strike out the sum "$194,620" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$203,500: Provided, That the unexpended balance on June 30, 1920, of the appropriation of $100,000 contained in section 33 of the Federal farm-loan act approved July 17, 1916, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $294,320: Provided, That beginning with the fiscal year 1921 the Federal Farm Loan Board shall, as soon as possible after the close of each half of each fiscal year, levy upon the Federal land banks and joint stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets an assessment equal to the amounts expended from all appropriations on account of salaries (including any additional compensation) and expenses of the board and its appointees and employees for the half of the fiscal year then closed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to make a point of order on the proviso beginning in line 23. Is that to be made before that proviso is read?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order at the conclusion of the reading of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

The board, in making such assessment, shall assess exclusively against either class of banks such expenses as may be incurred exclusively on behalf of such class. Such assessments shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso beginning on line 23, page 43, and closing at the end of line 10, page 44.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order against the proviso at the bottom of page 43 and down to and including line 10 on page 44.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, the point I make is that this proviso is not in order in this bill under section 2 of Rule XXI, known as the Holman rule. This rule has been thoroughly discussed since the consideration of this bill began by those in the House who are recognized as parliamentary experts. The Chairman also has, no doubt, given this rule very thorough study since the consideration of this bill began.

I wish, first, to call the attention of the Chair to the provision in this rule which provides as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Then follows the proviso. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is well, I think, to first get in our minds clearly just what this proviso contains. The proviso says that—

Provided, That beginning with the fiscal year 1921, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall, as soon as possible after the close of each half of each fiscal year, levy upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets, an assessment equal to the amounts expended from all appropriations on account of salaries (including any additional compensation) and expenses of the board and its appointees and employees for the half of the fiscal year then closed. The board, in making such assessment, shall assess exclusively against either class of banks such expenses as may be incurred exclusively on behalf of such class. Such assessments shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this proviso found here in this appropriation bill simply authorizes the levying of a tax upon the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks. The proviso says that the Federal Farm Loan Board shall levy upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks an assessment equal to the amount expended, and so forth. The word "levy" implies a tax. That is one of the primary meanings of the word "levy," and the word "assessment" also carries exactly the same meaning; so that this proviso does nothing more or less than authorize the Federal Farm Loan Board to levy a special tax upon the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks. It does nothing else. This proviso is a revenue measure, and, of course, there is only one committee of the House that has jurisdiction of revenue measures, namely, the Ways and Means Committee. There is no attempt in this proviso—there is not a word in the proviso that reduces the number of public officers or that reduces the salary or salaries of public officers, or which in any way retrenches the expenditures of the National Government; there is not a word that lessens the expenditures of this Government a single penny. There is not a word that reduces the number of public officials. All that it does is to authorize a special tax to be levied upon the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks in an amount equal to the expenditures of the Federal Farm Loan Board and all its employees.

I do not see how it is possible on the face of it for anyone to contend that this provision in any way comes under the Holman rule. It clearly changes existing law, because under the Federal land bank act approved July 17, 1916, the members and employees of the Federal Farm Loan Board are paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Of course, under this proviso the Federal Farm Loan Board and its employees would still be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. It does not change that in any particular. But under the Federal land bank act, or, for that matter, under any existing law, there is no authority to levy this special tax upon the Federal land banks or the joint-stock land banks; so that this proviso does change existing law by authorizing the Federal Farm Loan Board to levy a special tax upon the Federal land banks and the joint-stock banks to a certain amount.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this proviso is in order, the Committee on Appropriations would be authorized to bring in here an entirely new revenue bill. If this proviso is in order on this appropriation bill, then the Committee on Appropriations is authorized, in any regular appropriation bill, to bring in a provision authorizing an entire change of the revenue system of this country.

The Holman rule requires that a provision of this kind must be germane to the subject matter. Now, a provision raising revenue, like this provision, is not germane to a bill making appropriations for officers and governmental instrumentalities authorized by law, so that it can not possibly be construed to be in order.

This rule says:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except—such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

Now, this does not retrench expenditures. It simply provides that this assessment and levy shall be made, and these funds so raised shall go into the general receipts of the United States Treasury.

Then the retrenchment of expenditures shall be, first—by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

It does not reduce the number of the officers of the United States, nor does it reduce the salary of any officer of the United States. Second, it must retrench—by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

There is nothing in this proviso that reduces the salary of any officer of the United States. Or, third—by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

This does not reduce by a single penny the amount of money covered by the bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this provision clearly is not in order, because it changes existing law and does not reduce expenditures or reduce the number or the salaries of any public officers.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in determining this question the Chair will look to the law as it now is and to the law as it is proposed to be and then decide whether or not it results in the retrenchment of expenditures.

The law as it now stands provides that these expenditures shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. As the law now stands the Treasury of the United States in paying these expenditures gets no portion of them back. Under the law as it will be, if this proposal is adopted, this expense will continue to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, but it will have to be refunded by the Federal land bank, so that by that process there will be a retrenchment in the expenditure of the moneys of the United States to the extent of whatever amount this expense is. While it is true that it does not reduce the amount of the present appropriation bill, it provides the means whereby the Government of the United States shall be reimbursed for every item of expense that it pays on this account, and in consequence it reduces the ultimate expenditure of the United States and retrenches the ultimate expenditure of the United States.

We are not without precedent on this proposition. There are a number of authorities; but one that is concrete and, I think, conclusive was decided with reference to a situation arising concerning legislation pertaining to the District of Columbia. The question was upon the passage of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, on a motion to recommit with instructions to reduce the proportion of the fund appropriated from the Public Treasury from one-half, as provided in the bill, to one-fourth of the entire appropriation, which was held to be in order, since the effect of the amendment, if adopted, would reduce the expenditure of public money, although not reducing the amount of the appropriation.

The very same question was involved in that case that is now involved in this case. In that case the total amount of the appropriation carried by the bill was in no wise reduced, but it did retrench the expenditure of the moneys of the United States by providing this new system concerning the portion of the appropriation paid out of the Treasury of the United States. So that any process that retrenches any expenditure, any process that checks the outlay of money for which a return is not in any way provided to the United States results in the retrenchment of expenditures, and under the provisions of the Holman rule any amendment the result of which is a retrenchment of the expenditures of the moneys of the United States is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman distinguish this particular item from the amendment offered to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill increasing the cost of passports?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am not familiar with the proposition to which the Chair calls my attention, and in consequence I will not undertake to distinguish it; but the rule as laid down in the case of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, to which I have just called the attention of the Chair, is clearly in point and on all fours with the proposition that is now before the House. There certainly can be no doubt with reference to the purpose of the Holman rule in providing a means whereby retrenchment may be had in the expenditures of moneys of the United States. Any retrenchment of expenditure, whether it results in a reduction of the present considered appropriation bill or whether it provides a way within that bill whereby this retrenchment may occur, is germane. They both accomplish the same result. Each of them saves money to the Treasury of the United States. In this case if these moneys are continued to be expended, as they are now expended, out of the Treasury of the United States, and if there is no method provided whereby they may be refunded again to the United States, it results in an expenditure of money from the Treasury of the United States, the consequence of which is an absolute net expenditure above that which is provided by the process that we are trying to inaugurate.

If the provision we have before us now is adopted, what is the result? It results in saving the United States Treasury many thousands of dollars in the course of a year, and many, many more in the course of a few years, as this activity, now comparatively in its infancy, continues grow. It will amount to many millions of dollars in a few years. It saves the Treasury of the United States all the expense that is now incurred in making the allowance by providing a way by which the United States Treasury gets it back, and consequently retrenches the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this may be good legislation, and I would vote for it if the proposition came before the committee in a proper way. I can not, however, see from what possible point of view this item can be in order in this bill. This, on the facts, is the same situation that I argued some days ago in connection with the Diplomatic and Consular bill.

The proviso in the paragraph does not eliminate any official; it does not reduce any salaries; it does not reduce the amount covered by the bill; it is simply a method for raising additional revenue from a new source and turning it into the Treasury. That is all this item does, and all that the chairman of the committee contends that it does. It is true that as the revenue derived from this source will be turned into the Treasury, that disposition will give the Federal Government additional revenue, but the proviso does not reduce the amount to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States in this connection.

In the Diplomatic and Consular bill the amendment effected a direct reduction in the amount carried by the bill, and increased the charge for passports, thereby affording a new fund for the payment of certain expenses. But the amendment was held out of order. There can be no distinction in principle between that case and the one under consideration. This bill will hereafter carry all of these items of appropriation, all of the salaries provided, and all of the officials. It is true, however, that the Government will have more money, as a result of the proviso, with which to discharge its obligations.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I differ with the gentleman in the conclusion that it will bring more money into the Treasury. That is a question of fact which the Chair can not assume. For instance, take it along the Mexican border. If in the matter of passports they charge $10, you might not get as much as $1. In this instance I am not certain that it will result in an increased revenue.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The increase in the passport charges would certainly bring in more revenue. I do not think there can be any doubt on that point. I concede, too, that this proviso will bring more revenue into the Treasury, but that has nothing to do with the question of order on the proviso. I submit that while this may be good legislation, it does not reduce the amount carried by the bill or in any wise come within Rule XXI or the principle decided heretofore.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in answer to the gentleman from Virginia that this is not a revenue measure, and from what I know concerning the passport proposition it differs widely. This is not a revenue measure; it is simply a measure that saves an expenditure to the Government of the United States, keeps in the Treasury money that is raised by revenue from some other quarter. This is not for the purpose of producing revenue; it is for the purpose of saving revenue produced from other sources.

So I wish the Chair not to confuse this in his mind with a revenue measure. I desire again to call attention to the District of Columbia bill. Take the instance of the government of the District of Columbia. Under the half-and-half plan all the receipts of the District of Columbia are covered into the Treasury. But by reason of the fact if the reduction had been made asked for by changing the half-and-half plan, the District of Columbia would have to pay all the expenses, and any expense over one-half would save money to the United States, not because it was revenue derived from any source coming into the Treasury, but it would have saved the expenditure of money that came in by revenue from other sources.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman contend that the Committee on Appropriations had original jurisdiction over this subject matter?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; it has jurisdiction over this subject matter for the reason that it makes appropriations for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the operation of this establishment. It makes appropriation to pay the fees provided for, it makes appropriations for paying salaries, and consequently it has jurisdiction. If that was not so, they would not come to us for the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was asking the gentleman about original jurisdiction.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I would not say that the committee had original jurisdiction.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This changes the method of raising the money to pay the expenses provided for under the appropriation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not therefore a substantive law enacted in an appropriation bill that does not reduce expenses but only provides a different method of raising the expense provided for? Is not that true?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is true to this extent: It does change the plan of paying the expenses. If the Chair is familiar with the law as it now stands, he will find that it is paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and when paid under the present plan that is the last of it. The United States never gets it back. Under the proposed plan the expenses will continue to be paid out of the Treasury, but it will be reimbursed just the same as in the District of Columbia case.

It prevents the expenditure of money that is raised from revenue, and therefore is not a revenue question. It provides that the money temporarily advanced for the payment of these expenses shall be covered back by reason of the process provided in this measure, so that it results in retrenchment of expenditures. I do not think there can be any question about that, and I do not think anyone will contend that it is not a retrenchment of expenditures of money of the United States. If that proposition be true, if it is a retrenchment of the expenditures of the money of the United States, then it is germane and in order. It does not provide any substantive legislation other than changing the method of paying these expenses.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I wish myself that this proviso were in order, because I would like to vote for it, but I think it is perfectly clear that it is not in order. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], in charge of the bill, said that no one would dispute that this reduces the expenditures of the Government. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. Every cent of it will be paid out of the Treasury of the United States with this proviso in, exactly the same as it is paid out of the Treasury with this proviso out.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will not the Government, with this proviso in, get the money back?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The proviso requires that the money shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It becomes a revolving fund.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; it does not at all. Next year it will be necessary to make an appropriation of money for these same officials that this bill appropriates money for now. It is true that it raises the revenue to be required, the amount that has been expended, to be paid back as miscellaneous receipts. I do not undertake to say whether it would be possible to frame an amendment in order paying the amount necessary to sustain this bureau out of the money raised, and thereby reducing the expenditures out of the Federal Treasury; but here is a bill that appropriates specific money to be paid out of the Treasury, and then provides that that money shall be paid back. It is to be paid back as miscellaneous receipts. So that it does not, under the rule, reduce the expenditures of the Government at all, much less the expenditures referred to in the rule, which is a limitation upon the reduction of expenditures. That is to be done either by reducing the number of employees, or reducing the salaries of the officers of the United States, or the amount carried by the bill. This does not do any of those things. It keeps the same number of employees, it does not reduce the salaries, it does not reduce the amount, and it does not reduce the expenditures of the Government. It merely provides for a method of raising revenue.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will look on page 44 of the bill, lines 9 and 10, he will find the language these gentlemen are complaining about. In order that the Chair may know briefly the exact history of this item, I would state that the Farm Loan Board came before the Appropriations Committee and asked the committee to make the payment of the expenses of the farm-loan banks out of the banks themselves. That was the request of the entire board. When that matter was before the committee we asked them, in order that we might keep control of the expense account without the expense account being too heavy and burdensome upon these banks, whether it would not be a good idea that Congress might control it in that way. According to the arguments made up to this hour, if this money was not paid into the Treasury it would save the entire expense of the farm-loan banks to the Treasury now. That unquestionably would save a good many thousand dollars, which would never be paid out of the Treasury at all which under the present law is now paid out of the Treasury. Suppose, in order to do what the Farm Loan Board asked us to do, we were to provide that the Treasury should be relieved of this entire expense, and that all of it should be paid by the banks themselves, as they originally wanted us to do, not permitting any of the money to go into the Treasury but permitting an assessment to be made by the Farm Loan Board against these banks to pay these expenses. Then every cent of it would be kept out of the Treasury. Therefore I presume that the chairman of the committee, if the Chair should sustain the point of order, could ask that language be eliminated, and then the Chair would have to pass on the question where we do save all of the money. It seems to me that it is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. It is too highly technical, because it is admitted by everyone that it does save the Treasury, that this does save the taxpayers of the United States just the amount of money that those banks cost. By the way, I should state that the pay roll is made up and exactly the amount necessary to pay the expenses is simply paid to the Treasury, so that Congress may know how the salary roll is progressing, and whether there is too much burden upon these institutions which the Government fostered, which the Government instituted, and which the Government up to date has been carrying. If the Chair should hold that this is not within the Holman rule we could bring it within the Holman rule by eliminating the language that it is to be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Has the gentleman read the ruling of Speaker GILLETT on this precise point?

Mr. SISSON. I have not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Would the gentleman object to my reading three lines in this connection?

Mr. SISSON. No; I would not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I read from the ruling of the Speaker [Mr. GILLETT], delivered January 26, 1920:

> It does not seem to the Chair that it is a fair interpretation of the Holman rule to say that by creating a new source of revenue and making a specific appropriation of that revenue and at the same time reducing the amount which was before appropriated a real reduction of appropriation is effected.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman wants to construe the expense of these banks as a source of revenue, the Speaker's ruling applies, but the gentleman does not catch what I am arguing to the Chair and that is this: Suppose we should save the Treasury the entire amount of money that it takes to pay the expenses of these banks. That would be within the Holman rule. The only difference is that as good administration, Mr. Lever and the other members of the board said they had no objection to submitting the pay roll annually, and I understand they want to do it every six months, to show the exact amount to be collected from this source to pay the salaries to be allowed for the next succeeding six months.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman contends that this legislation is in order, what would prevent the Committee on Appropriations, under every paragraph of this bill, providing means whereby the revenue should be raised to support the item appropriated in that particular paragraph? In other words, let me illustrate. If you can provide the means whereby this amount of revenue may be raised by this proviso, why could not the committee do it in appropriating money for the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Civil Service Commission or any other commission throughout this bill? In other words, why could they not provide for the raising of the whole $104,000,000 provided for by the items of appropriation?

Mr. SISSON. If we could bring it in order under the Holman rule, we could. The only question is whether it is in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. HASTINGS. This does not reduce the expenditures; it appropriates the same amount of money, but it provides means whereby additional revenue may be raised and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. SISSON. If the Chair shall hold that the filing of this expense account and the reporting to the Treasury of the amount of the expenses of this bank is revenue, then this bill does not reduce the amount paid out of the Treasury for these banks one penny, because it assesses the banks just enough to pay their expenses, and it will balance to a cent unless we have collected too much. But that is not what I am addressing to the Chair. What I am addressing to the Chair now is this: If Congress does not want to assume any control of this expense account, it can unquestionably bring this within the rule by limiting the amount and saying that the banks shall pay their own expenses and relieve the Treasury of this $60,000 or $70,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule unless the gentleman from Indiana desires to submit something further.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I just want to submit a few observations upon this important matter which we have under consideration. It is important for the future, and I would like to see the time arrive when we can find a rule of construction here which can be relied upon. If the precedents amount to anything, they are in favor of sustaining the proposition that we have placed in this bill, and it should be held to be in order. I wish again to call attention to the case of the District and to the language and reasoning used by the Chair, which strikes me as being exactly on a parallel with the question confronting us. The Chairman in that case stated:

> The gentleman's statement, as the Chair understands it, is borne out clearly by a long line of rulings. The organic act of June 11, 1878, provides that to the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in the said District other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia.
> The language of the bill provides—
> "That the following sums are appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that they are sufficient therefor, and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."
> It is, of course, clear that this is a change of existing or basic law. It would be within the rule which does not allow legislation upon appropriation bills if it were not within one of the exceptions of such rule. The exception of the rule, called to the attention of the Chair by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], is the exception that provides that if by the amendment offered or the change in the law the appropriations are reduced the exception prevails and the rule to that extent is nullified.
> In this case it is quite clear that if the language of the bill remains a reduction of expenditures from the Treasury of the United States must necessarily result. The very point has been decided in two recent cases exactly in point except the positions were reversed. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], I think, was in the Chair when the bill as presented contained the provision exactly in accordance with the organic act:
> "That one-half of the following sums, respectively, be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury."
> And in two successive years the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] held, after an elaborate argument in the first instance, that the language of an amendment offered as a substitute, almost, if not exactly, identical with the language which is now the first section of this bill, was in order as an amendment to the original law, because of the fact that it reduced expenditures.
> So it seems to the Chair it is quite clear that it is the duty of the Chair to hold that the point of order against the first section on that account is not well taken, and the objections are overruled.

Now, in this case, like in that, if it results in a reduction of expenditures of the United States and the net result is the saving of a dollar to the United States it is certainly germane under the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This is, of course, new legislation and out of order on this bill unless it can be justified under the Holman rule. The first part of the Holman rule reads as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures in the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Does this item qualify on any of those conditions named? Certainly it does not retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, certainly it does not reduce the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and certainly it does not reduce the amount of money covered by the bill. Therefore it is evident that this can not be sustained under the first provision of the Holman rule. Can it be sustained under the proviso, which reads as follows:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

The Chair doubts very much whether the proviso of the Holman rule covers items originally put into the bill by the Committee on Appropriations, but if it could by any possibility be construed to effect original items could the action of the Committee on Appropriations be justified here?

The Chair asked the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] whether he believed that his committee had any jurisdiction over the original subject matter, and he replied in the negative. Of course the original subject matter was under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency. If this were to be considered solely as a revenue measure possibly it might be under the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee, but evidently it is not under the original jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] quotes a decision of Chairman HULL on the proposition of the half-and-half plan for the District of Columbia. If that ruling is in point, it is against the contention of the gentleman from Indiana, because the decision there hinged on the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It will be remembered that when that amendment was offered first by a Member of the House it was ruled out of order, and it was only when it was brought in by the Committee on the District of Columbia that it was ruled in order on the express ground that that committee had jurisdiction over the subject matter. So in the opinion of the Chair the Committee on Appropriations does not qualify under either the original portion or the proviso of the Holman rule.

Now, if any precedent is to be considered, there is a precedent less than a month old, the one cited by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS]. It was attempted on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill to add a provision increasing the price to be paid for passports. It was sought to justify that under the Holman rule on the ground that it would retrench expenditures. But both the chairman of the committee, Mr. MADDEN, when the matter was before the Committee of the Whole, and the Speaker subsequently on a motion to recommit, held that that provision was out of order, and, as the Chair believes, rightly. But even if the Chair did not have such a very recent precedent, he would have no doubt as to how to rule on this question. It seems to the Chair that it is not his function to do any guessing on such matters as this. To justify under the Holman rule you must show conclusively, beyond cavil or doubt, that it does reduce expenditure. This is a matter of absolute doubt in the mind of the Chair. He does not know whether it would reduce expenditures or increase them, and believes he has no course except to sustain the point of order.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment, which I think will be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PLATT: Strike out all matter after the words "farm loan bureau," on line 23, page 42, to and including line 10, page 44, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That paragraph 8 of section 3 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, be amended by striking out the words 'the salaries and expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board and of farm-loans registrars and examiners authorized by this section shall be paid by the United States,' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'The Federal Farm Loan Board shall levy semiannually upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks, in proportion to their gross assets, an assessment sufficient to pay the estimated expenses and salaries of the board, its appointees and employees, for a half year succeeding the levying of such assessment, together with any deficit carried forward from the preceding year, the first assessment to be made for the half year beginning July 1, 1920: Provided, That in making such assessment the board shall assess exclusively against either class of banks such expense as may be incurred exclusively on behalf of such class.'"

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, I wish to say I think that evidently the amendment was not correctly reported or was not correctly stated. First, I understood from the reading that it starts with the language that has already gone out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not begin with that language, but it includes it, which, of course, it should not do.

Mr. WINGO. How about down to and including line 10?

Mr. PLATT. That can be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment strikes out the words, beginning on line 23, page 42, and all up to and including line 10 on page 44. Of course, all from line 23, page 42, to line 10, page 44, has gone out on a point of order.

Mr. WINGO. I see.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise this point of order.

Mr. WALSH. What is the point of order that has been raised?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I reserved a point of order. I made it so that we would not pass the point where the point of order could be made. I could not follow it in the way it was read, so that I have no definite conception of what may or may not be subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that inasmuch as this amendment strikes out the language already adopted in the bill and paragraphs already passed, it is not in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is the reason I reserved the point of order, so that all those matters could be brought up.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a point of order is made to an amendment which would be subject to a point of order if insisted upon, and the Member who makes the point of order withdraws it, even though the amendment is subject to a point of order, I make the point of order that it is not within the province of the Chair to hold it out of order until that question is raised from the floor. Has the Chair such privilege?

The CHAIRMAN. Unquestionably. The Chair thinks it very clear that the committee has adopted the paragraph beginning on line 23, page 44, down to and including line 9 on page 43, and it has adopted the next paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Probably the Chair did not get my point. Admitting it would go out on a point of order if the point of order was raised by a member of the Committee of the Whole House from the floor, the point I was making was, Is it within the province of the Chair himself, where a point of order is withdrawn, to raise the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Unquestionably. The Chair is a member of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the Chair could passively admit something that was out of order on one occasion, and on another actively eliminate it on his own point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It seemed to the Chair under the circumstances, the point of order having been made and reserved, it being so clear to the Chair that this amendment was not in order——

Mr. SISSON. With the permission of the committee, I want to see if we can not get to the matter upon which the point has been raised.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to question the ruling of the Chair, which was made quickly, but I think the Chair will not be quite so clear upon the point after I make an observation. There have been a great many discussions as to how a substitute proposition could be offered either to a bill or a part of a bill. My recollection is, where a man wants to offer a substitute for an entire bill, that he can either offer it when the first paragraph is read, giving notice that if his substitute should be agreed to he would, as the other paragraphs were read, move to strike them out, or he can wait until the complete reading has been had, and then offer a substitute for an entire matter; and the mere fact that a part of the bill has been read and has not been questioned, or that it has been read and has been amended, and an amendment offered and agreed to, does not prevent a Member from the floor from offering a substitute for an entire bill and having that voted upon by the committee or by the House.

I confess I am not clear myself on the subject as to whether, when a particular subject is under consideration in a bill and a Member desires to offer a substitute for the entire subject matter, he is required to offer the substitute when the first paragraph is read, or whether he can retain his right to offer until the entire subject matter has been read.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, that does not apply when one offers a substitute to one or more sections of a bill. When a substitute is offered for an entire bill, then the proponent of the substitute waits until the reading of the bill is completed. But this is not a situation to which this practice applies. This is a substitute, not for an entire bill but for one or more sections. There is, as I understand, a distinction between a substitute to an entire bill and one for several paragraphs.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think the gentleman will find that in the precedents anywhere. I think it is a matter that has never been ruled upon.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think I can show the gentleman where it has been ruled upon.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman, who has ruled on many subjects, some of them correctly, may have one of his rulings in mind.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not think you will find the precedent in any ruling of mine.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then it is somebody else's.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Maybe we will find it in one of yours.

Mr. SISSON. I will ask the gentleman from New York, would not the amendment serve every purpose if you offered the amendment after line 22, so that the items of appropriation that might be carried here that have been passed might be controlled by your amendment?

Mr. PLATT. I am entirely willing to offer it that way if that is the way to do it.

Mr. SISSON. And in order that we may get that matter properly before the subcommittee I am going to ask unanimous consent that this question be passed over for a time, so that we can take this matter up with the chairman of the committee and see if we can not make some agreement as to the language and then report back to the House.

Mr. RUBEY. I object.

Mr. PLATT. This is the bill reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, with the exception of the last section, which apparently came under the objection raised to the other proviso.

Mr. WINGO. No; there is another objection that is very serious. The committee made it discretionary. The committee reported this kind of a bill and provided "they shall have power to levy." The gentleman in his amendment that he offers here says "they shall levy." That is a material and substantial difference.

Mr. PLATT. That was done to avoid possible question as to whether it would decrease expense or not.

Mr. WINGO. I mention that as a part of the record, not in the way of controversy.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the following precedent in volume 5 of Hinds':

> When it is proposed to offer a single substitute for several paragraphs of a bill which is being considered by paragraphs, the substitute may be moved to the first paragraph, with notice that if agreed to, motions will be made to strike out the remaining paragraphs.

That is found in volume 5 of Hinds', section 5795.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has that entire ruling before him, and the Chair is not aware of any precedent to the contrary. If any gentleman can cite to the Chair any precedent which will authorize the offering of an amendment to a paragraph that has been acted upon, the Chair will be glad to have the citation.

Mr. PLATT. In what other way could a person, offering such an amendment as I have offered, offer it?

The CHAIRMAN. In the way cited by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], and in the way covered by the citation I have referred to.

Mr. PLATT. It would be impossible to tell until the Chair ruled upon that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman seeks to strike out some language before the proviso relating to the organization of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau. The gentleman could have risen when the first paragraph was read and given notice that if that motion were agreed to he would move to strike out the subsequent paragraph.

Mr. PLATT. But in case the Chair ruled that the proviso was in order, he had no desire to strike out, and had no way of knowing what to do until the whole thing had been read.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be true in this case; but as the Chair says, he does not know of any precedent to the contrary, and he would be glad if anybody would cite such a precedent.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, may I call attention to the fact that each one of these paragraphs is finished with a semicolon, and that the sentence is not completed until the point where the gentleman has offered his amendment? The fact that the printer saw fit to arrange this in paragraph form, I suggest, does not control the punctuation, and that this is one complete sentence, which the gentleman at the proper point, where the period has been inserted, offers to replace by an amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, as to that, it does not make any difference whether it is one sentence or a dozen sentences. The rule provides that the bill shall be considered by paragraphs. I do not think there is any precedent against the ruling suggested by the Chair, nor do I think the ruling cited has anything to do with this case. There are frequent cases where a paragraph has been passed in a bill and a proposition to substitute has been ruled out of order. But here is a case where there is a heading, "Federal Farm Loan Bureau," covering one subject matter in an appropriation bill, and the reason under which the general practice follows, that you can move to strike out when the first section is read to a bill and propose an entire substitute, or can wait until the entire reading of the bill has been completed and then propose a substitute, applies to a case in an appropriation bill where one subject matter under one heading comes.

On reason the same principle would be involved; and I repeat, I do not think there has ever been a ruling on the subject either way. So I shall not question the decision of the Chair. It may be the best practice that a man shall be required to offer a substitute whether he knows he wants to offer it or not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will hear me just a moment in this connection, it strikes me that the decision to which I called the attention of the Chair is absolutely conclusive as to the time when a Member must offer a substitute for two or three sections in a bill. The reason for the rule is very apparent, and affects the motion that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] is seeking to make. The committee is no longer in possession of matter which we have passed, and it is not in order to return to it. That being so the gentleman can not offer an amendment relating to matter in the bill which the committee has considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would be a very bad precedent to hold that the committee could go back and amend paragraphs which it has already adopted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Just a word with reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia that the paragraph is not in possession of the committee. That is not the case. It was held in a very celebrated case in this House that after the reading of a bill had been entirely completed, pending the motion to rise the gentleman in charge of the bill could move to amend any part of the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I take issue with the gentleman on the proposition just stated. I think what he has in mind is that after the reading of a bill is completed, if inadvertently some matter has been omitted at some prior stage, the Chair will allow a return to that point.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There was no inadvertence. This was a case where the gentleman in charge of the bill, after the reading of it had been completed, offered a substantive amendment, which was held to be in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I venture to assert that the gentleman can not find any precedent which allows a Member, in the absence of unanimous consent, to return for the purposes of amendment to any part of a bill which has been passed in due course of reading by the committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I can find the precedent.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have found my precedent. Suppose the gentleman finds his.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; the gentleman did not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I did. I cited it to the Chair and the Chair made his ruling on it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The precedent cited by the gentleman is not in point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia cited a precedent which the Chair thinks covers this case directly, and the Chair feels bound by it.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me this is all one paragraph. The words "in all, $294,320," in line 23, do not properly constitute a new paragraph. The mere fact that the printer has put some quads on the end of a line and started another indented line does not make it a paragraph. The whole thing, from one end to the other, is one paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that can be so held.

Mr. PLATT. What do the words "in all $294,320" mean by themselves? Those words should be at the end of the other line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by offering, in line 23, after the figures "$294,320," the amendment which has just been presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. WINGO. I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Page 43, line 23, after the figures "$294,320," insert the following: "That paragraph 8 of section 3 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, be amended by striking out the words 'The salaries and expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board and of farm-loans registrars and examiners authorized by this section shall be paid by the United States,' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'The Federal Farm Loan Board shall levy semiannually upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks, in proportion to their gross assets, an assessment sufficient to pay the estimated expenses and salaries of the board, its appointees and employees, for the half year succeeding the levying of such assessment, together with any deficit carried forward from the preceding year, the first assessment to be made for the half year beginning July 1, 1920: Provided, That in making such assessment the board shall assess exclusively against either class of banks such expense as may be incurred exclusively on behalf of such class.'"

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I wish to make the same point of order that has been made against the provision in the bill itself.

Mr. MORGAN. I make the point of order that it changes existing law and is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order for the reasons stated in his decision heretofore made. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. TREADWAY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3037) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer, free of charge, certain surplus motor-propelled vehicles and motor equipment to the Department of Agriculture, Post Office Department, Navy Department, and the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service, and certain other surplus property to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior years, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. UNDERWOOD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Supervising Architect: Supervising Architect, $5,000; executive officer, $3,250; technical officer, $3,000; drafting division—superintendent, $3,000; assistant superintendent, $2,750; mechanical engineering division—superintendent, $2,750; assistant superintendent, $2,400; structural division—superintendent, $2,750; assistant superintendent, $2,400; superintendents—computing division, $2,750; repairs division, $2,400; accounts division, $2,500; maintenance division, $2,500; files and records division—chief, $2,500; assistant chief, $2,250; head draftsman, $2,500; 8 administrative clerks, at $2,000 each; 4 technical clerks, at $1,800 each; clerks—9 of class 4, additional to 1 of class 4 as bookkeeper $100, 4 at $1,700 each, 14 of class 3, 6 at $1,500 each, 13 of class 2, 8 at $1,300 each, 21 of class 1, 4 at $1,100 each, 7 at $1,000 each, 3 at $900 each, 2 at $840 each; photographer, $2,000; foreman, duplicating galley, $1,800; 2 duplicating paper chemists, at $1,200 each; foreman, vault, safe, and lock shop, $1,200; 5 messengers; 2 assistant messengers; messenger boys—1 $600, 2 at $480 each, 2 at $360 each; skilled laborers—4 at $1,000 each, 7 at $960 each, 1 $900, 1 $840; laborers—1 $660, 1 $600; in all, $221,020.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this paragraph carries an appropriation of $5,000 for salary for the Supervising Architect. In the last few years—I think the last four years, possibly, if I recall correctly—we have had no Supervising Architect, and the duties of that office have been performed by the executive officer. I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he has any information concerning the filling of this important office and if there are any additional excuses or explanations why this appointment has not yet been made?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only excuse I know of is that this officer is appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury and must be a practical architect, and the information I have is that the Secretary of the Treasury has not been able to find a Supervising Architect either to come up to his notion or who would accept the position.

Mr. WALSH. That is the same excuse that has been given heretofore; but as the gentleman knows, there are several laws which make provisions requiring the approval of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, not the acting Supervising Architect. I understand the executive officer is not such an architect as meets the requirements of some rule or regulation of the National Institute of Architects or the American Association of Architects, or whatever body it is which regulates these matters.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The man who is acting as Supervising Architect is not an architect at all. He is a lawyer.

Mr. WALSH. He is a very capable lawyer, and a very capable executive officer, and I think it will be agreed that he has administered the office of the Supervising Architect in a manner equal to if not a little more efficiently than it was administered when we had a Supervising Architect; but what I can not understand is why we should carry this appropriation of $5,000 year after year with no apparent effort made to fill the position. Either we ought to increase the salary of this executive officer or we ought to abolish this office of Supervising Architect and turn its duties over to the executive officer who has been doing this work. The mere fact that the American Institute of Architects lays down qualifications which prevent the appointment or acceptance of the office is no reason why we should not make some change in this paragraph. I wondered whether the gentleman had secured any information in the hearings he had on this matter which gave any hope that the Government would have this official appointed and this place filled in the near future. I understand there is no hope. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For temporary employees in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, $40,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $4,000 per annum.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 45, line 21, after the word "exceeding," strike out the figures "$4,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,600."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the salaries allowed to some of these special examiners run all the way from $2,000 up to $4,000. In this paragraph there is, however, a proviso that no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $4,000. In a prior section I have noticed where examiners of the farm-loan banks receive $3,000 and up to $4,000. I have also observed that in the surety-bond section there is only an appropriation of $2,250 for its chief, and that the recommendation of the department for an increase has been ignored notwithstanding that his is one of the most important positions in the department. That section really ought to be designated a division. The surety-bond section is doing an important work. It has to do with the proper functioning of the insurance and bonding companies that are permitted under the law to give bonds to the Government, and at the same time not only protects the Government but also the millions of policyholders who receive policies from the surety companies that are permitted to do business under the law with this Government. Therefore I can not see why the salaries in the other departments are increased, and efficient men like Dr. Jordan, who has charge of the surety-bond section, should be ignored. Not only that, but he is deprived of an assistant, and I was wondering whether it was because the surety companies have such influence with the committee whereby they can influence the committee in refusing to properly appropriate sufficient money so that they would be properly examined from time to time as they should be.

I am familiar with the situation, and I know that we can not appropriate money to a better advantage than for this purpose.

I understand that the Treasury Department has repeatedly recommended the creation of the position of an assistant to the chief of the section of surety bonds and has recommended a salary of $1,800 as reasonable compensation for such a place. I am informed that the section of surety bonds as now constituted and organized has no assistant chief of the section, but in order that the bonding work of the Government as a whole may be efficiently administered it has become necessary to detail an expert accountant, at the salary of $1,800 per annum, to act as an assistant to the section of surety bonds for the purpose of auditing the quarterly and annual statements of the 30 bonding companies which render their statements to the Government under existing law four times a year. This detail has been secured by the loan of the private secretary that properly belongs to one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury Department. I am advised further that this detail was made with the distinct understanding at the time that an effort would be made to create an $1,800 place on the roll of the section of surety bonds. As stated, this effort has been made continuously for four years, and I know of my own knowledge that members of the subcommittee on Appropriations have promised this help to the Treasury Department in the interest of efficiency and economy. Upon inquiry I find that the volume of work performed by the bonding section of the Treasury Department has grown enormously, and will continue to increase as the activities of the Government are multiplied where bonds must be taken in connection with public-building contracts, public-construction works, and from officials of the Government charged with the responsibility of disbursing public funds. I am told during the year 1918 that this bonding section handled, in the interest of the Government as a whole, 87,000 bonds, with aggregate penalties of $708,463,250. Of this number, 78,738 were given with corporate sureties. Each bond was examined and recorded and passed upon as to legal sufficiency.

As stated before, this great volume of work was done by the bonding section of the Treasury Department as part only of the work intrusted to this branch of the Government. The person in charge of this work, as well as his assistants, should be employees of high-grade ability, and the chief of the bonding section must not only be an expert accountant but a qualified lawyer. I regret to state that the salary of the expert now in charge of this important work has been fixed at $2,250 a year, which represents an increase of $250 during a period of eight years.

I know of no branch of the Government service where the work is conducted with a more conscientious regard for efficiency and economy than in this particular branch of the Government. It would seem to be elemental that the best interests of the Government demand that proper facilities be provided by Congress for carrying on this important work, affecting as it does every activity of the Government where bonds are required, by granting adequate clerical assistance and providing proper compensation for those intrusted with the duty of supervising the activities of the bonding companies doing business with the Government.

I realize that I can not now move to amend that provision owing to the unfortunate position that I am in, having been before the Committee on Immigration when this provision was reached, which I regret exceedingly. In view of the condition, however, that I know exists in that department, I think it is a great injustice that we should withhold the proper help from the surety section, and that we have also deprived this able man in charge of proper compensation to which he is entitled. I hope when the opportunity presents itself again the chairman of the committee will see the justice of my contention and will not object to an amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask now unanimous consent to return to that provision so that I can move to amend the wording of that provision by giving it proper designation and to also offer an amendment to grant an additional clerk for that section.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SABATH. I expected the gentleman would, but notwithstanding that I felt it my duty to make the request for this department which is doing so much in protecting our Government. I regret that this department is being discriminated against, as it has been in the last two sessions. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. MURPHY, may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the League of Nations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. MURPHY, be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the League of Nations. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair permit me a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for information for myself and perhaps for some other Members. Where an appropriation bill is under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and a Member from the floor offers an amendment to the bill, which amendment is clearly out of order, but which would go in if no point of order was made against it, and no member of the committee upon the floor makes a point of order against it, is it or not within the province of the Chair himself to make the point of order and rule the amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman occupying the chair would have the same right as any Member on the floor. The Chair will further state, however, that he does not as a rule exercise that right.

Mr. BLANTON. One further question for information. I am not such an old Member of the House, and I am trying to get some light. Has the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, who is a fine parliamentarian, who now occupies the chair, ever known of an occupant of the chair exercising that prerogative?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recollect a case of that kind.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman demands the regular order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes, as provided by the "revenue act of 1918," including the employment of the necessary officers, attorneys, experts, agents, accountants, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, janitors, and messengers in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, to be appointed as provided by law, telegraph and telephone service, rental of quarters outside the District of Columbia, postage, freight, express, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, furniture, mechanical devices, printing, stationery, law books and books of reference, and such other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, $21,000,000: Provided, That $4,020 of the foregoing sum may be expended for rental of quarters in the District of Columbia for a branch office of the collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland: Provided further, That not more than $500,000 of the total amount appropriated herein may be expended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for detecting and bringing to trial persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Part of this appropriation is for the payment of persons for information. What is the policy of the Government expressed through the action of this committee with regard to paying people for information, and how much shall they be paid and under what circumstances?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it used to be that anybody giving information received, I think, 50 per cent of the amount collected. That was changed, as I remember it—and I am not very distinct about it—so as to reduce that amount and authorize payment for information without requiring that the informant should be paid one-half of the sum collected. That is my recollection.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois will note that the committee now, through this provision on an appropriation bill, provides for payment for information without any limitation or any restriction whatever regarding it. It leaves the matter entirely to the discretion of the departments.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. My understanding is that this is a matter that is fixed by regulation by the department. They render an account of it and produce the vouchers.

Mr. BLANTON. I am calling to the attention of the chairman of the committee the fact that the matter, so far as this bill is concerned, is left up in the air. It seems to me there ought to be some provision put in this clause limiting it and directing the department with regard to it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], they used to pay 50 per cent, and, as I understand it, they now in no instance pay anywhere near that amount.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman realizes that the department would prefer some direction from Congress as to when such payments should be made, and the amount of same, as a guide to the department.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The information that is provided for in this item is information that brings money to the Treasury, so that the Treasury is never the loser in any event, and it is only in such cases where the Treasury Department is convinced of the fact that that is the only means they have or ever would have of bringing the money to the Treasury that this is paid.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman thinks it is wise to leave the matter unlimited and unrestricted?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think that you could well establish a law that would cover every individual case. It is a matter of discretion that must be left to some one. I do not know that it has ever been abused. If it has been, it has not been brought to my attention.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refunding taxes illegally collected under the provisions of sections 3220 and 3689, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 24, 1919, $12,000,000; and not to exceed $1,000,000 of said amount may be used in payment of certified claims over three years old without special authorization and appropriation by Congress in each individual case: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress of the disbursements hereunder as required by the act of February 24, 1919.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 20, strike out the words "authorization and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses to enforce the provisions of the "national prohibition act" and the act entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," approved December 17, 1914, as amended by the "revenue act of 1918," including the employment of executive officers, agents, inspectors, chemists, assistant chemists, supervisors, clerks, and messengers in the field and in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, to be appointed as authorized by law; the securing of evidence of violations of the acts, and for the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, laboratory supplies, books, necessary printing and binding, and such other expenditures as may be necesary in the District of Columbia and several field offices, and for rental of necessary quarters, $4,500,000: Provided, That not to exceed $49,500 of the foregoing sum shall be expended for rental of quarters in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That not to exceed $750,000 of the foregoing sum shall be expended for enforcement of the provisions of the said act of December 17, 1914.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IGOE: Strike out the paragraph beginning on line 24, page 63, and ending on line 20, page 64, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The national prohibition act (being Public, No. 66, 66th Cong.) is repealed on and after July 1, 1920."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not germane; it is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Is it not just the fact that it is too germane?

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, this involves the same point passed on by the Chairman of the committee, Mr. LONGWORTH, when he rendered a decision which covers this identical case. This paragraph has to do with the appropriation for the enforcement of the national prohibition act, and the amendment simply strikes it out and inserts a repeal of the law. It will result in a saving, and therefore it comes within the Holman rule. That decision, after a great deal of argument, was rendered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and this case is exactly on all fours with that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if it is seriously intended that this amendment is out of order, I would like to be heard upon the point.

Mr. BLANTON. Just one moment, so that the gentleman from Virginia may have the benefit of all of the point of order. I would like to make the further point of order that this is an attempt to introduce a new subject matter into this bill. There is no provision made in the bill for repealing the prohibition law. The committee, when it introduced this bill by its chairman, put us on notice what matters would be taken up and considered and argued in the Committee of the Whole, but gave Members of Congress no notice whatever that an attempt would be made in this bill to repeal the Volstead prohibition act. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] is limited under the rule, which has been in force for years, which was lately reannounced by the present occupant of the chair [Mr. TILSON] not so long ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the committee is not required to give notice to Members of Congress in order that an amendment in order may be offered on the floor. The committee has the authority to report matter within its jurisdiction, and then if a Member offers an amendment in order from the floor his amendment will be entertained.

This case on the facts is a much stronger one than the case decided by Mr. Chairman LONGWORTH on Monday last.

The bill reports an appropriation to carry out the Volstead Act. In the case decided by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] the item in the bill was a flat proposition to repeal existing law. The item was an entire paragraph. In that ruling, to which the Chair can readily turn, the gentleman from Ohio stated that there was no distinction between the right of the committee to bring in this item in the bill and the right of a Member to offer it as an amendment from the floor. What are the facts of the present situation? This is a plain proposition of reduction in the way of an amendment. The bill contains an appropriation pursuant to existing law. All of the appropriation is proposed to be stricken out and the act which furnishes the authority for the appropriation is to be repealed. The gentleman from Ohio ruled a few days ago that an item of repeal in the present bill was in order and used this illustration: That it was in order in that connection for the committee to report an appropriation under existing law, and that being so it was germane to report a proposition to repeal that law. Now, certainly it is within the authority of this committee to make an appropriation to enforce the Volstead Act. That is plainly within its jurisdiction. In the paragraph under consideration the bill appropriates to carry out the Volstead Act.

In the case referred to there was no appropriation in the bill, merely an item of repeal. But in this case there is an appropriation to make effective an act, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] offers a germane amendment to repeal the law authorizing the appropriation. Not only does this fall precisely within the ruling of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] as heretofore made, but it falls within the ruling of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], in a case cited in the manual. Permit me to submit an illustration to the Chair: Suppose the Committee on Appropriations had not appropriated to carry out the Volstead Act, but in lieu thereof had reported a provision to repeal the Volstead Act. Would not that provision have been as much in order as the item to repeal the act referred to a moment ago, namely the act providing for a legislative bureau? The committee had the authority to appropriate for this bureau. They did not choose to do so. They preferred to report a provision to repeal the statute which established that bureau. The item was held to be in order. The committee enjoys the right to appropriate to carry out the Volstead Act. They have done so. But suppose, as I have suggested, that they had not appropriated to enforce its provisions, but following the analogy of their action in the case of the legislative bureau they had reported a provision repealing the Volstead Act. The same rule that sustains the germaneness and legality of the item repealing the legislative bureau act would, of course, sustain the provision repealing the Volstead Act. This, however, is a stronger case than the prior case for the reason pointed out, namely, that an appropriation is carried in the bill to enforce the Volstead Act. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri to save this appropriation to the Treasury and all appropriations hereafter to arise under this head by repealing the Volstead Act is certainly germane to matter now in the bill and effects a retrenchment of the amount covered by the bill. If this amendment is not germane and in order under the rulings that have been made, I submit that no amendment under the Holman rule would be in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a moment on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to a ruling which has been followed here in the committee a number of times during the present session of Congress announced by Mr. Speaker Carlisle, with respect to the appropriate action of an Appropriation Committee. The Chair will remember the decision, to which reference has been made repeatedly, where Mr. Speaker Carlisle stated that the Appropriations Committee is limited in its subject matter to the propositions within the province of that committee; that it can not put on an appropriation bill a subject as a rider which it did not have authority in the first instance to report in a separate bill.

The Committee on Appropriations can not place a new subject in an appropriation bill which it would not have jurisdiction to bring before Congress in a separate bill. The Volstead prohibition act is a piece of legislation. This is not a legislative committee, and if a bill were introduced here in the House as a separate piece of legislation to repeal the Volstead Act, certainly it would not go to this committee to be passed upon, and this committee would have no authority whatever to consider or report such a bill. This committee makes no attempt to bring in as a part of this appropriation bill the repeal of the Volstead Act. The Chair will remember that Mr. Speaker Carlisle also called attention to the fact that the committee in charge of the bill has even more rights than any other member of the Committee of the Whole in the way of introducing an amendment on the floor of the House; in other words, that the committee in charge of the bill may sometimes offer germane amendments which any other Member of the House from the floor in the Committee of the Whole could not introduce as a new subject matter. He stated that when an appropriation bill is reported by the Appropriations Committee it is notice to every Member of the House as to what subjects they expect to deal with and consider in the Committee of the Whole. It is not right or proper, Mr. Speaker Carlisle said, afterwards even for the committee to seek to incorporate in an appropriation a new subject of which the members of the Committee of the Whole had no notice whatever, and I submit to the Chair that this is an entirely new subject, that it is one over which this committee would have no jurisdiction whatever if it were incorporated under a separate bill for the repeal of this Volstead Act, and therefore it is plainly and clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I think that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is clearly in order if we are to follow the late decisions of this House. On page 3364 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 23, 1920, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] rendered a decision upon a point very similar to this one. At the bottom of the second column I read to the Chair the following words:

> Under the first part of the Holman rule there is no such provision. The only thing necessary to qualify under the main part of the Holman rule when you seek to change existing law either by committee or individual actions is to show, first, that your provision is germane and that it necessarily and indubitably effects a reduction of expenses.

Now, there is no question in the world that this proposition is germane. In the first place, the provision is a matter of the enforcement of prohibition.

In the second place, the amendment strikes out all of the words that are there, and in so far it is certainly germane. And, in the third place, it seeks to repeal existing law concerning prohibition, the very subject that is here covered, and it seeks to repeal it by cutting out the possibility of appropriating any money whatsoever, and, consequently, is a reduction of expenses. So that under the rulings of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] on February 23, 1920, as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, this point is clearly within the rule as laid down.

And in the last paragraph on the same page the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] lays stress on the fact that any Member on the floor of this House would have the same right to offer any kind of an amendment that would be in order in the committee, and surely this would then be in order in the committee. I particularly draw to the attention of the Chair the following words:

> Under the circumstances, while the Chair realizes that such a ruling may afford considerable opportunity for committees to repeal laws and for Members of the House to offer amendments which repeal laws, he feels compelled to hold, under the Holman rule, that such propositions are in order if they are germane to the bill and necessarily reduce expenditures.

I therefore respectfully submit to the Chair that the Chair must either hold this amendment in order or overrule the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who is really the Chairman of the committee in the consideration of this bill. I believe in all the time I have been a Member of this House, for the past five years, no Chairman of the Committee of the Whole who has temporarily occupied the chair has failed to follow the preceding rulings of the gentleman who has been selected to preside over the committee during the consideration of a bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TILSON). The Chair is ready to rule. The paragraph in the bill under consideration is one making an appropriation of $4,500,000 for the enforcement of the national prohibition act. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] moves to strike out that paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

> The national prohibition act (being Public, No. 66, 66th Cong.) is repealed on and after July 1, 1920.

It is clear to the Chair that this amendment is germane, because the entire paragraph is concerned with the matter of enforcing the national prohibition act. It also seems to the Chair that under the Holman rule the amendment is in order under the paragraph of that rule relating to the retrenchment of expenditures "by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill." The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri would seem to come under the last clause of the portion of the rule just referred to, for it surely reduces the amount covered by the bill by the amount of $4,500,000.

Following what the present occupant of the Chair believes to be the principle enunciated two days ago by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], the regular Chairman appointed by the Speaker to preside during the consideration of this bill, he feels constrained to rule that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is in order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, inasmuch as this is a matter that will have to be voted on, that there is no quorum of the committee present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LONGWORTH). The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-five Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, how many people have violated the law?

Any farmer who has cider containing in excess of one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol and which acquired this excess either naturally or artificially since January 17, 1920, is guilty.

Any farmer who has cider in excess of one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol in any place other than his home, even though acquired prior to January 17, and which he has not reported to the commissioner, is guilty.

Any housewife who has made any kind of a beverage since January 17 containing more than one-half of 1 per cent is guilty.

Anyone who makes beer in his home containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol or more is guilty.

Right here let me say that there are thousands of people here in the District who are making beer in unconscious violation of the law. I am told that the demand for yeast is hard to supply, raisins are unobtainable, and that patent stoppers and capping machines for bottles are being purchased as fast as they can be supplied.

Anyone who has an intoxicating beverage anywhere save in his home and has not reported it to the commissioner is guilty.

Anyone who has in his possession any formula or substance designed or intended for use in making beer or wine or brandy is guilty.

Anyone who carries a drink even from his home and from a supply he may lawfully have is guilty.

I read yesterday that a man in Virginia was arrested for having on his person a hot-water bottle full of whisky. I suppose the inspectors will now have to inspect all the hot-water bottles in the country. This dangerous perversion of the use of the hot-water bottles must stop. Perhaps it might be well to make it a crime to have a hot-water bottle anywhere except in one's home. I shall have to talk to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] about this.

Anyone who gives another a drink except in the home of the giver is guilty.

Anyone who buys a drink is as guilty as the seller.

I ask whether it is necessary in the enforcement of prohibition to brand as criminals millions of farmers, laborers, and citizens in every walk of life who have done nothing in itself harmful to themselves or to others and whose only offense consists in following the customs and practices of a lifetime?

Surely it was not in the minds of the framers of the amendment that this Congress would make a felon of a farmer who made cider for his family and friends, or a housewife who made wine in the home, or the workingman who would drink a glass of beer.

I venture to say that if the Volstead Act could have been presented to the legislatures of the various States at the time they were called upon to ratify the constitutional amendment not a State in the Union would have ratified the amendment.

There are so many more of these drastic and unreasonable provisions that I think I am safe in saying that since this law went into effect it has been violated to such an extent that if the law was strictly enforced there would be more of the adult population of the United States in jail than out of jail.

I believe this law should be repealed and a sensible constitutional enforcement measure passed. When this law was discussed in the House I said it would take $50,000,000 a year to enforce it, and an army of agents. I noticed a few days ago that a distinguished Senator was quoted as saying it would take $50,000,000 annually to enforce it. The States which have had local prohibition laws are going to throw the whole burden of enforcement on the Federal Government, and they might as well, because it is apparent from events in Michigan that State officers will be compelled to do so by overzealous Federal agents.

There are in the United States to-day about 10,000,000 people who have in some way violated this law already, and, of course, we can not put them all in jail. It is possible that the reason for retaining the law is that it could be used as a sort of revenue measure. Ten million violators, at $100 fine each, would raise $1,000,000,000, and by fining them $500 each we could easily raise $5,000,000,000.

Now, of course, if this law is repealed it will be sad news to the Anti-Saloon League. It would stop their effort to "touch" the American people in a "drive" for funds ostensibly to enforce it, but actually to defeat all candidates for office—local, State, and National—who will not do their bidding.

Personally I do not like the idea of law enforcement in the hands of voluntary spies, and if this law is to be retained let the American Congress appropriate the funds for the employment of the Government agents necessary to enforce it. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. BLANTON, and Mr. GARD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is recognized.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

The committee divided.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the motion to close debate. I move that debate be closed in 20 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The committee divided, and the affirmative vote has been submitted to the committee, and the vote ought to be completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had not announced the vote. So the Chair thinks the gentleman from Ohio may offer his amendment. The gentleman from Ohio moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Indiana by closing the debate in 20 minutes. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 24.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. IGOE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. We ought to check this up at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 89.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall submit to Congress on the first day of its next regular session a detailed statement showing the number, designation, and annual rate of compensation of the persons employed and the amounts expended for rent and other authorized purposes in the District of Columbia from the foregoing appropriations for the collection of internal revenue.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I suppose this paragraph was intended to require detailed statements concerning the officers appointed for the enforcement of the prohibition act as well as those for the collection of internal revenue. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out on page 65, line 2, the words "the collection of."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 65, line 2, strike out the words "the collection of."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, formerly this whole subject was carried under the head of "Collecting internal revenue." The committee this year leave out the word "collecting" and say it is only "internal revenue," and so the amendment I have offered would provide a detailed statement concerning all of the matter, while with the statement in the bill it would not carry the subject of enforcing the prohibition act.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that is correct.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal of discussion in connection with this subject of the enforcement of the liquor laws with reference to the State of Michigan for the past few days. I would like to read to the House—and in that way call to the attention of the country—a statement from the prosecuting attorney of Iron County, Mich., upon the subject. It is a very brief statement and I think it covers the situation completely. The prosecutor says, in the Detroit Free Press, referring to the so-called revolution in Michigan:

There hasn't been such a hoax put over on the country since the fake armistice report as this report of the "rum rebellion" in Iron County.

There is no rebellion in Iron County. It is a clean county. Prohibition is being enforced to the limit and my office is giving the Federal agents every aid possible.

I have wired the governor and the attorney general of the State and the Federal Attorney General at Washington, demanding a full and complete investigation as to who started the report of this so-called "rebellion."

The Free Press continues:

Prosecuting Attorney McDonough frankly admits taking possession of wine which had been confiscated by Leo J. Grove, of Marquette, Federal agent, whose report of this incident, he charges, was embellished to the extent that it had become a national sensation. He gives as his reason for this action that Grove failed to produce satisfactory credentials. McDonough claims that he still has possession of this wine and is perfectly willing to turn it over to any accredited Federal agents. Furthermore, he declares his willingness to cooperate in any way with Federal or State authorities in the enforcement of prohibition.

I call it to the attention of the House as an illustration of the extent to which a minor matter of misunderstanding as to authority can be transformed into a national sensation in the effort to cast discredit on a great national reform.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Does the gentleman contend that the people up there are in favor of prohibition? Do you know anything about it?

Mr. CRAMTON. I only know this: I can not speak of that particular county, but I will speak for that district, and I will say that after we had had State-wide prohibition in Michigan for over a year the question came up of returning to light wine and beer alone, and every city in the State of Michigan, with the exception of two, rejected the proposition.

Mr. GALLAGHER. In Michigan? The people of Michigan are not in favor of prohibition.

Mr. CRAMTON. The only trouble with the gentleman's opinion is that it is a theory that is absolutely contradicted by the vote of the people of the State of Michigan as to beer and wine alone.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate is exhausted.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this paragraph, which relates to the enforcement of the liquor law, I want to say that I believe that since the law went into effect it has been enforced in the District of Columbia. I want to say that I believe I go around with my eyes open about as much as any other Member of Congress. I want to say that I believe that I see with my eyes just about as much as any other ordinary Member of Congress, and I want to say that in the District of Columbia, since the Volstead prohibition law went into effect, I have seen but one man in the District of Columbia under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman name him? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. No; I will not embarrass anyone. It should be said to the credit of the splendid chief of police of this District, whom we have just lost and whom we shall miss greatly—be it said to his great honor, to the clean, active, law-enforcing life which he lived here, due to his efforts, the prohibition law was enforced in the District of Columbia. I want to say that when my time comes to die I hope, like this great chief of police, I may be able to look into my Maker's face and say, "I am not afraid to die; I have done what I could in behalf of my country and in the performance of my duty."

I want to say that all this mess which the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] has just placed in the RECORD about the alleged disregard of the law and violations of this law is all tommyrot. Those alleged violations do not exist in the proportion which he would indicate to this House. The Constitution of the United States says that from and after the 16th day of January, 1920, the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor shall cease, and it says that Congress should enact proper laws to enforce that provision of the Constitution. The first thing we do when we become Members of Congress is to take an oath that we will uphold the Constitution of the United States, and I hope that this amendment which the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] has just offered, and which has been defeated overwhelmingly in this Committee of the Whole, will be the last attempt by a Member of Congress to thwart the will of the people expressed by their many and numerous legislatures in adopting the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. We are either for the Constitution or we are against it, and I hope that there will be no further attempt on the part of Members of Congress to get around the highest law of the land, the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JUUL. Is the gentleman from Texas in favor of all the amendments to the Constitution?

Mr. BLANTON. I am in favor of the law of my land and my country, and I will fight to uphold the Constitution of the United States until it is changed.

Mr. JUUL. Do you have Democratic white primaries in your district?

Mr. BLANTON. Sometimes we do and sometimes we do not. [Laughter.] But I want to say that in my district every negro has the privilege of voting if he wants to, and I have been elected partly by the negro vote of my district. I believe that I get 100 per cent of such vote when they do vote in my district, and I think many of them do vote in my district.

Does the gentleman from Illinois want to ask me any other question? If not, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if all the law of the land is strictly enforced in his State and in his district?

Mr. JUUL. I think it is enforced in a fair comparison with its enforcement in the State that the gentleman from Texas comes from.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. JUUL. But there is an amendment pending to strike out the entire paragraph, made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. That was a pro forma amendment.

Mr. PLATT. That is not a pro forma amendment. He moved that the paragraph be stricken out.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a pro forma amendment. If the gentleman wants a vote on it, I will vote against my own amendment. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I think I was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had not recognized the gentleman. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now arises as to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The question is on the perfecting amendment, to strike from the paragraph the words "for the collection of internal revenue."

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDEPENDENT TREASURY.

The Subtreasuries located at Baltimore, New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, and San Francisco shall be discontinued December 31, 1920, or at such earlier date with respect to each such Subtreasury as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, and upon each such discontinuance all offices created under existing laws at each such Subtreasury shall be abolished. All employees in the Subtreasuries in the classified civil service of the United States, who may so desire, shall be eligible for transfer to classified civil-service positions under the control of the Treasury Department, or if their services are not required in such department they may be transferred to fill vacancies in any other executive department with the consent of such department. To the extent that such employees possess required qualifications, they shall be given preference over new appointments in the classified civil service under the control of the Treasury Department in the cities in which they are now employed.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers a substitute for the paragraph just read, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PLATT: Strike out the paragraph just read, on lines 4 to 21, inclusive, on page 65, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 3595 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, providing for the appointment of an assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, St. Louis, San Francisco, Cincinnati, and Chicago, and all laws or parts of laws so far as they authorize the establishment or maintenance of offices of such assistant treasurers or of Subtreasuries of the United States are hereby repealed from and after July 1, 1921; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to discontinue from and after such date or at such earlier date or dates as he may deem advisable, such Subtreasuries and the exercise of all duties and functions by such assistant treasurers or their offices. The office of each assistant treasurer specified above and the services of any officers or other employees assigned to duty at his office shall terminate upon the discontinuance of the functions of that office by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to transfer any or all of the duties and functions performed or authorized to be performed by the assistant treasurers above enumerated, or their offices, to the Treasurer of the United States or the mints and assay offices of the United States, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, or to utilize any of the Federal reserve banks acting as depositaries or fiscal agents of the United States, as provided by existing law, for the purpose of performing any or all of such duties and functions. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 15 of the Federal reserve act, as amended, or any other provisions of law, the Secretary of the Treasury may deposit or carry with any Federal reserve bank any securities, moneys, bullion, or funds authorized by law to be deposited or carried with the Treasurer of the United States or with any of the assistant treasurers: Provided, however, That any such trust funds or other special funds or special deposits of securities, moneys, or bullion deposited or carried with a Federal reserve bank shall be kept separate and distinct from the assets, funds, and securities of the Federal reserve bank and be held in the joint custody of the Federal reserve agent and the Federal reserve bank: And provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to deny the right of the Treasury to use member banks as depositaries as heretofore authorized by law.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to assign any or all the rooms, vaults, equipment, and safes or space in the buildings used by the Subtreasuries to any Federal reserve bank acting as fiscal agent of the United States.

"Al the employees in the Subtreasuries in the classified service of the United States, who may so desire, shall be eligible for transfer to classified civil-service positions under the control of the Treasury Department, or if their services are not required in such department they may be transferred to fill vacancies in any other executive department with the consent of such department. To the extent that such employees possess required qualifications, they shall be given preference over new appointments in the classified civil service under the control of the Treasury Department in the cities in which they are now employed."

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee I make the point of order against the amendment that it is new legislation, that it does not decrease the amount of the bill, and that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, before I overlook it I want to suggest that the section numbers 2, 3, and 4 as read should be eliminated from the amendment. The Clerk was reading from a copy of a bill which has been reported from the Banking and Currency Committee. Evidently those section numbers should not be there.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will eliminate the section numbers.

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT. This certainly decreases the appropriation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, since the point of order has been made, I should like to have a chance to discuss it.

Mr. VARE. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It seems to me the substitute proposed is clearly subject to a point of order. The original paragraph in the bill provides for the abolition of the Subtreasuries, and if that were all that the substitute proposed to do, in different language, it would be in order. But the substitute goes away beyond that and provides affirmative legislation with reference to how the work shall be carried on which is now carried on by the Subtreasuries, and a lot of other affirmative propositions in addition to the abolition of the Subtreasuries.

Mr. PLATT. That is absolutely necessary. You can not abolish the Subtreasuries and leave billions of dollars of gold and bullion lying in them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I think we can, and I hope we will.

Mr. PLATT. Somebody has got to look after them and guard them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is all very well. The gentleman's committee has the power to bring in positive legislation dealing with that matter.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman concedes that the paragraph carried in the bill for which the amendment is to be a substitute is in order, does he not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do, so far as the abolition is concerned.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman point out the difference between the substitute offered and the bill, except the provisions which cover the transference of duties from the Subtreasury officers to the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The provision in the bill, as a matter of fact, was subject to a point of order. Although the point of order would not lie as to the abolition of the Subtreasuries, it carries a positive provision with reference to the employees in the Subtreasuries, and that part of the paragraph was subject to a point of order. Now, we have a right to abolish the Subtreasuries. I think we have a right to transfer the duties to some other branch of the Government, but I think that on an appropriation bill we have no right to go ahead and provide a lot of affirmative legislation which may be in a way connected with the abolition of the Subtreasuries, positively providing law for certain things which are not now provided for at all. That goes away beyond the authority to retrench expenditures by the abolition of officers or in any other way. If under the plea of abolishing an office you can then go ahead with affirmative legislation, there would be no end to the proposition. Suppose, for instance, that we had the proper appropriation bill, such as a deficiency bill, before us concerning the Army. Now, under that you could repeal certain provisions creating the Army, but you could not follow that up with an Army reorganization bill. That is what they propose to do here. While I think it probably ought to be done, I do not believe it can be done in this way.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that you can not abolish something without taking care of the consequences of the abolition. There is no affirmative legislation here except to say what shall be done with what is in the Subtreasuries now.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York point out to the Chair under which provision of the Holman rule his amendment is in order? Will he point out to the Chair where it will reduce the number of officers or their pay?

Mr. PLATT. It absolutely abolishes the Subtreasury and takes out entirely the salaries of the Subtreasurers. It saves about $350,000 in expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. But it provides affirmative legislation with regard to what shall be done for the employees.

Mr. PLATT. The language with regard to the employees is exactly the same as that carried in the bill, to which no point of order was raised.

Mr. WINGO. May I suggest to the Chair that, as the gentleman from New York has suggested, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is a bill that the Banking and Currency Committee have carefully considered, recognizing that the House wanted to abolish the Subtreasuries. Realizing that the abolition of the Subtreasuries with the simple provision in the appropriation bill would work confusion in the Treasury Department, the committee brought in a bill to cover the subject. First, we held numerous hearings and had before us the Federal Reserve Board and representatives of the Treasury, the Federal reserve agent at New York, and others, and then we brought in a bill that will take care of the transference and that will take care of the civil-service employees in the Subtreasuries; and, as a matter of fact, it will reduce expenditures, because it not only abolishes certain offices but it transfers to the Federal reserve banks the performance of certain duties that now cost the United States Government thousands of dollars. So that the provision which is in addition to what is in the bill will on its face reduce expenditures.

On the question of the civil-service employees, as a matter of fact when we amended the bill in the committee we substituted word for word the provisions that are in the appropriation bill with reference to the civil-service employees; and no point of order having been made against that, it certainly is germane to carry it in a substitute that is offered, because, as a matter of fact, as to that portion of it it is not a substitute, but a simple repetition of the language of the bill itself.

I want to suggest this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]: If you are going to abolish these Subtreasuries, there ought to be some provision made for carrying out the abolition to its logical conclusion, thereby saving the money and saving the confusion that will come to the Treasury if you do not make proper provision.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I heartily agree with the gentleman; I have no doubt there ought to be, and I have no doubt there will be, positive legislation on the subject if we can abolish the Subtreasuries; but before that abolition takes place Congress will legislate on the subject through the committee that has jurisdiction.

Mr. WINGO. That is aside from the question of the point of order. I want to suggest that the provision which provides for this transfer on the face provides for the transfer of the duties from a public office to the Federal reserve banks and thereby saves money to the Treasury.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is a mere matter of argument.

Mr. WINGO. Does not that appear on the face?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think not; I do not think it appears on the face that the transference of a duty from one officer to another saves money. My experience is that invariably it increases the expense. I think the abolition of the Subtreasuries will reduce expenses, but the reorganization will greatly increase expenses.

Mr. WINGO. I want to submit this: The additional provision carried in the amendment of the gentleman from New York not only abolishes the Subtreasuries, but abolishes all the officers, the assistant treasurers and others, and provides for the removal of the load on the Treasury of the United States, where it would go if you adopted the House provision. The transfer to the Federal reserve banks with reference to the special and trust fund, and so forth, on its face shows that it is a greater reduction than the language that it seeks to strike out, because the abolition of the additional offices and the cutting out of the additional expenses would have to be borne by the Treasury of the United States, so it certainly should be held in order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope the Chair can hold it in order, for I think it is a good thing, but I do not see how he can.

Mr. PLATT. The paragraph that transfers the duties from the Subtreasury to the Federal banks saves money to the Treasury, because the salaries are paid by the bank and not by the United States Government.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the proposed legislation is not only new legislation but it fails to reduce expenditures? In addition to that, it is tying onto an appropriation bill authority for the transfer of the Subtreasuries, which is purely a governmental function and under the direct control of the Government, to what may be considered a semiprivate corporation, the Federal reserve bank, and it is clearly out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It is clear that this is legislation and out of order on the bill unless it comes under the Holman rule. To come under the Holman rule it is only necessary to show that it will reduce the number of officers, retrench expenditures, and save money. A similar item to this, provided by the Committee on Appropriations, has twice been ruled upon, repealing a law or modifying or changing the law concerning Subtreasuries. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] introduces some new features, but in the main the Chair is inclined to think that it follows, in so far as the reduction of expenditures is concerned, the provisions of the committee which the Chair would have held to be in order.

The Chair does not believe that he has any right to guess as to whether in the long run this would reduce expenditures or not, but it seems absolutely clear on the face of it that if this amendment, abolishing as it does all the officers of the Subtreasuries, merely transfers the employees to some other sphere of duty it must necessarily save money, and therefore the Chair thinks it comes under the Holman rule and is in order.

The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM and Mr. BLANTON) there were 57 ayes and 14 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the officers and employees in the various Subtreasuries from July 1 to December 31, 1920, inclusive, or to such earlier date as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine, at annual rates of compensation as follows.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The amendment just agreed to would require an appropriation for the Subtreasuries for the entire fiscal year. Would it not be well to pass over these items for the present until the committee has an opportunity to compute the amount?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It would be twice the amount provided for here.

Mr. DUPRÉ. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question in the same line?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Should not, in line 23, the limitation of December 31, 1920, be eliminated?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I raised the point of order to see whether this ought not to be changed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the change was made by striking out December 31, 1920, it would be to insert June 30, 1921.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All you need do is to make the appropriation for the Subtreasuries, because the time is taken care of by the first provision of the bill. If I was chairman I would ask unanimous consent to pass over these items or paragraphs down to "Mint and assay offices" until I got it in shape, and then offer it as the amount for the entire fiscal year.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield along that line? I am trying to help clarify the situation. Look at page 66, first paragraph, and the total for the Baltimore office. Is not that for the whole year?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; it is for half a year.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I want to call attention to the fact that some of these may be abolished within the time specified.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will yield, would it not be in the interest of good legislation to change the date and say from the 1st of July, 1920, to the 1st of July, 1921?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no occasion for that paragraph in the bill at all if you are going to make the appropriation for the entire fiscal year, as you have got to under the amendment just agreed to.

Mr. GARD. This paragraph provides for annual rates of compensation, set out afterwards.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That paragraph was intended to cover only one-half of the fiscal year.

Mr. GARD. I understand; but when we change the law is it not in the interest of good legislation to appropriate for the entire fiscal year instead of for half a year?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The whole paragraph can go out, because there is no occasion for it. We are making an appropriation under the general terms of the bill for the entire fiscal year, and that is what we have got to do in respect to the Subtreasuries if we leave this amendment in. Therefore I suggest that it be passed over to give the committee an opportunity to prepare an amendment as they want it to go in, assuming that they want to conform to the action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass over the items intervening from page 65 to the subject of the mints and assay offices on page 69.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Including the paragraph at the bottom of page 65?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it the intention, then, to make an appropriation for the full fiscal year for these employees?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the intention.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And for the next fiscal year they would not at least be affected by the passage of this bill as amended.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They would not be unless the Secretary of the Treasury abolishes them sooner.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Under this amendment I take it that he can abolish them before that time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Oh, he has the right under the Platt amendment to abolish them before that time if he thinks proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to pass over all of the language beginning on line 22, page 65, up to and including line 7 on page 69. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this amendment was introduced and passed so suddenly that we have not had time to comprehend it yet.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If we pass over all these things it will give the gentleman a chance.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I know, and that is all very well, but will it cover employees in the civil service as was done in the amendment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The amendment that we agreed to is exactly the same as that in the bill. We struck out what was in our bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The civil service is just the same as it is now in the bill?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The amendment that we have adopted abolishes them only after the 1st of July, 1921, so that they are in for 12 months after the 1st of next July.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I merely wanted to understand the amendment and what is proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it intended to preserve the opportunity for making proper points of order to the matter brought in?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It could not be otherwise.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We are to take the matter up just as we would have taken it up at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Denver, Colo., Mint: Superintendent, $4,500; assayer, $3,000; superintendent, melting and refining department, $3,000; superintendent, coining department, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,500; cashier, $2,500; deposit weight clerk, $2,000; bookkeeper, $2,000; assistant assayer, $2,200; assayer's assistant, $2,000; assistant cashier, $1,800; clerks—two at $2,000 each, three at $1,800 each, three at $1,600 each, one $1,400, one $1,200; private secretary, $1,200; in all, $46,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking if the words in line 17, page 69, "deposit weight clerk," are correct?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it is not. The correct term is "weigh" instead of "weight." Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "weight," in line 17, page 69, and insert in lieu thereof the word "weigh."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to correct the word "weight" by substituting therefor the word "weigh." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,300.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GANDY: Page 71, after line 23, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"Deadwood, S. Dak., assay office: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; clerk, $1,000; in all, $4,000.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,200."

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in the amendment introduced by me for the United States assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak., is so pitifully small in comparison with the amount carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill that were I not personally familiar with the benefits accruing from said office and the loss that its discontinuance would entail I would not thus take up the time of the House. Establishment of this assay office was authorized under paragraph 10 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill approved February 19, 1897. It was established shortly thereafter and has continued to serve a useful purpose to this day.

I am somewhat amazed at the action of the committee in eliminating this item, and I say that not in any spirit of criticism, for I have every confidence that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and those associated with him on the subcommittee having charge of this bill labored earnestly and long in an honest endeavor to bring into this House a bill that would provide for all necessary governmental activities and at the same time be as economical as possible. The members of that subcommittee are members of integrity and standing in this House, and it is with some degree of hesitancy that I feel compelled to dissent to their action in this matter. The record, Mr. Chairman, is written in black and white, and I have searched that record of the hearings before this subcommittee for one line or one word of testimony on which the committee might have based the elimination of this item, but to no avail. On page 804 of the hearings Mr. WASON asked the Director of the Mint, Mr. Baker, a question with relation to the transportation charges of the Deadwood assay office and the answer disclosed that the Homestake Mining Co., the largest in the Black Hills, does not deliver its bullion to the Deadwood assay office. Mr. WASON then asked this direct question, "Then why should the Deadwood office be continued?" To which the director replied, "For the simple reason that there are a lot of small producers who bring their bullion there." Then Mr. WASON asked a question, which, to say the least, shows a lack of familiarity with business conditions when he said: "If there was no office at Deadwood would they not take it to the Homestake mine and get their money from them?" To which the director answered: "No; they would not."

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that nothing in the hearings discloses the reason for this action by the committee, and especially in the face of the fact that the Director of the Mint gave a specific reason for the continuation of the office, and further, on page 805, with relation to the offices generally he said: "I want to put the assay offices in the position where they are going to function. Instead of turning down people who come to the office with their bullion I want to be able to accept it and handle it expeditiously."

At this time I want to read you a telegram which I have received from the Hon. Edwin W. Martin, my predecessor, who during his 14 years of service here became one of the commanding figures on the Republican side of the House:

The United States assay office at Deadwood should not only be continued but it should receive an increased appropriation that will enable it to handle all of the business of this section. In the past it has only been able to serve the small mines, many of which were forced to suspend production of gold on account of labor shortage and increased cost of supplies and materials incident to the war. These mines are now looking forward to the resumption of production, and with the approach of normal conditions every assistance should be given them to stimulate gold production. There is not a commercial assay office in the Black Hills, and the removal of the office will be a serious handicap to many small mines now being developed. The records of the office will show that when the appropriations were sufficient to handle the production of the Homestake mine it was self-sustaining. The office not only furnishes reliable and accurate information for the prospector and small operator but to the investor as well. Its discontinuance would be an inestimable loss to the gold miners of the Black Hills, a section which has produced over two hundred millions in gold.

Mr. Martin is right. For many years the Deadwood assay office was practically self-supporting, and only when the appropriation for its maintenance was reduced to the extent that it was unable to handle all the bullion produced in the Black Hills did the Homestake Mining Co. begin sending its bullion elsewhere. This office does serve the small companies, the prospectors, and the investors. It is approximately 500 miles from there to the nearest United States or commercial assay office.

The last report available on the gold production of South Dakota was on November 6, 1919, issued by the Secretary of the Interior for the year 1918, and it discloses that in that year 22 mines produced 317,598.18 fine ounces of gold, with a value of $6,565,337, and 159,202 fine ounces of silver, with a value of $159,202. Of course, the major portion of that was produced by the Homestake, and while that amount shows a decrease from previous years, yet it is nothing short of remarkable that so much was produced in view of conditions prevailing in the gold industry, which I shall mention later.

Both in this Congress and during the war we have heard speeches as to the necessity for the production of tungsten, and I point you to the fact that the production of that metal increased from 140 tons in 1915 in the Black Hills of South Dakota to 201 tons in 1918.

In my judgment the real necessity for the continuation of this office lies not so much in the fact that it is of assistance and convenience to the smaller producing companies as it does in the opportunity that it provides to prospectors and investors to secure an assay of unquestioned integrity, such as is given by an assay from a United States assay office. In 1915, 608 individual assays were made in the Deadwood assay office, 778 in 1916, 904 in 1917, 616 in 1918, and 557 in 1919. Thus we see, Mr. Chairman, that the prospector has been busy, and none but one with the wisdom of God himself can tell whether or not the claim from whence came the rock of one or more of those assays is a potential Homestake or a Comstock or a Treadwell.

A charge of $1 is made for each of those assays, and I am frank to say if I had my way they would be made free of charge, for it occurs to me that with the urgent necessity for the production of gold in order that the financial reserves, not only in this country but of lands beyond the seas, may be maintained, every possible assistance should be given to him who seeks to uncover precious metals and mine them from the earth.

I am sure, if the membership of this House could be fully acquainted with the situation so that they might realize the urgent need for the continuation of this office and the benefits that accrue therefrom not only to the immediate locality but to the Nation, there would be no doubt but that by an overwhelming majority this amendment would be adopted. Gold production has, indeed, been passing through critical days. It may be a shock to you, after having made and listened for many months past to speeches on the rising cost of living, to pause and realize that gold is the one metal in all production that has decreased in value during the war. I know, Mr. Chairman, that its price is stationary, having been fixed by law, and yet, measured by what it will buy, it has decreased in value, and materially so. This and other nations long ago fixed the price of gold at $20.67 plus per fine ounce. That price is fixed and stationary, and while various plans have been suggested looking to the relief of the gold producer, yet up to this time no concrete action has been taken by this or any other nation. Realizing, Mr. Chairman, this desperate situation financially, in which every gold-producing concern finds itself, and knowing full well the national needs for the production of gold, I beg of you, gentlemen of this House, that you do not now, for the mere sake of saving $7,200, cripple the gold production of the Black Hills of South Dakota, from which locality this Nation has been enriched since 1876 by the production of nearly $300,000,000 of precious metals.

I do not live in the mining community, my home being where agriculture is predominant, but I do know the needs of those gold-mining camps, and I understand the problems that to-day confront them. In language just as strong as I know how to put it, I implore you to vote for this amendment, and in so doing for the continuation of the Deadwood assay office.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the facts on which the subcommittee, afterwards approved by the general committee, based its action for the abolishment of this office. The office has been declining, so far as its activities are concerned, for a number of years. I call the gentleman's attention to the hearings. He said that he has searched these hearings to find one item of evidence that would warrant the committee in taking the action that it has taken. If he will refer to page 820 of the hearings he will there find disclosed the activities of this assay office for a number of years. I will call attention to some of these figures, which are indicative of the amount of work that is done at this office, and also indicative of the amount of business and the importance that should be attached thereto.

In 1912 the number of deposits of this assay office were 473. At that time the income was $10,917.95. The expense was $14,096, so it was then costing the Government nearly $4,000 a year more than the income. In 1913 the deposits had decreased to 426, with an income of $13,208, with an outlay of $14,393, which was a net loss to the Government. Now, in 1914, the number of deposits dropped from 426 to 193——

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. GANDY. I want to say to the gentleman that the Director of the Mint notified both the local assay office and the Homestake Mining Co. that he could not longer receive its bullion because the appropriation for the maintenance of the office had been cut down by Congress. It is not because the gold is not produced there, but because by the action of Congress the bullion was forced elsewhere.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say the appropriations during six years have been running along at the same amount, so that there is nothing in that contention.

Mr. GANDY. But, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there? The gentleman does not mean to stand on that statement?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. On what statement?

Mr. GANDY. That the appropriations have been the same.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Since when were they reduced?

Mr. GANDY. They were changed in the appropriation bill for 1914, when the amount was very materially reduced. The figures speak for themselves.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For the last six years from 1915, as shown by the record immediately before me, the appropriation has been exactly the same.

Mr. GANDY. I just stated the appropriation was reduced in 1914.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, they have been reduced because of the fact no doubt that the amount of business was constantly growing less. If the gentleman will pardon me, my time will be up in a minute. Now these deposits have decreased from 426 in 1913 down to 63 in 1919. The expense to the Government in 1919 was $7,515 and the amount of income was $764. It can not be seriously contended by any gentleman that we should maintain these as mere conveniences at this net outlay, because if we were to do that there are thousands and thousands of activities in the Government that might be maintained for the convenience of the people. We might have in all the cities of this country various offices with reference to different matters that would be of great convenience to the people, but we can not maintain these institutions merely for convenience. The Treasury time and time again has advocated the abolishment of these offices. In my opinion there should have been more abolished this time than the two that have been, and certainly when the amount of revenue derived by the Government is less than $1,000, and when the outlay to the Government is more than seven times the amount of the income it certainly is time that they should be abolished and avoid this loss of money to the United States Government.

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman surely does not expect all of these bureaus, established for the benefit of producers of various kinds, to pay a net profit from direct fees charged by the Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not.

Mr. MAYS. Does the gentleman expect the Agricultural Department bureaus to pay?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. But I do expect that when a failing institution like this is continued, failing for at least five or six years, and when it is perfectly apparent on its face that there is no reasonable chance for its increase, that it is time to cut it off.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would like to have five more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAYS. I wish to ask one more question, if the gentleman will yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well.

Mr. MAYS. If this convenience serves a community that produced to the Treasury forty or fifty millions a year and cost three or four thousand, what would the gentleman say as to the wisdom of that outlay?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The trouble is the evidence does not support the statement. The number of deposits—we are now considering the Deadwood office—in 1919 were 63, as compared with 426 in 1916. It has been reduced more than sevenfold, while the expense to the Government has increased more than sevenfold in comparison with the income.

Mr. MAYS. But the gentleman must realize that during the war all gold mining practically ceased, and the men who were engaged in such mining went into the war to serve their country and are now going back into prospecting.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We had no war in 1916. At that time the number of deposits were only 97, as compared with 473 in 1913.

Mr. MAYS. That only takes into consideration the bullion deposits, but does not take into consideration the private assays made for prospectors who discover the mines.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yet the amount of income that year was $1,927, while the outlay was $6,926.

Mr. MAYS. Does the gentleman take into consideration the income derived from the mining industries established by these prospectors?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am taking into consideration the fact that the United States Government is paying far too much for this activity in proportion to the amount that it is receiving from the income.

Now, contrast this assay office with the San Francisco Mint and Assay Office or with a number of these other mints and you will see that the latter are revenue raisers for the United States Government.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Is there an assay office at San Francisco?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is a mint there.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Does the gentleman know the difference between a mint and an assay office?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They do assay office work at the United States mint.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. And they make money at the mint by the coinage of money, too, and their surplus.

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman should realize that there is no mining industry in San Francisco. Our appeal to the committee to continue this office is based on the fact that it stimulates production and stimulates an industry in my State which produced $55,000,000 last year alone and cost the Government $3,500.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Whether they have an assay office there or not, they will continue to produce the ore as long as it can be produced in paying quantities, and the most that can be said for this is that it is a mere convenience. It is not the only way assays can be made. You take the technical universities in every one of the States of the Union where there are gold mines, and they have their laboratories in which assays are made. There are private institutions that make them. It is another piece of paternalism that you are trying to keep up in this country by continuing these assay offices.

But these States are no longer infants with reference to their industries, no longer infants with reference to the manner in which they are producing their ores or whereby they can have their assays made. There are private assay establishments in this country and there are public assay establishments in this country. I dare say there is one in South Dakota in connection with its college.

Mr. GANDY. I make the assertion that there is not within about 500 miles, or nearer than Denver, any United States or commercial assay office. The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States eliminated from all assay offices and mints by his own act the assaying and stamping charge, and that in itself is largely responsible for the decrease in the income. Our people would be willing to have it go back; they had nothing whatever to do with its being taken off.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no question but that the Treasury of the United States has long recognized the fact that these institutions should be abolished, and has frequently recommended their abolishment. And it occurs to me that we should look to the heads of these establishments, who are primarily responsible not only for the good conduct of the Government—and they certainly would not want to cripple the mining industries of the country—but we look to those who are in position not only to inform us with reference to their necessities but who are also our advisers with reference to where we can retrench in expenditure. It occurs to me that the time has come now when this assay office should be abolished.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 40.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WOOD of Indiana and Mr. GANDY took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 50.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, including new machinery and repairs, wastage in the melting and refining department, and loss on sale of sweeps arising from the treatment of bullion, $150,000.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAYS: Page 72, line 17, after the figures "$150,000," insert:

"Salt Lake City, Utah, assay office: Assayer in charge, who shall perform the duties of melter, chief clerk, and cashier, $1,800; for services of workmen and other employees, $1,500; for incidental and contingent expenses, $600; in all, $3,900."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MAYS. On what ground?

Mr. BLANTON. That it is new legislation and not authorized by law.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MAYS. It has been carried for many years and is found in Thirty-fifth Statutes, page 474, the act of May 30, 1908, "An act to establish an assay office in Salt Lake City, State of Utah," and since that time appropriations for the assay office have been carried.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman cite the act of law?

Mr. MAYS. I have just stated it is the act of May 30, 1908, chapter 223, an act entitled "An act to establish an assay office in Salt Lake City, State of Utah."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, for many years there has been carried in the legislative bill a small appropriation for an assay office in Salt Lake City. My amendment seeks to continue the provision carried in the current law. If I believed that the elimination of the assay office at Salt Lake City would save the country any money, I would not offer the amendment. It is easy to see the difficulty under which the committee seeking to economize must labor. Every retrenchment offends some Member, and if each of us were successful in resisting the will of the committee there would be no reduction of expenses.

In this instance, however, I wish to show that valuable service is being rendered by the United States assay office at Salt Lake City to the prospectors and mining fraternity of that region, who in turn are contributing many millions of dollars to the United States Treasury. The city is the mining center of the United States. More valuable metals are produced within a radius of 700 miles of Salt Lake City than within any similar radius in the world. More ores are smelted there than at any other point in the world. I believe the county of Salt Lake, in which this office is located, produces more valuable metals than any other single county in the country. In the total annual value of such minerals Utah stands first of all the States in the Union. Its total dividends have exceeded those of any State in the Union. During the last year before our entrance in the war Utah produced over $55,000,000; Colorado over $33,000,000; Idaho more than $30,000,000; Nevada, $30,000,000; Montana, $47,000,000; and while I have not yet received the official figures for the year just past, they will approximate as follows: Utah, $75,000,000; Arizona, $70,000,000; Montana, $65,000,000; Idaho, $40,000,000; Colorado, $37,000,000; Nevada, $32,000,000, with the other surrounding States in the intermountain country following with substantial production.

These totals run into the hundreds of millions, and they are gradually increasing. Many millions of this wealth are going into the United States Treasury. Utah alone contributed to the Treasury during the war, in bond purchases, income and profit taxes, and other contributions, more than $100,000,000, and received practically nothing in return. We do not participate to the extent of a dollar in the appropriation for rivers and harbors. We received practically no war contracts. Single cities of the second class in the East received much more in war contracts than all the intermountain States combined.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the mining men and prospectors of the State desire to have this little assay office continued. The prospector must be encouraged. The pioneer work necessary to the development of mines must go on; it practically ceased during the war. In fact, we suspended the necessity of assessment work. Many ex-service men are returning and entering the field in the hope of making valuable discoveries. These are the men who suffer the hardships, discover the great mines, and generally die poor. At the Salt Lake City office the last year before the war 514 individual samples were brought in by prospectors for assay. These assays generally cost at a private assayer's from $3 to $5 each. The Government, by order of the Director of the Mint, makes them for $1. The Government assays are considered more reliable by the prospectors; they give him more prestige and encouragement in the difficult work of financing the enterprise. From the assays many mines have been developed which are paying hundreds of thousands annually into the Treasury.

The assay office does for the miner what the Agricultural Department does for the farmer. No one expects all bureaus and agencies established by the Government to assist in production to pay a profit by charges upon the farmer. The discovery of one mine would repay the Government a hundred times the entire cost of maintaining this office.

I have in mind a sample brought into my office by an ex-service man. It appeared to be of no value, but was referred to the Government assay office and proved to contain silver. The mine resulting paid income and profit taxes last year of over $250,000 into the United States Treasury and will pay more this year.

Yet these gentlemen of the committee would abolish the office; rather they should add to the appropriation in order that the work might be extended.

Besides serving the prospector, the small mine owner, and the large operators, the smelterers, the office also serves the Land Office, the Forest Service, secret-service agents of the Government who make raids on counterfeiters, the Geological Survey, the director of which has written a letter acknowledging the benefits to his department of this assay office at Salt Lake City. No credit is given in computing the expense of this office for the service rendered these various departments of the Government.

It is a penurious policy to abolish this office. No one in authority and acquainted with the facts and conditions has recommended such action. One Washington official connected with the mint, who had probably never been west, did so recommend two years ago, and I suppose that it was upon that recommendation that the committee acts at this time. Asked for a reason, he said he would abolish the office at Salt Lake City because that city is only a gunshot from Denver. He has since studied his geography and has found that those towns are as far apart in point of time and almost in distance as New York and Chicago.

This committee has abolished all the surveyors general of the Western States. In our State we have 20,000,000 acres of public lands unsurveyed, awaiting the prospector and the stock raiser. Our people will strenuously object.

This spirit will not help to build up the common country, and it is against such cheeseparing policy we must fight. Our people want only a square deal. They are willing and eager in Utah to contribute another hundred million dollars next year if necessary, but they want to know that they have some recognition that their sacrifices are in a measure appreciated.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated just before, this appropriation has been carried for many years—a small appropriation of $3,500 or so to establish an assay office in Salt Lake City, Utah. The committee has stricken it from the bill at this time. I have brought this map out here in order to show the committee that Salt Lake City is the center of the mining industry of the United States. There are more precious minerals, more metals of value, produced within 700 miles of Salt Lake City than in any other similar radius in the world. The prospectors go into these mountains, and when they come back and get their certificate they are able to finance their enterprise.

Now, the prospectors of that country are aroused over the proposition to abandon the assay office at Salt Lake City. The Utah chapter of the American Mining Congress is aroused over it. I have several telegrams, of which I will read two. The Utah chapter of the American Mining Congress states in a telegram to me:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, February 20, 1920.

Hon. JAMES H. MAYS,
House of Representatives, Washington:

Salt Lake City assay office has no particular value to the large mining organizations, but is of great service to prospectors and small operators, as it takes bullion in any amount above $10, while no lots less than $50 can be sent to Denver or San Francisco Mints. There are no refineries here and no place except the assay office where small lots can be disposed of. Salt Lake City office serves portions of Nevada, Idaho, and all of Utah, and makes mineral tests for other Government branches here, such as assays of counterfeit coin for the secret service, tests for the Land Office, Geological Survey, and Forest Service, as well as for private individuals. Its cost is small, and we sincerely hope it can be continued, as its presence here gives stimulus to much needed prospecting, especially gold. We think Government can afford to take a slight loss when the benefits are considered. This is a unit of a Government organization that as a whole earns a substantial profit for the Government.

UTAH CHAPTER AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS.

I have a letter on my desk in my office from the Director of the Geological Survey, who states that this office is of great service to the Geological Survey in testing out metals.

I have a telegram from the assayer in charge, as follows:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, February 20, 1920.

Hon. JAMES H. MAYS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Individual deposits, last fiscal year, one fifteen; so far, eight months, one eleven; increase over fifty per cent. Bullion value to date forty-two hundred over all last year. Our assays serve prospectors, Land Office, Forest Service, Geological Survey; also tests metals seized by Secret Service agent raids on counterfeiters. Net expense of office only thirty-five hundred dollars.

CHARLES GAMMON,
U. S. Assay Office.

The office takes no credit for the work they do for the various departments of the Government. In the year before the war Utah stood first in the production of precious metals. Utah produced that year $55,000,000 worth, Idaho produced over $30,000,000 worth, Nevada over $30,000,000 worth, Colorado $33,000,000 worth, Montana $47,000,000 worth, other States of the West following with large productions.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Do they send from Colorado to Utah to have their assays made?

Mr. MAYS. I am making this illustration here to show that Salt Lake City is the center of the mining industry, and that instead of abolishing this office it ought to be enlarged, in order that it might serve these people in various directions here, where so much is being produced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. How far do prospectors send their assays to this Government office?

Mr. MAYS. They take them to the nearest assay office. They send from Idaho, from Nevada, from all parts of Utah, and from wherever the mineral may be found. Of course, they generally take their samples to the nearest assay office to have them tested.

Five hundred and fourteen individual prospectors, in the year the war began in this country, took their rock into this assay office and had it tested by the Government assayer, and then they were able to go out, with the certificate of the Government, and do something in the way of financing their enterprises, which is a very difficult proposition.

Now, the gentlemen of the committee do not seem to appreciate the fact that during the war the State of Utah paid into the Treasury, as bond purchases and income and profit taxes, $100,000,000, coming in large measure from these great mining enterprises established through prospecting, developing, and financing on the basis of the Government's assay.

No one expects bureaus of the Agricultural Department to pay a direct profit. They are put there for the benefit of production. The Bureau of Soils pays nothing directly to the Government, yet is of great value. Here the Government is reaching out and getting $100,000,000 from one State and giving nothing practically in return. We had no war contracts of consequence; we get no river and harbor appropriations. All that we have asked here is that this mining industry shall be encouraged, and that this active assay office should be kept there.

I remember the Director of the Mint three years ago was the only man who recommended that this office be abolished, and he stated that it was only a gunshot distance from Denver. Since then he has studied his geography, and has found out that Salt Lake City is as far from Denver as New York is from Chicago in point of time, and that would be the nearest place to which these prospectors would take their samples.

Utah is willing to contribute to the Government another $100,000,000 if the life of the Nation be threatened, but it asks that its contributions be appreciated, and it submits the proposition that this expense, if it should turn out to be a loss of $3,500, is not a matter for serious consideration, as we are paying for it many times over.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman think that there would be less mining enterprises in Utah if this office were abolished?

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. For what reason?

Mr. MAYS. For the reason that the Government assay office there makes the Government test for $1. That is under the orders of the Director of the Mint. They could make this office self-sustaining if they charged what a private assayer would charge. The prospector has confidence in the Government's certificate, and the men who help finance the prospector have confidence in it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. You would not make seriously the proposition of the difference between $1 and $5 as being the determining factor as to whether a man should go into the mining business or not?

Mr. MAYS. It is a factor as to whether a man will take his rock to the Government assayer or to a private assayer. A student in a State university might make an assay, but his assay would not inspire that confidence which the Government assay gives. The gentleman himself would have no confidence in an assay made by students, at least not such confidence that he would invest his money on the strength of it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Would there be any real hindrance to the project if the specimens were sent to an assay office not necessarily within the State?

Mr. MAYS. It would take more time and would cost more money. The prospector certainly needs encouragement. There has been but little prospecting in this country during the last two or three years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. MAYS. I ask unanimous consent that I may have about three minutes more. I have been interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. When men are about to engage upon such a serious undertaking as a mining project, does the difference between four or five dollars and fifteen or twenty dollars hinder them from making up their minds about it?

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman must realize the practical side of this problem. The prospector goes out into the hills, camping out and gathering what he thinks looks like favorable rock, as he calls it. He wants an assay of that rock. He brings it into the assay office to get it tested. He wants a reliable test.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I can understand that.

Mr. MAYS. He wants a Government test.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; I can understand that.

Mr. MAYS. And if he gets a Government test saying that it contains valuable metals he has something upon which he can work.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I can understand that.

Mr. MAYS. But if he has to send it to some other State far away it takes more time, it costs more money, and he probably will not go to the expense of paying the express charges. I am speaking of the poor prospector who does the pioneer work, who generally dies poor, but who discovers these great mines that were paying during the war many millions a year into the Treasury of the United States and still are. They ask nothing in return. They do want this assay office continued here.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then the gentleman does not offer the idea that what he says has relation to the men who develop mining projects and open mines, but he simply refers to the adventurer who goes out into the hills and takes his chances on a gamble?

Mr. MAYS. The assay office serves the prospector primarily. It serves others also. As I said a while ago, Salt Lake City is the center of the mining industry. During the present year we will produce $75,000,000 of these metals in the State of Utah. The Government will get many millions of that money. What is the matter with the committee that they are so penurious as to say that they will take all of these millions that come from the State of Utah and give nothing in return to help encourage the mining industry? They are not asking much. They are asking only $3,500 in this bill, and it is the same item that has been carried in the bill for 15 years, or practically ever since Utah was a State. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] says he does not understand why it is that this committee should be so penurious as to strike out this appropriation. That might be said by every bureau that has anything to do with the Government. I suppose all of them entertain the same idea—that we are penurious. If this item and all the other thousand and one items that were asked for and denied were taken into consideration they would amount to millions of dollars. By exercising what we thought was good judgment we have stricken out of this bill more than $18,000,000. This was one of the items. Each one of the others who had an interest in his respective item might come in here with the same consistency, and in his enthusiasm for the success of his particular project might say that the committee was penurious in striking out his item.

The case of Utah is even worse than the case of Deadwood. The amount of income from the Utah office in 1919 was $561.62, while the outlay of the Government was $4,074.

Now, this is up to the Committee of the Whole. It is up to the Congress of the United States to determine how long we are going to continue these sinecures.

That is all it amounts to. It is a convenience to very few. If we are going into the convenience business here is a splendid opportunity for this Congress. We will establish an assay office in Arizona, where there is more mining than in the territory that the gentleman refers to.

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Not now. We should establish an assay office in New Mexico, where there is much mining of precious metals. There is no assay office in New Mexico. Have they stopped mining there? There is no assay office in Arizona. Have they ceased the mining industry there? They find some way to get an assay. I dare say it is done just as completely and scientifically as it is done at the Utah assay office at Salt Lake City. It has only been five years since this Government succeeded in prying loose an assay office in North Carolina. I expect gentlemen then said that there was need of encouraging mining in North Carolina by retaining the assay office of the Federal Government. So it will be to the end. There will be somebody coming here from these respective places where the activities or inactivities are located, asking that they be continued, and the Congress of the United States, if it will listen to them as we have listened to the appeals here to-day, will continue them indefinitely. These are but a few of the many bureaus that have grown up in times past, doing some little real service when established, but having now become useless. Only a few years ago there was a great fight made in Congress for the abolition of the old pension offices which were established in all of the States of the Union. That was a convenience to the old soldier, and a greater convenience by far than these assay offices, and yet it was demonstrated by the Pension Department and through the advice of the Pension Department that that abolition would not materially injure the old soldiers of this country or their interest in the Pension Department and that the business could be as well performed from Washington as through these pension agencies. So, in the opinion of the Treasury, these assay offices have outlived their usefulness. Therefore we can not justify ourselves in maintaining these offices for the mere convenience of the people who are now using them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, no one has been around Congress very long without discovering the difficulty of disassociating anybody now on the pay roll from the pay roll. A few moments ago we had an illustration of the Democratic side of the House having unanimously with one exception, in combination with a few Republicans from a few far Western States, voted in an office that has been recommended to be abolished for years both by the Treasury Department and in recent years by a Democratic Committee on Appropriations. Possibly we will be treated to the same spectacle in a few minutes on a vote on the present proposition.

Here are two offices of which there is no more need than there is of the fifth wheel of a wagon. For years the Treasury Department has urged that there was no occasion for their existence. A Democratic committee recommended that they be abolished, a Republican committee has now recommended that they be abolished, but in some way, while sometimes they have been left out of the House appropriation bill, in some way three or four or five or six officials, employees of one of these offices, has more influence in Congress in the end than the Treasury Department has, and more than the great committee of both Democrats and Republicans in Congress have, because they can get more votes.

It is one of the spectacles that Congress always yields to the request of an employee who may make the request himself or go out on the street and in 10 minutes find a dozen persons who will send in requests or find some association to make the request. There is no reason why we should not in some way make an effort to reduce the expenditures of the Government and abolish a few useless offices. I do not know whether it is possible or not, but I hope, if it is not possible in the Committee of the Whole, that we at least may have a roll call in the House on the subject, and see whether the Members of the House are willing to appropriate money for offices that the department of the Government, or the Executive, says are useless, that a committee of Democrats when in control said were useless, that a committee of Republicans say now is useless, and whether they will continue these useless offices.

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield? When did the Executive ever say that this office was useless?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They have said it for years.

Mr. MAYS. I have never seen any such statement, and I have kept track of the matter.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman knows that the Treasury Department repeatedly, both in the hearings and otherwise, have recommended that these offices be abolished. I know it, because I have read the reports.

Mr. MAYS. No Executive recommended it. Two years ago the only recommendation given was given by a man connected with the mint, who thought that Salt Lake City was only a gunshot from Denver.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Treasury Department has frequently recommended against the continuation of these offices. I know that, and the gentleman knows it.

They have urged the same thing before the Committee on Appropriations, both when Democratic and Republican. But I take my hat off to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] who, at the request of an employee of the office probably, directly or indirectly, have greater influence in Congress than the Treasury Department or the Committee on Appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended saying anything, but the chairman of the committee made a statement which I think to a certain extent is misleading, although I am satisfied that he did not intend to mislead in any way. The gentleman refers to this as an office that is entirely for the benefit of the locality surrounding Salt Lake City. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that practically all of the great mining operations in that western country, which is the marvel of the world, are financed by people all over the world, and particularly from all over the United States. When people invest in mining securities in Nevada or Colorado or Utah or any of that country out there they first look to see what the United States Assay Office has had to say about the quality of ore that is being taken out of a particular vein. The United States Assay Office is the only protection that those people whose forbears lived in the mountains and who understand what it is, who have come east to live in the more populated country, but who believing in the great West desire to continue to invest their money there. That is the only thing in which they can place confidence. I hope the House will not consider this as a local proposition but one spreading over the whole of the United States.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman want the House to understand that western mining promoters use the assay offices as a means to gather in suckers?

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, the gentleman does not want to cast any reflection on the legitimate people of the mining world. There are wildcatters, and the only protection that the real miners in the country have over the wildcatters is the assay office and the laws that prohibit the circulation of false statements through the mail for the purpose of making money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAYS) there were—ayes 53, noes 67.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. MAYS and Mr. WOOD of Indiana to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 63, noes 59.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Temporary employees: For the temporary employment of such additional force of clerks and other employees as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be proper and necessary to the prompt, efficient, and accurate dispatch of official business in the War Department and its bureaus, to be allotted by the Secretary of War except as otherwise provided herein, $2,500,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall submit to Congress on the first day of its next regular session a statement showing by bureaus or offices the number and designation of the persons employed hereunder and the annual rate of compensation paid to each: Provided further, That $1,850,000 of the foregoing sum shall be allotted to the office of The Adjutant General, and such portion thereof as may not be needed in that office shall not be allotted to any other office but shall lapse and be covered into the Treasury: Provided further, That appropriations contained in any other act for the fiscal year 1921 shall not be used for the payment of civilian personnel in the bureaus or offices of the War Department in the District of Columbia except such as may be authorized by this act or as may be appropriated for the Army War College and Office of the Chief of Staff in the Army appropriation act and the Board of Ordnance and Fortification in the fortification appropriation act: Provided further, That no person shall be paid from said sum of $2,500,000 at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum, except the following: Office of Secretary of War—1 at $3,500 (audit of Red Cross accounts), 1 at $3,000 (audit of Red Cross accounts), 4 at $2,750 each (audit of Red Cross accounts), 1 at $2,500, 1 at $2,200; Office of The Adjutant General—6 at $2,400 each, 2 at $2,000 each; Office of Inspector General—1 at $2,000; Office of Director of Finance—1 at $5,000, 1 at $2,000; Motor Transport Corps—1 at $2,400.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to inquire of the committee the need for so large an aggregate appropriation as $2,500,000. I understand that this is a reduction from last year, as, of course, it should be, because the natural tendency would be to reduce the amount of work in the War Department. Nevertheless, hardly a day goes by that we do not hear severe criticism of the number of employees in the War Department and in other departments and bureaus down town. They are evidently falling over themselves for lack of occupation and standing in each other's way. It seems to me we ought to have pretty complete details of the needs of as many employees as $2,500,000 will provide at a compensation of $1,800 each. I have not divided that sum up, but it seems a tremendously large number, many of whom, I suppose, will be employed or will be supposed to be employed sitting around temporary buildings down town which long since should have been closed up. I am informed that there is corridor after corridor in those buildings where you find no occupants. Perhaps this is to provide some people to at least sit around in those vacant temporary war buildings. I recently saw large trucks being unloaded from Philadelphia, bringing back the Shipping Board and putting them in some of these temporary buildings. But, to get back to this one question, I personally would like as complete details as the chairman of the subcommittee can give. I am sure that he is as anxious as the rest of us to be economical at this time and is as desirous of reducing the number of employees. Therefore I ask for more details in respect to this appropriation of $2,500,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that the original estimate asked for in this item was $4,000,000. The committee reduced it to $2,500,000. I wish also to call attention to the fact that the same activities during the last year or the present fiscal year is costing the American Government $14,205,618. We have made a reduction, if you please, of more than $11,000,000. The principal items out of this $2,500,000 that we allow go to The Adjutant General's office. A million and over $800,000 is for the purpose of performing work imposed upon it by this Congress in furnishing information with reference to each soldier of the Army, Navy, and Marines to each of the adjutants general throughout the United States. We also made a further appropriation, raised the estimate for that amount very nearly $500,000, for the purpose of furnishing information that is absolutely essential to the War Risk Bureau in all the applications which are now being made by the service boys for compensation and for this, that, and the other, for vocational training, and also the information that must of necessity be derived from the Director of Finance. I wish to state further for the benefit of the committee that there are now employed, as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, a very great number of employees in the United States Army under this appropriation here or these aggregate appropriations that amount to $14,500,000. In all there are 21,000 of these men. Under the appropriation we have made that number will be reduced for the next fiscal year to 3,500, so that those gentlemen who are now basking in the sunlight and living at their ease in the social swim will have to look for other pastures.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is, after July 1 or after the beginning of the next fiscal year. May I ask the chairman of the committee one question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. TREADWAY. He said that a large part of this sum is to furnish information to The Adjutant General and various bureaus in the War Risk Bureau. May I ask if he considers that under that a clerk would be provided whereby a man might get a reply from the insurance branch of that board to a letter written last November by the middle of February or this month? Does the gentleman think that that is a very competent service? I would like to vote for an additional clerk if that could be accomplished.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This item has nothing to do with the War Risk Bureau. We have paid our respects to that bureau, and I think we have succeeded in getting enough employees out of there so that those remaining may do more work.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Is this a political dialogue that is going on over there?

Mr. TREADWAY. We would be glad to have the gentleman from Texas included, as he is in most all of them, of course.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want it reserved entirely to one side of the aisle.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the subcommittee is to be congratulated on the reduction of this amount down to two and a half millions of dollars. The original bureaus of the War Department in this lump-sum appropriation asked for sums aggregating about $11,000,000. The Secretary of War cut it down to $4,000,000 and the subcommittee believed that $4,000,000 was too much. After we investigated this matter for a number of days—I can not tell you how long ago—in the various departments of the War Department, finally the committee found that they believed that they could cut this down to $2,500,000, and therefore where the various departments had estimated for something like $11,000,000 and the Secretary of War cut it to $4,000,000, we then cut it to $2,500,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman if that is not a very good illustration of the desire on the part of various officials to hold on to a good thing when the gentleman says that the estimate that came into his committee was $11,000,000 and the Secretary cut it to $4,000,000——

Mr. SISSON. No; not as it came to us.

Mr. TREADWAY. That the original estimate of these people wanting to hold their jobs was $11,000,000 and that the Secretary reduced it to $4,000,000, and you cut it to $2,500,000, and that is a very low ratio. The gentleman's committee cut it to about one-fifth, and I congratulate the committee.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman should realize that these men in these bureaus like to hold on to these clerks, and I do not know that that is the fault of them so much, because all of us love for the department of which we have charge to be a big one, but it takes some courage to do the cutting.

Now, I would not be at all surprised if in this particular matter we have not used our snickersnee just a little too deep. I hope not; but from what explanations have been made to us and from what we knew about it, we were unwilling to reduce it any lower; and the greater portion of this, as has been explained by the chairman of the subcommittee, goes to The Adjutant General's office for the purpose of preparing the rolls of the Army.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Red Cross annually shall reimburse the War Department for auditing the accounts of the Red Cross, as required by the act approved February 27, 1917, and the sum so paid shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that item. The act of February 27, 1917, provides for an audit of the expenses and accounts of the Red Cross Society, but does not authorize the collection from the society for the expenses of that audit. It occurs to me that the Red Cross Society is an organization that derives all of its income—at least I understand it does—from public voluntary subscriptions, and while I think these accounts ought to be audited all right enough, it ought not to be charged with the expenses of that audit.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And let me say to the gentleman that the fact of the business is the Red Cross is now paying the Government for auditing their accounts. They are Government employees, and there is not any reason why the Government should be furnishing the clerical force for the purpose of doing that work for nothing. It is not being asked for by the Red Cross, and it amounts to, I think, about $17,000.

Mr. BLACK. Except I had this idea, that the Red Cross is, of course, not an organization for profit and derives all of its income from public subscription, and this audit in the War Department is because of an act which Congress passed, and I think very properly passed. Now, if it has been the custom since the passage of that act for the Red Cross Society to make this payment without protest, I shall not make the point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the information that comes to the committee. The Red Cross is not complaining about it, and the fact of the business is that the greatest advertisement in the world for the Red Cross is in the fact that the United States Government has this auditorial supervision.

Mr. BLACK. I think it is proper they should have, and in view of the gentleman's statement that they have made this heretofore and they are not protesting, I shall not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Judge Advocate General: Chief clerk and solicitor, $2,500; law clerks—one $2,400, one $2,000; clerks—two of class 4, three of class 3, four of class 2, eight of class 1, two at $1,000 each; three messengers; assistant messenger; in all, $35,740.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct the word "clek" to "clerk."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

The services of skilled draftsmen and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary may be employed only in the Signal Office to carry into effect the various appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the Signal Service of the Army, to be paid from such appropriations, in addition to the foregoing employees appropriated for in the Signal Office: Provided, That the entire expenditures for this purpose for the fiscal year 1921 shall not exceed $53,280, and the Secretary of War shall each year in the annual estimates report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it is now 5 o'clock, and I think we ought to have a new shift here.

Mr. CALDWELL. Let them read this one section.

Mr. BLANTON. We few Members who have been assisting the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the chairman during the day and up to this present time ought to have some help. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman withhold it for one paragraph in order that a piece of business may be expedited by so doing?

Mr. BLANTON. To-morrow is not going to run away. It is going to come around.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Some of us try to obey the injunction of the gentleman and try to attend to the business for which we are sent here, no matter whether on the floor or elsewhere. Let us have one chance to do something now.

Mr. BLANTON. We have voted down the Igoe amendment, and that is one day's work in itself.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Let one good endeavor follow another. Let us have this one paragraph read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the chairman of the committee ought to move to rise.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is only 5 o'clock, if I may observe to the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now arise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12610—the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Spanish-American War pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Spanish-American War pension bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. On the Spanish-American War pension bill. It comes up on Monday.

Mr. GARD. How is it coming up on Monday?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MADDEN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the gentleman if he knows or could he inform the House and the country what caused the Republican steering committee and Military Affairs Committee——

Mr. MADDEN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON (continuing). This morning to suddenly change its views with regard to universal military training?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a similar request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. WINGO. To extend your remarks on the same bill?

Mr. VARE. I want to extend my remarks on the present bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unaniomus consent to extend his remarks on the present bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8819. An act to amend the Army appropriation act for 1920, and for the purchase of land and to provide for construction work at certain military posts, and for other purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that February 24 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 3654. An act to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park; and

H. R. 10453. An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended; and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 26, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. RAMSEYER, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8062) to extend the permit privilege to include first-class mail, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 673), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. VOLSTEAD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2085) relating to the maintenance of actions for death on the high seas and other navigable waters, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 674), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12721) to abolish the Subtreasuries and to provide for the transfer of the coin, currency, and bullion, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 675), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Idaho, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9702) granting certain lands to the city of Sandpoint, Idaho, to protect the watershed of the water-supply system of said city, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 676), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GLYNN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1321) for the relief of Annie M. Lepley, postmaster at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., for money, postal money orders, and postage stamps stolen, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 677), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12479) granting a pension to Jennie Nix, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we are ever petitioners before Thee. We come into Thy presence with no complaint but rather with the joy of being unsatisfied. The new day calls us to the larger service. The world lies plastic in our hands to be shaped and molded and to give direction to the affairs of men. Oh, give us a consciousness of the grave responsibility of this hour.

We unite our hearts in praying Thy blessing upon the Vice President of the United States, into whose home there has come to-day a great sorrow. We know him not only as a statesman and companion of men but as a lover of little children. Thou didst give to him a child upon whom he showered the wealth of his life. Grant, we pray, that he may have the satisfaction of knowing that God approves of the tenderness and care that he and his good wife have given to a little child. May he feel that abounding impulse of greatness which comes from the teaching of the Master, who sat a little child in the midst of them and said, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Oh, grant us all to follow greatness in humility and in reverence and in trust. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Goodhue, one of its clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9023) to give effect to certain provisions of the convention for the protection of trade-marks and commercial names, made and signed in the city of Buenos Aires, in the Argentine Republic, August 20, 1910, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. NOLAN, Mr. LAMPERT, and Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8819) to amend the Army appropriation act for 1920, and for the purchase of land and to provide for construction work at certain military posts, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained at home by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

POWERS OF FUEL ADMINISTRATOR (S. DOC. NO. 235).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Director General of Railroads, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, certain information relative to the shipment, distribution, apportionment, and storage of coal and coke, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS presented memorials of sundry citizens of Moundridge, Mound City, and Kiowa County, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Clarence Lieurance Post No. 2, American Legion, of Neosho Falls; of Algy Doty Post No. 3, American Legion, of Humboldt; and of Aaron A. Platner Post No. 1, American Legion, of Ellis, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a $50 bonus to ex-service men for each month of service, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Local Lodge No. 331, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, of Atchison, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Sterling-Graham sedition bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Arkansas City Club of American Association of Engineers, of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Townsend highway bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Association of Mississippi Valley States Highway Departments, at a meeting held in Chicago, Ill., favoring the continuance of the present plan of cooperation between the Federal Government and the States in the building of roads, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MOSES presented a petition of the congregation of the Unitarian Church of Charlestown, N. H., praying for the ratification of the treaty of peace with reservations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Utah State Woolgrowers' Association and a petition of the American National Live Stock Association, praying for the enactment of legislation providing that the content of virgin wool shall be indicated on fabrics manufactured for wearing apparel, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of Wheat Belt Grange, No. 1735, Patrons of Husbandry, of Lewis; of Kiowa Farmers' Union, No. 1921, of Kiowa; and of Lena Valley Local Union No. 1538, Farmers' Union, of Madison, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 314), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the copy written by Abraham Lincoln of the address delivered at the consecration of the National Cemetery at Gettysburg, Pa., on November 19, 1863, as read to the Senate of the United States by Senator HENRY W. KEYES on February 12, 1920, together with extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD showing the proceedings relating thereto, be reproduced and printed as a Senate Document, with illustrations, and that 60,000 additional copies be printed, of which 55,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 5,000 for the use of the Senate Document Room.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3972) to authorize the temporary exchange of certain public lands for experiments in sheep growing, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3973) granting a pension to Joseph Zittle (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 3974) granting an increase of pension to Harvey Day (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3975) granting an increase of pension to John B. Ellis (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3976) granting a pension to Samuel J. Houser (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3977) granting a pension to Sarah Burford (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162) to cede the Point Peter Military Reservation to the State of Georgia; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SALE OF SHIPS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I introduce a bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce. I beg leave to state in explanation of the bill that its intent is to require that whenever a ship is sold by the United States, or by any officer or agent of the United States, there shall be a written conveyance thereof, and in the conveyance it shall be provided that such ship shall not pass from American registry, that it shall be operated under the American flag, and that if at any time it is transferred to foreign registry or operated under a foreign flag the title of the ship shall revert to the United States. I respectfully ask that the Committee on Commerce give the bill careful consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to say to my colleague that the Committee on Commerce is now considering the proposition involved in the bill in connection with the framing of a bill governing the general policy regarding a merchant marine, and the committee is looking into the matter very carefully.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very much gratified to know that, Mr. President.

The bill (S. 3970) prohibiting the transfer of ships of the United States to foreign registry, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PUBLIC LANDS IN HAWAII.

Mr. NEW. I introduce a bill, which I send to the desk, and I ask its reference to the Committee on Territories. In this connection I desire to say a word in explanation of the request as to its reference. The bill deals with the question of public lands in the Hawaiian Islands. It has been customary for Hawaiian matters to be cared for by the Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, but in the absence of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who is chairman of that committee, and with his consent and at his request, the reference of the bill to the Committee on Territories is asked, in order that a committee from the Hawaiian Islands, which is now here, may have an opportunity to be heard and may be permitted to return to their homes at a very early date.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from Indiana to ask that the bill which he has introduced be referred to the Committee on Territories?

Mr. NEW. Yes; I made that request.

Mr. SMOOT. Legislation of this character in the past has always been referred to the Public Lands Committee, but I am not going to object to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Territories if the Senator desires it to go to that committee, simply making the statement that legislation of this character has previously always been referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have no personal preference in the matter, but the whole question involved was considered by the committee from Hawaii and by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] was communicated with by them. It is at the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico that the reference of the bill to the Committee on Territories is asked, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] being a member of that committee. In a personal way I have no concern about the matter, whether the bill goes to the Committee on Territories or to the Committee on Public Lands, but I am carrying out what seems to be the request and preference of all parties concerned in the proposed legislation. I therefore ask the reference of the bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the bill being so referred, Mr. President.

The bill (S. 3971) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended by an act approved March 3, 1905, and as further amended by an act approved April 2, 1908, and as further amended by an act approved March 3, 1909, and as further amended by an act approved May 27, 1910, by amending sections 26, 55, 66, 73, 80, 86, and 92 thereof and by adding two new sections thereto, to be known as sections 73a and 103a, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

DISTRICT GOVERNMENT EXPENSES.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7158) to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

FOREST EXPERIMENT STATION, FLORIDA.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate not less than $10,000 for the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station in Florida, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN FOREIGN-TRADE DEFINITIONS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the secretary of the National Foreign Trade Council, asking that a certain paper be printed in the RECORD. It is the American foreign-trade definitions adopted at a conference participated in by committees representing the National Foreign Trade Council, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Manufacturers' Export Association, the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, the American Exporters' and Importers' Association, the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, the New York Produce Exchange, and the New York Merchants' Association. These bodies seem to think it is very important to get as much publicity of these definitions as possible, and believe that it would aid materially to have them printed in the RECORD. I therefore make the request for unanimous consent. If objection is made, of course I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. How many pages does it comprise?

Mr. JONES of Washington. About 15 pages of this size [indicating]. They are definitions of export terms. These bodies think it would be of very great benefit in connection with our foreign trade and its development to have the definitions printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AMERICAN FOREIGN TRADE DEFINITIONS ADOPTED AT A CONFERENCE PARTICIPATED IN BY COMMITTEES REPRESENTING THE NATIONAL FOREIGN TRADE COUNCIL, CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS, AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS' EXPORT ASSOCIATION, PHILADELPHIA COMMERCIAL MUSEUM, AMERICAN EXPORTERS' AND IMPORTERS' ASSOCIATION, CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE, AND NEW YORK MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION, DECEMBER 16, 1919.

"As the most certain means of insuring unmistakable clarity in terms and conditions of sale, the conference voted to recommend to manufacturers and exporters that all use of abbreviated forms of export price quotations be abandoned and that such terms be written out in full.

"The conference recognized, however, that this recommendation is not likely to be accepted generally at once, and therefore, in the hope of effecting a simplification and standardization of American practice, it adopted the following statement of definitions of the abbreviated forms in more common and general use in the export trade. The conference strongly recommends to manufacturers and exporters that wherever abbreviated forms of export quotations are employed the forms herein defined be used, as far as possible, to the exclusion of other forms.

DEFINITIONS OF EXPORT QUOTATIONS.

"There are, in their order, the normal situations on which an export manufacturer or shipper may desire to quote prices. It is understood that unless a particular railroad is specified the property will be delivered to the carrier most conveniently located to the shipper. If the buyer, for the purpose of delivery, or in order to obtain lower transportation charges, desires that the goods be delivered to a carrier further removed from the shipper and entailing a greater cost than delivery to the carrier most favorably situated the carrier to which the buyer desires delivery of the goods should be named in the quotation. The term 'cars or lighters' as used herein is intended to include river, lake, or coastwise ships, canal boats, barges, or other means of transportation when so specified in the quotation.

"1. When the price quoted applies only at inland shipping point and the seller merely undertakes to load the goods on or in cars or lighters furnished by the railroad company serving the industry, or most conveniently located to the industry, without other designation as to routing, the proper term is:

"'F. o. b. (named point).'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Place goods on or in cars or lighters;

"(2) Secure railroad bill of lading;

"(3) Be responsible for loss and/or damage until goods have been placed in or on cars or lighters at forwarding point and clean bill of lading has been furnished by the railroad company.

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage incurred thereafter;

"(2) Pay all transportation charges, including taxes, if any;

"(3) Handle all subsequent movement of the goods.

"2. When the seller quotes a price including transportation charges to the port of exportation without assuming responsibility for the goods after obtaining a clean bill of lading at point of origin, the proper term is:

"'F. o. b. (named point) freight prepaid to (named point on the seaboard).'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Place goods on or in cars or lighters;

"(2) Secure railroad bill of lading;

"(3) Pay freight to named port;

"(4) Be responsible for loss and/or damage until goods have been placed in or on cars or lighters at forwarding point, and clean bill of lading has been furnished by the railroad company.

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage incurred thereafter;

"(2) Handle all subsequent movement of the goods;

"(3) Unload goods from cars;

"(4) Transport goods to vessels;

"(5) Pay all demurrage and/or storage charges;

"(6) Arrange for storage in warehouse or on wharf where necessary.

"3. Where the seller wishes to quote a price, from which the buyer may deduct the cost of transportation to a given point on the seaboard, without the seller assuming responsibility for the goods after obtaining a clean bill of lading at point of origin, the proper term is:

"'F. o. b. (named point) freight allowed to (named point on the seaboard).'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Place goods on or in cars or lighters;

"(2) Secure railroad bill of lading;

"(3) Be responsible for loss and/or damage until goods have been placed in or on cars or lighters at forwarding point, and clean bill of lading has been furnished by the railroad company.

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage incurred thereafter;

"(2) Pay all transportation charges (buyer is then entitled to deduct from the amount of the invoice the freight paid from primary point to named port);

"(3) Handle all subsequent movement of the goods;

"(4) Unload goods from cars;

"(5) Transport goods to vessel;

"(6) Pay all demurrage and/or storage charges;

"(7) Arrange for storage in warehouse or on wharf where necessary.

"4. The seller may desire to quote a price covering the transportation of the goods to seaboard, assuming responsibility for loss and/or damage up to that point. In this case, the proper term is:

"'F. o. b. cars (named point on seaboard).'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Place goods on or in cars;

"(2) Secure railroad bill of lading;

"(3) Pay all freight charges from forwarding point to port on seaboard;

"(4) Be responsible for loss and/or damage until goods have arrived in or on cars at the named port.

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage incurred thereafter;

"(2) Unload goods from cars;

"(3) Handle all subsequent movement of the goods;

"(4) Transport goods to vessel;

"(5) Pay all demurrage and/or storage charges;

"(6) Arrange for storage in warehouse or on wharf where necessary.

"5. It may be that the goods, on which a price is quoted covering the transportation of the goods to the seaboard, constitute less than a carload lot. In this case the proper term is:

"'F. o. b. cars (named port) l. c. l.'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Deliver goods to the initial carrier;

"(2) Secure railroad bill of lading;

"(3) Pay all freight charges from forwarding point to port on seaboard;

"(4) Be responsible for loss and/or damage until goods have arrived on cars at the named port.

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage incurred thereafter;

"(2) Handle all subsequent movement of the goods;

"(3) Accept goods from the carrier;

"(4) Transport goods to vessel;

"(5) Pay all storage charges;

"(6) Arrange for storage in warehouse or on wharf where necessary.

"6. Seller may quote a price which will include the expense of transportation of the goods by rail to the seaboard, including lighterage. In this case the proper term is:

"'F. o. b. cars (named port) lighterage free.'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Place goods on or in cars;

"(2) Secure railroad bill of lading;

"(3) Pay all transportation charges to, including lighterage at, the port named;

"(4) Be responsible for loss and/or damage until goods have arrived on cars at the named port.

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage incurred thereafter;

"(2) Handle all subsequent movement of the goods;

"(3) Take out the insurance necessary to the safety of the goods after arrival on the cars;

"(4) Pay the cost of hoisting goods into vessel where weight of goods is too great for ship's tackle;

"(5) Pay all demurrage and other charges, except lighterage charges.

"7. The seller may desire to quote a price covering delivery of the goods alongside overseas vessel and within reach of its loading tackle. In this case the proper term is:

"'F. a. s. vessel (named port).'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Transport goods to seaboard;

"(2) Store goods in warehouse or on wharf if necessary, unless buyer's obligation includes provision of shipping facilities;

"(3) Place goods alongside vessel either in a lighter or on the wharf;

"(4) Provide the usual dock or ship's receipt;

"(5) Be responsible for loss and/or damage until goods have been delivered alongside the ship or on wharf.

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage thereafter, and for insurance;

"(2) Handle all subsequent movement of the goods;

"(3) Pay cost of hoisting goods into vessel where weight of goods is too great for ship's tackle.

"8. The seller may desire to quote a price covering all expenses up to and including delivery of the goods upon the overseas vessel at a named port. In this case the proper term is:

"'F. o. b. vessel (named port).'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Meet all charges incurred in placing goods actually on board the vessel;

"(2) Provide the usual dock or ship's receipt;

"(3) Be responsible for all loss and/or damage until goods have been placed on board the vessel.

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage thereafter;

"(2) Handle all subsequent movement of the goods.

"9. The seller may be ready to go farther than the delivery of his goods upon the overseas vessel and be willing to pay transportation to a foreign point of delivery. In this case the proper term is:

"'C. and f. (named foreign port).'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Make freight contract and pay transportation charges sufficient to carry goods to agreed destination;

"(2) Deliver to buyer or his agent clean bills of lading to the agreed destination;

"(3) Be responsible for loss and/or damage until goods have been delivered alongside the ship and clean ocean bill of lading obtained (seller is not responsible for delivery of goods at destination).

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage thereafter and must take out all necessary insurance;

"(2) Handle all subsequent movement of the goods;

"(3) Take delivery and pay costs of discharge, lighterage, and landing at foreign port of destination in accordance with bill of lading clauses;

"(4) Pay foreign customs duties and wharfage charges, if any.

"10. The seller may desire to quote a price covering the cost of the goods, the marine insurance on the goods, and all transportation charges to the foreign point of delivery. In this case the proper term is:

"'C. i. f. (named foreign port).'

"Under this quotation:

"A. Seller must—

"(1) Make freight contract and pay freight charges sufficient to carry goods to agreed destination;

"(2) Take out and pay for necessary marine insurance;

"(3) Deliver to buyer or his agent clean bills of lading to the agreed destination and insurance policy and/or negotiable insurance certificate;

"(4) Be responsible for loss and/or damage until goods have been delivered alongside the ship, and clean ocean bill of lading and insurance policy and/or negotiable insurance certificate have been delivered to the buyer or his agent. (Seller is not responsible for the delivery of goods at destination nor for payment by the underwriters of insurance claims.)

"(5) Provide war-risk insurance, where necessary, for buyer's account.

"B. Buyer must—

"(1) Be responsible for loss and/or damage thereafter, and must make all claims to which he may be entitled under the insurance directly on the underwriters;

"(2) Take delivery and pay costs of discharge, lighterage, and landing at foreign port of destination in accordance with bill-of-lading clauses;

"(3) Pay foreign customs duties and wharfage charges, if any.

GENERAL RECOMMENDATIONS.

"In reaching the conclusions set forth in this statement the conference considered the fact that there are in more or less common use by manufacturers in different parts of the United States numerous variations of the abbreviations, practically all of which are employed to convey meanings substantially synonymous with those here defined. For instance, there are manufacturers who quote 'f. o. b. cars,' 'f. o. b. works,' 'f. o. b. mill,' or 'f. o. b. factory,' meaning that the seller and buyer have the same responsibilities as those set forth in section 1. The conference considered all those variations and determined to recommend the use of 'f. o. b. (named point),' as 'f. o. b. Detroit,' 'f. o. b. Pittsburgh,' etc. Of the considerable number of these abbreviations which are used in the United States, the conference felt that the form 'f. o. b. (named point)' is most widely used and understood, and therefore should be adopted as the standard of practice.

"The chief purpose of the conference is to simplify and standardize American practice, and to that end it urges manufacturers and exporters to cease the use of synonymous abbreviations and quote habitually in the terms here recommended, just as far as these terms will cover the price conditions which it is desired to arrange with the buyer.

"Variations of the abbreviations recommended in other sections also are in more or less common use throughout the United States. The recommendations of the conference set forth above apply to them with the same force as to those cited under section 1.

"Manufacturers and exporters are urged to bear in mind that the confusion and controversies which have arisen have sprung, in part, from the use of an excessive number of abbreviated forms with substantially similar meanings, as well as from the use of abbreviations in a sense different from their original meanings, or in an application not originally given them and different from the sense or application understood by foreign buyers.

"In simplified and standardized practice lies the best hope of reducing confusion and avoiding controversy.

"The conference urges upon manufacturers and exporters the very great importance at all times of making their intention in whatever quotations they employ so thoroughly clear as to be impossible of misunderstanding or misinterpretation. It is much better to take the time and space at the outset to make the quotation clearly understood than to be compelled in the end to go through vexatious controversy or litigation, which costs not only time and expense but customers as well. Misunderstandings can best be avoided if the seller will formulate a written statement of the general conditions under which his sales are to be made, and will see that the foreign buyer possesses these terms of sale when considering a quotation. The items which may be included in such a statement deal with delivery, delays, partial shipments, shipping instructions, inspection, claims, damage, and payment. If all contingencies are thus covered by carefully considered conditions of sale, disputes will largely be prevented.

"The quotation 'f. o. b. (named port),' as 'f. o. b. New York,' 'f. o. b. New Orleans,' 'f. o. b. San Francisco,' is often used by inland producers and distributors to mean merely delivery of the goods at railway terminal at the port named.

"This abbreviation originated as an export quotation and had no application to inland shipments. It was used only to mean delivery of the goods upon an overseas vessel at the port named. That, in fact, is the meaning universally given to the phrase among foreigners, and is the meaning which the best practice among exporters requires it invariably to have. But because of the confusion which has arisen through the use of that form with a different meaning by inland producers and distributers, and, in the interest of unmistakable clarity, the conference most strongly urges the invariable use by American manufacturers and exporters of the form 'f. o. b. vessel (named port).' This adds only one word to the abbreviated form and has the great advantage that it can not be misunderstood. It also avoids the difficulty which might arise among foreigners not always well versed in American geography, through confusing an inland forwarding point with a shipping port at seaboard.

"The conference calls attention to the fact that in selling 'f. a. s. vessel' manufacturers and exporters should be careful to have their agreements with buyers cover explicitly the question of responsibility for loss after goods have been delivered on the wharf or alongside the vessel and before they are actually loaded on the ship. There is no generally established practice on this point. The recommendation of the conference in the definitions of responsibility, under section 7, sets up a rule which it is hoped will lead to the establishment of a standard practice.

"It is understood that the provision of lighterage covered in several of these recommendations is only within the usual free-lighterage limits of the port, and that where lighterage outside such limits is required it is for buyer's account.

"In order to avoid confusion in another particular, attention is called to the care which must be exercised in all cases in making weight quotations. The net ton, the gross ton, and the metric ton all differ in weight. Similarly, there is a variation in the use of the term 'hundredweight' to mean either 100 pounds or 112 pounds. It is, therefore, not sufficient to quote a price per 'ton' or per 'hundredweight.' Instead the conference recommends the use of the terms 'ton of 2,000 pounds,' 'ton of 2,240 pounds,' or 'ton of 2,204 pounds,' etc., whichever is intended.

"It is also important to note that a carload lot in the United States means the quantity of the particular commodity in question necessary to obtain the carload freight rate for transportation on American railways. This quantity varies according to the commodity and also varies in different parts of the country. Certain commodities being more bulky than others, the minimum carload for them is less than for heavier products occupying less space. The load required may range anywhere from 12,000 to 90,000 pounds. Consequently, it is important, when quoting prices applicable to carload lots, to so state and to specify the minimum weight necessary to make a carload lot of the particular commodity for the particular shipment in question.

"The conference points out that in quoting 'c. and f.' or 'c. i. f.,' manufacturers and exporters moving large quantities of material by one vessel should be careful to ascertain in advance the buyer's capacity to take delivery. This because, under these terms and as a condition of making the freight rate, transportation companies may require a certain rate of discharge per day, and that rate of discharge might be in excess of the buyer's capacity to take delivery. In such event an adjustment with the transportation company would be necessary, which might affect the freight rate, and consequently the price to be quoted.

"The conference also strongly urges shippers clearly to understand the provisions of their insurance protection on all foreign sales, irrespective of the general terms used thereon. In almost all cases it should be possible, when making shipments by steamer, to obtain insurance cover giving full protection from primary shipping point to designated seaport delivery, and/or foreign-port delivery. As ordinary marine insurance under f. p. a. conditions, i. e., free of particular average, gives no protection against deterioration and/or damage to the merchandise itself while in transit, when caused by the recognized hazards attending such risks, shippers should endeavor in all cases to obtain insurance under w. p. a. (s. p. a.) conditions, i. e., with particular average (subject to particular average), when in excess of the customary franchise of 3 per cent to 5 per cent. Under such form of insurance underwriters will be called upon to pay claims for damages when these exceed the stipulated franchise.

"The conference points out that inasmuch as fees for consular invoices and similar items are arbitrary charges fixed by foreign Governments they are not included in the terms of c. and f. or c. i. f. quotations, and it is part of the duty of the buyer to meet them.

"Finally the conference strongly recommends as a most effective measure of simplification the general practice of quoting for export as far as possible either 'f. a. s. vessel,' 'f. o. b. vessel,' or 'c. i. f.' Concentration on this small list, all of which terms are readily understood abroad and are difficult of misinterpretation, will, it is felt, be markedly influential in avoiding confusion and controversy.

"The conclusions and definitions set forth above are the recommendations of a conference which was composed of representatives of nine of the great commercial organizations of the United States interested in foreign trade. Not all have as yet the force of law or long-established practice, but it is the hope and expectation of the conference that these recommendations will receive such adherence on the part of American producers and distributors as to make them in fact the standard of American practice. And it is, therefore, expected that in due time they will receive the sanction of legal authority."

LABOR STRIKES.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, there was published in the RECORD a few days ago a memorial to Congress formulated at a conference held in the city of Washington by the representatives of four farmers' organizations on the subject of the right to strike. I have received a letter from Hon. Fred W. Davis, Texas commissioner of agriculture, and a member of the executive committee of one of those associations, taking the other side of the controversy, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
STATE OF TEXAS,
Austin, February 14, 1920.

Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: According to press reports, four leading farmers' organizations have memorialized Congress to take all necessary steps to prevent strikes. As a member of the executive board of one of the four organizations, will say that I had no idea any action was even contemplated concerning the fight now raging between organized labor and organized capital. Had I been consulted, my protest would certainly have been registered.

Many times the statement has been made that Gompers was trying to get the farmers to pull the chestnuts of organized labor out of the fire, and farmers have been warned to keep hands off, which was good advice. Then why should the farmers pull the chestnuts of organized capital out of the fire? Certainly our farmers are more closely identified with labor than capital.

I hold no brief for either capital or labor, but the memorial deals with an abstract principle of human rights wherein it contends that labor has not the right to strike. It further contends that farmers have no right to strike, because the public's interests are paramount. If one class is going to be compelled to work for the benefit of another, or all other classes, who is to be the slave and who the master? For this is the only state of existence under such a policy. A collection of individuals have the same collective right as each individual has. Must an individual get permission of an officer of the law before he can quit working for another individual? Such a monstrous condition would be worse than Prussianism. Must an organization get permission from an officer of the law before its members can stop working for a corporation? If this doctrine becomes established, not only will industrial workers be immediately enslaved but farmers will soon fall victims to the same doctrine. They will soon be compelled to sell the fruits of their toil, which represents their wages, at the price which the other fellow offers. Refusal to sell because prices are not satisfactory will run counter to the needs and wishes of the public. It will not stop there, for they will be denied the right to quit and move to town after the public's needs have pauperized them, for the public will still sorely need the fruits of their unrequited toil and the town will have no particular use for them. A tenant farmer may be dissatisfied with the price he is receiving for his produce, the terms his landlord exacts, the educational conditions for his children, besides many other grievances, but what difference will that make when the public will starve if the farmers cease to produce? Here, again, the man who is working the land will be held up, while the man who owns it, but is probably living in town, will escape.

We should not forget that the governor of Kansas, who proposed more than anyone else to force the industrial laborers to continue to work, asked the United States Department of Justice to prosecute southern cotton growers for declaring they would reduce their cotton acreage in order to sell what they had already produced for the cost of production. He argued that the public would suffer if cotton production was curtailed.

The memorial sets up this very argument. It claims that if industrial workers—railroad men, for example—strike, the public will suffer, and the public has rights which the classes must respect. What classes, pray? The public did not charter our railroads to firemen or engineers or any other class of laborers. If lives are lost because of wrecks or otherwise, people do not sue the engineers for damages. These workers were not given the right of eminent domain, land grants, money bonuses, freedom from taxation, and so forth, for the purpose of developing the country and serving the public. Then, when the public becomes concerned, why should the laborers who have no charter rights be held responsible and the owners of the roads escape?

It is claimed that the owners are paying all they can afford to pay. But who knows what would be the condition if the water was all squeezed out and excessive salaries, which the public pays the officials for managing their own private business, and all their attorneys and lobbyists, were reduced to what these people could command in a competitive field. But this doesn't change the principle. The responsibility to keep the trains running rests upon the owners, not the laborers, and laborers individually and collectively have the right to work for nothing or refuse a salary which would beggar a prince.

We know if salaries which strikers are getting are high enough others will be attracted to them. If there is just argument in the contention that the salaries are high, the Government can put a stop to strikes by protecting those who take the places of those who quit. This, in the interest of both the individuals and public, the Government has a right to do. The Government has a right to prevent lawlessness among strikers. It has a right to take people, individually and collectively, who become a burden upon society because of idleness and put such to doing public work if they are unwilling to do private work, but it has no more right to make a section hand work for wages he doesn't consider fair, and when he doesn't wish to work, so long as the section hand does not become a burden upon the public, than it has to take the millionaire's son and make him work for wages which he would consider not sufficient for cigarette money. The Republic will write its doom when it undertakes to make one class work for another class.

If Congress should act favorably upon the memorial sent them by these four organizations, the farmers will regret it bitterly, because its only goal is tyranny.

Yours, respectfully,

FRED W. DAVIS, Commissioner.

ADDRESS BY WILLIAM J. BRYAN—A PEOPLE'S CONSTITUTION.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Col. William Jennings Bryan before the constitutional convention of Nebraska recently.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PEOPLE'S CONSTITUTION—ADDRESS DELIVERED BY WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN BEFORE THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF NEBRASKA AT LINCOLN, JANUARY 12, 1920.

PRESIDENT WEAVER'S INTRODUCTION.

(Introductory address of Hon. A. J. Weaver, president of the Nebraska Constitutional Convention.)

"As Nebraskans, we take a just pride in our State, in its wonderful agricultural resources, in its great industries, and its varied business; in the growth and prosperity of its cities, its villages and rural communities; and above all in the intelligence and high character of its citizenship.

"For above the wealth of fertile lands, of factories, and of industries stands the character of the people in the final analysis of the quality of the State. And to-day, as representative of the fine citizenship of this State, by reason of his high character, his beautiful home life, his honesty of purpose, his superb courage, and his great ability, we are honored by the presence of a man who has made Nebraska known the world over as 'the home of Bryan.' We are proud to have it so. He has represented this State in the National Congress. He has three times been the candidate of his party for the most exalted office in the gift of the whole people. He has sat in the President's Cabinet. And yet, during all the years, whether in or out of office, he has always worked among the people in the vineyard of governmental problems, going here and there in his democratic simplicity, and has earned the title of 'the Great Commoner.'

"And to-day to this distinguished guest, in behalf of this constitutional convention, I am pleased to say, 'We are glad that you are here, Mr. Bryan. We feel honored by your presence. We know that we shall be benefited in having your advice and counsel on the important constitutional questions which will be considered by this convention, and we invite your suggestions, as well as suggestions from other citizens, as to what should be placed in this constitution.'

"Our ambition as representatives of the people of Nebraska is to so administer the important trust confided to us that Nebraska's new constitution, in whatever form it is submitted, may be a real charter for a great modern State, and that it will not only safeguard the personal rights of every citizen and of his property but that it will also conform to the progressive ideals of organized government. And when this work is completed we hope that the people of this State can adopt it, not as a makeshift nor as a matter of expediency, but because it is fundamentally right as to principles of government and because it stands for the general welfare.

"I would express the further hope that when this constitution is submitted to the people for their consideration that we may have your approval, Mr. Bryan, as to the quality of our work.

"It is my great pleasure now to present to this convention our distinguished fellow Nebraskan, whom we all respect, the Hon. William Jennings Bryan."

MR. BRYAN'S ADDRESS.

"Mr. President, members of the constitutional convention, State officials, and ladies and gentlemen, I am grateful to your distinguished president for the gracious and very generous words employed in presenting me to you. I appreciate, more than language can express, the honor you do me in inviting me to address you and the privilege you accord me in listening to me. I have an exalted opinion of a constitutional convention and its membership. My father was a member of the constitutional convention of Illinois in 1870 that wrote the constitution that has remained the organic law of that State for 50 years. I look back to that as the greatest honor ever conferred upon him. I think so highly of a constitutional convention that, if circumstances had permitted, I would have esteemed it a great privilege to serve in this convention with you; I would even have submitted a request to the people that they permit me to serve them in this capacity.

"I understand something of the character of the membership of a constitutional convention. Bancroft, the great historian, has paid the highest tribute in prose to the common people, and in that tribute he explains that it is not proper to say that 'the voice of the people is the voice of God,' but that it is rather proper to say that the universal conscience is the nearest approach on earth to the voice of God. So I regard the intelligence, the wisdom, and the patriotism represented in a constitutional convention as the highest expression of the capacity of the people for popular government.

"You who gather here to frame this new constitution occupy a position superior to that of any officer in this State. The people look up to the chief executive, the State officials, and the members of the supreme court, but the members of this convention define the authority, prescribe the qualifications, and fix the requirements of all these officials. I share with you the pride that you feel in the task that you have been called to perform and in the State for which you speak. I yield to none of you in my love for the great Commonwealth of Nebraska. [Applause.] And I put none above you in that love, for the fact that you are here is proof conclusive that there are no others who have the confidence of the people to a greater extent or who, in the judgment of the voters, can be better trusted with this important work.

"I feel more at home speaking to you than I would if I were speaking to a court, for while the law is my profession, I have not had much time to practice because of my interest in what I regard as more important work. If I were practicing before a court I would be engaged in helping the court to determine what the law is, but I come before you to help you, if I can, to determine what the law should be. What ought to be is more important than what is, for what ought to be is that which overturns that which is. That which was good is changed to that which is better.

A MODEL CONSTITUTION.

"I am here, my friends, because I desire this constitution to be the best constitution in the United States; more than that, I desire it to be the best constitution in the world. And why should it not be the best constitution in the world? You have all the past to guide you, and surely none have higher purposes to inspire them.

"There never was a time when good example could have a larger influence than to-day. I was told that when they were writing the constitution of the States of China they asked an American for an American constitution that they might take as a model. The constitution of Oklahoma had recently been written, and the American to whom the request was made recommended the Oklahoma constitution, and, I am informed, the constitution of Oklahoma became the model upon which the States of China wrote their constitutions.

"This constitution ought to be written with the desire that it shall be made so nearly perfect and be brought so completely up to date that nations everywhere may find in it the highest expression of constitutional wisdom in one of the best States of the greatest Republic the world ever saw. [Applause.]

JEFFERSON GREATEST CONSTRUCTIVE STATESMAN.

"I venture to submit some observations in line with the important work you have in hand. Jefferson, who to my mind was the greatest constructive statesman the world has ever known—I put him in a class by himself and permit no one to associate with him in the expression of things fundamental in popular government, the growing government of the world—Jefferson was a molder of public thought; he put the aspiration of the people into language that could be easily remembered and effectively used. He simplified the problems of government. Some think them complex and difficult to understand, but Jefferson tried to make them plain. He had faith in the people. He said, 'The art of government is the art of being honest,' and added that 'the principles of right and wrong are so easily discerned that they require not the aid of many counselors.' My purpose is to plainly state these principles of government, the principles that you may have occasion to apply, so that you may understand how easy it is for honest men to agree when their purpose is the same and no selfish interest keeps them apart.

"In addressing this constitutional convention I address it in the belief that every member so appreciates the honor conferred upon him and the responsibility of his position that he will work with an eye single to his State's welfare and his country's good.

GOVERNMENT COERCIVE AND COOPERATIVE.

"Government may be divided into two parts, coercive and cooperative. The theoretical anarchist argues that a time will finally come in the progress of the human race when men will need no government because each one will be a law unto himself. As civilization improves, as moral standards are lifted up, the coercive part of government will decrease; as people more and more do right, because of the light that comes from within, they will less and less need the 'thou shalt nots' of the criminal law, but I am persuaded that the cooperative part of government will grow as the coercive part of government diminishes.

THE PEOPLE'S RIGHT TO RULE.

"The fundamental principle of popular government, whether coercive or cooperative, is that the people have a right to have what they want in government. If I can burn into your minds and hearts no other thought to-day I would rather leave this thought than any other, viz, that the people have a right to have what they want; that the people are the source of power. There is no other source to be trusted. Not that the people will make no mistakes, but that the people have a right to make their own mistakes, and that few people have a God-given right to make mistakes for the rest of the people. Mistakes will occur, no matter what form of government we have. In a monarchy the King makes mistakes for all the people, and history shows that the Kings of the world have lived fully up to their opportunities in this respect. In an aristocracy the few make mistakes for the rest of the people, and sometimes they find it so profitable that they refuse to correct them, even when they are pointed out. Many of the wars of the world have been waged for the purpose of correcting mistakes that the few found it profitable to make.

"Let us consider some of the advantages of this theory. In the first place, it never pays the people to make mistakes, and therefore they are not as likely to make them as those are who find it profitable.

"In the second place, if the people make their own mistakes, they accept the results and bear the punishment more patiently than they do if somebody else makes the mistakes; that is an element not to be overlooked in government. 'You did it; now submit to the penalty until you can correct it,' is a difficult argument to answer.

"In the third place, because they suffer when they make mistakes and are sorry that they made them, they will correct them as soon as they find them out. The first fundamental principle that I leave with you and ask you to remember (I shall return to it later) is to trust the people. Have faith in them because that faith is the foundation of free government; and that faith is spreading throughout the world.

COERCIVE GOVERNMENT.

"Let us first consider coercive government. Punishments are for two purposes, viz, the protection of society and the correction of the persons punished; but when you examine closely you will find that it is really one purpose rather than two, because the greatest protection that society can have is to be found in the correction of the individual. Nothing is more sure than that there is a growing sentiment all over this country and throughout the world that punishments should take into consideration the reformation of the individual.

"I venture to suggest some reforms that I hope you will consider. The first is that the first offenders should be kept separate from the old offenders. I believe that the experience of those who have had to deal with criminals will support the proposition that you can not afford to put a first offender in prison with old offenders. There is too much likelihood of his getting worse because of association with the old offenders rather than better from the efforts made by the prison authorities.

"And there is justice in this distinction. Remember that crime is not always due to deliberate yielding to temptation with a clear understanding of the wickedness of the sin. Environment is sometimes responsible for ready yielding to temptations to crime. Environment is not everywhere the same—the difference is sufficient to justify us in dealing with mercy and consideration with first offenses.

"If we take the person who has committed a first offense, surround him with a sympathetic environment, win his confidence, and bring him into association with those who desire to help him, we may benefit him and society far more than we can in any other way. We must not merely protect society, but we must, if possible, save immortal souls. There is a compelling reason for separating the first offenders entirely from those who are hardened in crime.

"The second suggestion is that the minimum punishments should be increased as offenses are repeated. We can well afford to have a small minimum punishment for the first offense in order that the person convicted may have the benefit of any circumstance that will lessen the weight of his guilt; but when a man is convicted a second time, showing thereby that he was not reformed but is still hardened, we are justified in raising the minimum punishment. He has overthrown the presumption that he can be trusted. I think we should increase both maximum and minimum penalties as the offense is continuously repeated.

MORAL REFORMATION COMES FIRST.

"Moral reformation is the only sure cure, and morality rests on religion—on inner control. You can not keep a man in the path of rectitude if he has no inner monitor; you can not put enough policemen around him to keep him straight. But if you can awaken his conscience, you do not need policemen. Conscience keeps a hundred men honest where the law keeps one; where a few are restrained by fear of prison walls, a multitude are kept in the straight and narrow path by the invisible walls that conscience rears about them—walls that are stronger than the walls of granite or of stone. Therefore, I suggest that the state ought to furnish the spiritual consolation and advice that will be received most readily. Whenever any considerable number of prisoners are brought together the state can afford to furnish the spiritual advisers who represent the different faiths with which the prisoners are connected or to which they are inclined. I reached the conclusion something like 20 years ago that the consolations that are given by the different branches of the Christian church differ sufficiently to make it worth while to give to each individual that form of consolation that is most comforting to him. Therefore, I would suggest that the two great divisions of the church, Catholic and Protestant, should be represented in our penitentiaries by spiritual advisers, that they may reach the largest possible number and make the strongest possible appeal to these men. If there are groups outside, no matter whether they be large or small, the state can afford to furnish at its expense, such spiritual consolation and advice as the individual or group may request. I know of nothing that more fully justifies expense than the furnishing of these guides back to the paths of morality.

SOCIETY'S PRODIGAL SON.

"There is another need that we are not supplying. The prisoner is society's prodigal son, and it is to the interest of society to bring him back and welcome him so heartily that he will not again leave his father's house. To this end we should provide a place where the discharged prisoner can work voluntarily until he has reestablished his reputation and restored confidence. I am satisfied that the American people, everywhere, and in Nebraska not less than elsewhere, are anxious to help the man who wants to reform. The only difficulty is that few are willing to take the risk of putting faith in a man until they are sure his reform is real. If there is some place where he can go without coercion and stay without restraint until he has convinced the public that he can be trusted, such a man will find it easy to get back into industry. Anyone who thereafter reproaches him with his former record will receive the criticism rather than the reformed man.

"The employment in the penitentiary of those under restraint should first be helpful to the individual; second, encouraging; and third, not competitive with honest industry outside. We must so help prisoners that, while strengthening them, we shall not injure those who, as producers of the country, have a right to be considered.

COOPERATIVE GOVERNMENT.

"Cooperative government is a larger subject and taxation is the first phase of it that we have to consider. Taxation not only comes first, but is permanently with us. Other governmental questions come and go, but taxation, like Tennyson's brook, 'goes on and on forever.'

"Taxation should be just and impartial. That sounds like a commonplace statement, yet, my friends, you will understand how important I think it is when I tell you that the stealing done by law in this country is, in my judgment, greater than all the stealing done in violation of law, and that the largest part of it is done through unjust taxation. If you will take from one man $10 when you should only take $5, and then take from some other man only $5 when you should take $10—that is, if by your system of taxation you make one man pay twice as much as he ought to and allow the other man to escape with half of what he should pay—you simply take $5 from one man's pocket and put it into another man's pocket. When you consider the amount of taxation in this country and the difficulty of securing equal and exact justice in taxation I think you will agree with me that I have not overstated it when I tell you that the actual amount stolen by unjust tax laws in the United States is greater than the amount stolen by those who are serving terms in the penitentiary. Several systems may be necessary, for no one system is absolutely just in the apportionment of the burdens. I know of no way of approaching justice except to employ several systems, one bearing unequally here and another bearing unequally there, the injustice of one equalizing the injustice of the other. I venture to suggest, however, that the local communities should be allowed large latitude in experimenting with the methods used to raise their quota. There is no final word in government; there is no final word in taxation; no one is able to say that we have found the best system that can be found. The only test of a policy is its success in practice. It may look very well when it is presented as a theory, yet it may fail entirely when we try it, because we may have overlooked some very important factors. Therefore in the interest of truth and progress we should have as large an experience as possible to choose from. Deal leniently with those who want to make it possible for a community to try any system it desires, for you may rest assured if it tries any system and it is not successful it will turn back. If the local community will furnish its quota of the total tax you can safely leave it to decide how that quota shall be raised.

"Economy in expenditures comes next to justice in apportionment of taxes. The conflict between the taxpayer and the tax eater is a very unequal one. The taxpayer is at home and the tax eater is at the capital. The man who pays taxes in small sums, but the man who enjoys the benefits of taxation usually received in large quantities. The official who acts as a judge between them has to be on his guard all the time to protect the man who is not there. As far as human wisdom can, you should endeavor to make the distribution of the benefits of taxation as fair and impartial as possible and economy as rigid as possible.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

"'Cooperation' is a growing word in government; it is the doing of things together that can not be so well done individually. My observation is that every new thing is first attacked by epithet. If one can not find a good reason for opposing a thing he calls it a hard name. I am an individualist, and yet I have often been called a socialist. Why? Because I believe in the Government doing certain things that it can do better than individuals can do them. Those who do not want the Government to do a thing always apply the word 'socialist' to one who advocates Government ownership or operation. For instance, suppose a town allows a private corporation to own the water system. If you propose that the city take over the water works the owners of the franchise will not meet your argument; they will call you a socialist. Yet I think the record shows that at least 16 cities out of 17 in the United States now own their water works. One hundred years ago only about 1 out of 16 owned its water works; in a century's time the progress has been so rapid that now it is the exception when a city will permit a corporation to furnish the city with water. The city of Lincoln has owned its water system for more than 30 years. Omaha has operated her water system for seven years and in that time has reduced the rate to consumers over 50 per cent.

"'The Nation has recently adopted what is called the postal savings bank. When it was proposed it was met with the charge that it was socialistic. The National Bankers' Association, meeting in California in 1908, passed a resolution denouncing the postal savings bank and also the guaranty of bank deposits. I followed the discussion, and recall that a Republican Senator—Senator Carter, of Montana—read before the Senate literature that was sent out to local bankers with instructions to have it printed in the local newspapers as editorial matter, the banker being cautioned to tear off the directions before giving out the printed matter. They attempted to build up a sentiment against it on the ground that it was socialistic. Well, we have it, and it will not go back. In the same manner, when an effort was made to secure the parcel post, it, too, was called socialistic. The Federal Government took over the railroads, the telegraph lines, and the telephone lines temporarily during the war—this was called socialistic.

"I have dwelt upon this to warn you that you can not reform an abuse without being criticized by the people who profit by the abuse that you are trying to overthrow.

PRIVATE MONOPOLY.

"Allow me to lay before you what I regard as a fundamental proposition, namely, that a private monopoly is indefensible, intolerable. Indefensible means that it can not be defended, and anything that can not be defended can not be tolerated by a free people. God never made a human being good enough to act as the head of a private monopoly. When you understand the principle involved you will find that I am not announcing a new doctrine. We have judges; we respect them; but there is not a civilized country in the world that will allow a judge to sit in a case where he has a pecuniary interest. Yet we select judges because of our confidence in their character and probity. We have good citizens in this country, and yet we do not allow a man to sit upon a jury and be one of 12 to decide his own case. Why? Because we know that there is an unconscious bias in everyone in favor of himself. We do not trust him on a jury even if there are 11 other men to overcome his interest. If a judge is not allowed to try a case when he has a pecuniary interest in it, how can one defend a private monopoly in which an interested man at the head of the monopoly daily decides, without appeal, questions where his interest is on one side and the people's interest on the other side?

"That is the principle that underlies a private monopoly. I believe it is a sound proposition, a proposition that can not be overthrown by argument, that wherever a monopoly is necessary it must be a Government monopoly, administered for all the people, and not a private monopoly, administered for the benefit of a few of the people. If that principle is sound, then, my friends, it is one of the most important matters you have to deal with in this convention. The constitution should authorize the State, the counties, and the cities to take over and operate any industry they please, including stockyards, slaughterhouses, grain elevators, warehouses, and insurance, such cooperative enterprises to be self-supporting. No one but the people can decide what is good for the people.

STATE'S INTEREST SUPREME.

"Probably the largest work you will have to do is to so write your constitution as to leave the people free to protect themselves by government ownership whenever they feel that they can better do together that which has heretofore been done by individuals. I say State, county, and city, for I believe that every unit of government, large or small, should have this power of self-defense, of self-preservation, and that the power should be absolute and complete, the only restriction being that when the Government wants to make a new application of it, it shall submit it to the voters themselves and let them decide. I go back, therefore, to that original proposition, 'faith in the people.' Trust the people of Nebraska; let them have what they want in government. The test of your faith in the people will come when the issue is raised between a private monopoly that is for the benefit of a few and a Government monopoly that is for the benefit of all.

"Every proposed change of importance should be submitted to the people for their approval; in a democracy we must trust the people on every subject. There is one exception to the referendum. If an emergency arises and there is not time for the submission of the issue, the Government must act immediately; you can not allow a State or community to suffer. The recent coal strike at the beginning of the winter was a case in point. The owners of the mines and the mine workers quarreled, and the Federal Government began to assert its rights to protect the people. Instruction followed instruction. 'You must shut down your factories three days of the week'; 'you must cut down the use of coal'; 'you must suspend work that is not necessary'; 'the essential things come first.' If the condition had continued, and it had become necessary, the Federal Government would have stepped in and taken control of the mines. The American people would not freeze; acting together, they would have protected themselves. And what the Nation can do in a coal strike a State or city may have to do if an emergency arises. The right of self-preservation in any governmental unit is as complete as the right of self-defense in the individual.

"Before leaving this subject allow me to suggest that franchises, being temporary in character, should be strictly limited in duration and should always contain a provision reserving the right of the governmental unit to take over the property of the franchise-holding corporation at any time upon payment of actual replacement value. No allowance should be made for the value of the franchise—which is a gift—or for what is called 'going value,' and, of course, no franchise should be granted without approval by the people on a referendum vote. The life of a franchise should not be over 25 years; no generation should bind the generation that follows.

THE PROFITEER.

"Next you will have to deal with the profiteer; you can not escape the issue that is presented here. The profiteer is abroad in the land. The darkest blot upon this Nation's prosecution of the war was the fact that while millions of our young men were ready to bleed for the Nation, the Nation was being bled by men whose greed outstripped their patriotism. And the bleeding at home continues even though the war is over. We have just had an illustration of it. The mine owners said they could not afford to give the increase the miners demanded. We have a law requiring corporations to make a tax return, and a Government document was published showing the excess profits of many corporations; and what were they? Nearly 300 coal companies had profits above 25 per cent on capital stock; 129 of them had profits running between 25 and 50 per cent; 75 had profits running from 100 to 200 per cent; some to 500 per cent; some to a thousand per cent; and 4 had reported profits in one year twenty times as great as their capital stock—that is, they had taken from the people to whom they sold coal enough money in one year to retire their capital twenty times—and that was a year when mothers were giving up their boys to die for their country, when wives were taking upon themselves a double burden in order that their husbands might go to war, and when the Nation was straining every nerve.

"The commercial classes have not been fair. We have given them judges and courts and officers to serve them, and any dealer can call any customer before the court and collect his bill if the consumer has the property from which to collect it, but there is no tribunal before which the patron can go and secure an investigation of the charge of extortion. Investigation shows that even in a city like Lincoln the profit of the retailer is sometimes 85 per cent. What do you think of a man charging nearly as much for handing out a pair of shoes over his counter as is paid to all who produced the animal that furnished the leather, to all who did the work in the tannery and factory, and to all engaged in transporting the shoe? This convention should set the world an example and show other States how to deal with men who attempt to extort from their fellows. We need a State trade commission, like the commission at Washington, with powers as complete. We need a local trade commission in every community, so that every person who is charged with extortion or profiteering can be brought before the tribunal and investigated. There should be a remedy for every wrong; the Government should protect every citizen from every arm uplifted for his injury.

"The honest men of the community should separate themselves from the extortioner and the profiteer. The odium should not rest upon all, but it will if the merchants stand together to protect their class from fair investigation and from the punishment of guilt. This is a very important question; you should deal with it thoroughly; you should see to it that there is lodged somewhere a power to require a license, if a license is necessary; a power to fix the per cent of profit, if that is necessary.

LIMITING PROFIT.

"We say that a banker can not charge more than a certain rate of interest. If a banker is not above control, who is too sacred to have his rate of profit fixed? If the bankers, who claim to hold in their hands the honor of the business community, can not be trusted to decide what rate of interest they will charge, who, inferior in influence and in the respect that they command, can claim exemption from scrutiny and regulation? There ought to be a power to license, power to limit profits, power to take over, if necessary. The right of the community is superior to the right of any individual. If conditions are such that it becomes necessary for a community, for the protection of the rights of its people, to take possession of any business temporarily and administer it until the emergency is passed, it should do it, and the constitution should confer this power upon each unit of government.

COOPERATION.

"Before leaving this subject allow me to add that cooperation between individuals should be encouraged. The middleman can only justify his toll upon trade when his services are absolutely necessary. He is not unalloyed good; he is at best a necessary evil. He is a burden to both producer and consumer, and should be dispensed with whenever and wherever possible. Individual cooperation is the remedy, but to be permanent it must be conducted on a sound basis and kept in the control of those for whose benefit the organization is formed. Because every cooperative plan rests on confidence, care should be taken to prevent any abuse of that confidence and the misuse of funds held in trust.

"And now I come to another proposition. I have not had time to consult any of you, and my words will, of course, have no weight except as my arguments convince you. Nebraska has, in my judgment, a great opportunity to-day, and I shall point out that opportunity as I see it. Nebraska has been a leader in this country, measured by every standard. Nebraska is progressive. Now we are entering upon a new era. We have abolished the saloon. [Applause.]

"I leave here at 4.30 for the East, stopping at Omaha and Des Moines, but my destination is Washington, and I shall be there, Providence permitting, on Friday, the 16th. Why? Because Friday is the day—and Nebraska made it so—after which there will never be another legalized saloon in the United States. There is a Bible passage that expresses my feelings at this time. You will find it in the twentieth verse of the second chapter of Matthew—the language in which Joseph and Mary were assured that it was safe to take the child Jesus back to the Holy Land: 'They are dead that sought the young child's life.' When you remember that king alcohol has slain more children than Herod ever did, I think that you will agree with me that the most appropriate words in which to express the joy that fills the hearts of American parents to-day are those I have just quoted—'they are dead that sought the young child's life.'

"And just at this time, when the most corrupting influence ever known is passing out of politics never to return, woman enters the arena of politics, and, adding her conscience to the judgment of man, hastens the triumph of every righteous cause.

"Let me illustrate it as I see it. Suppose two armies of 100,000 each are struggling for mastery on a hotly contested battle field; suppose that, just at the moment when the conflict is at its height, half of the army on one side is drawn away, leaving the field to be defended by the remaining half, would not the chances of victory be with the 100,000? And suppose that, just at that moment, 50,000 fresh troops came to reenforce the 100,000. That is what we have to-day; just as the corrupting influence of the saloon is being drawn away from one side, the conscience of woman comes to support every cause that is righteous and for the Nation's welfare.

SINGLE STANDARD OF MORALITY.

"Our State has done its part—a creditable part—in securing these reforms. Now, I suggest a step in advance. I would like to see the State of Nebraska raise here the banner of the next great moral reform by writing into the constitution the single standard of morality. All legislation rests upon a theory and that theory should be stated in the constitution. You necessarily indorse the single standard or the double standard. I urge the indorsement of the single standard—no segregation of sin; no licensing of vice; the penalties for immorality enforced impartially against the two sexes. That, my friends, I believe is to be the next great moral reform, and I would like to see Nebraska lead the fight. The women are here; their consciences will be with us; their influence will help us. How dare we longer discriminate against woman and give to an immoral man a respectability that we deny to her? I beg you to consider whether this is not the time to indorse the single standard of morality and declare that in Nebraska there shall no longer be discrimination in favor of an immoral man as against an immoral woman. They will stand side by side before the judgment bar of God, and, if they must stand side by side there, we should not give one of them an advantage over the other in the tribunals which man creates.

GAMBLING.

"This convention will have to deal with gambling. I hope the constitution you are writing will put the seal of its condemnation upon all forms of gambling. It is one of the sins that, like intoxication and immorality, has come down from the remotest past, but it overthrows God's law of rewards. When the Creator gave us the earth with its fertile soil, the sunshine with its warmth, and the rains with their moisture, His voice proclaimed as clearly as if it had issued from the clouds, "Go work, and in proportion to your industry and your intelligence so shall be your reward." That is God's law of rewards, and it must prevail except where force suppresses it or cunning evades it.

"The ax should be put at the root of the tree. Gambling is not a question of amount, and it does not matter whether one wins or loses; it is the principle that should be considered. There should be no more toleration of gambling on a small scale than on a large scale. Gambling at cigar counters, gambling with slot machines, gambling with wheels of fortune—all are gambling and should not be permitted. Chance should not be allowed to be substituted for honest industry; our children should know from their youth that there is at least one State in this Union that makes no discrimination between kinds of gambling, high or low, large or small, but that all gambling is prohibited in Nebraska as far as law can prevent it.

"I am not sure that you can deal by constitutional provision with the subject to which I now invite your attention, although it is in line with what I have said on the subject of gambling. I have been convinced for many years that we should have a law that will make it a criminal offense for any bank official or other official intrusted with other people's money to speculate on margins. We should not wait until he loses to punish him. A few years ago I read a news item to the effect that within a radius of 150 miles in the State of Iowa 10 bankers had in a short time committed suicide because of embezzlements discovered. We should protect trust officials from overpowering temptations. We do not allow a man to carry matches in a powder factory, no matter how careful he is; we should not allow a man intrusted with other people's money to gamble or to be tempted to gamble. We should save him by keeping him from that which is sure to lead to ruin if continued.

"Next I desire to speak for a moment upon the Bill of Rights. First, freedom of conscience, it should be guaranteed. A man should be allowed to worship according to the dictates of his own conscience.

FREE SPEECH AND PRESS.

"The times require that we make a discrimination regarding freedom of speech and freedom of the press. We should protect every individual in the exercise of freedom of speech and freedom of the press in the discussion of the acts of any official, in the criticism of any public servant, and in the advocacy of any change he may desire made in form or methods or details of government so long as this is to be secured by constitutional means. There the line should be drawn. Any man who attempts to use freedom of speech or freedom of the press to advocate the overthrow of this Government by force or violence should be sent to the penitentiary or sent out of the country. Those who advise force should be put in the same class with those who employ force. The man who advises another to use the torch or bomb is no better than the man who uses them. This distinction should be very clearly drawn so that we may sacredly protect the rights that are necessary to popular government, as free speech and as free press are, and exclude the abuses that have no place in a government like ours. In this connection I may add that I think the time has come to make the English language the language of the United States. [Applause.] Those who come to this country to live here and share its blessings should understand our language, not only for their good, but for our safety. If we are to submit great causes to the conscience of our people we must have a language in which to submit them. The man who does not understand the language of the people among whom he lives, the language that our Government uses in its documents, and the language of the press, is not in a position to understand as he should the questions upon which he is called to act.

EXECUTIVE OFFICES.

"A word in regard to offices. The governor should, in my judgment, be elected for years and made ineligible for reelection. I believe in the short ballot. Instead of having all the State officers go before the people when it is impossible for the people to know these men personally or to weigh their claim with intelligence, I think that we should elect the more important ones and put upon them the responsibility of selecting those who are to be associated with them. I venture to suggest that we should elect the governor, the lieutenant governor, the attorney general, the auditor, and treasurer. Then there should be associated with them others who will have equal power and equal compensation with those who are elected (not including the governor). The appointive officers should be named by the governor, with the approval either of the other elective officers or of the senate or of a joint committee of the house and senate. The lieutenant governor and other elective officers, each the head of a department, should, with the appointed heads of departments, constitute the governor's cabinet. There should be a health department—nothing is more important than the public health—and a child's welfare department. The child of to-day is the citizen of to-morrow, and the State has no more important business than looking after the children. Then there should be a labor department, an agricultural department, a department of railroads and highways, and a department of commerce.

BIPARTISAN CIVIL SERVICE.

"A civil-service system is necessary, and it should be bipartisan instead of nonpartisan. The examination should be retained to insure efficiency, and the rules should be strict enough to exclude incompetents, but those who reach the eligible list should announce their politics instead of concealing their political affiliations. Interest in politics should not be suppressed. It is contrary to the spirit of our institutions to deny people selected for service because of their intelligence the right to give the country the benefit of that intelligence on every question. But if activity in politics is to be permitted, the civil service should be put upon a bipartisan basis. Clerical positions that do not carry with them the right to decide administrative policy should be divided between the several parties in proportion to their voting strength in the State, county, and municipality. When the names are put upon the eligible list the selection should be made from representatives of the parties that have less than their share. If you retain the examinations as a guaranty of fitness and ability and then divide these clerical positions in proportion to the voting strength of the parties you will put the civil service upon a just basis. Instead of selections being made in the dark they will be made in the daylight. Fraud is not possible in daylight as it is in darkness.

"Judges should be elected and not appointed. The Supreme Court only should have power to declare a law unconstitutional, and it only by three-fourths vote of the court. It is not fair to the legislators or to those who elect them—especially when we have the referendum—to allow what they have declared to be the people's will to be overthrown by one judge. When a majority decision is permitted, a majority of one can nullify a law. If more than one-fourth of a court stand for the constitutionality of a law, they give support to the action of those who passed it. It is not fair to give to one judge the power to make his opinion supreme not only over a minority of his associates but over the entire legislature.

RECALL OF JUDGES.

"I believe in the recall of judges and other elective officers. If anyone says that the people should not have the right to recall a judge, my answer is that whenever you desire to put a man above the people you should put him out of office. A judge is the servant of the people just as every other official is. Judges are not only public servants but they are human beings and liable to err. They are even liable to be unconsciously influenced by bias. The five Supreme Court justices on the electoral commission in 1876 voted according to their political bias when the Presidency was at stake.

"I have so much faith in the people's sense of justice and in their inherent conservatism that I think they are more apt not to recall a man who should be recalled than to recall one who should not be recalled. But suppose the people do make mistakes, the people should have what they want. It is better that one man should lose a salary, even if injustice is done him, than that the people should be denied the right to decide these questions; the sense of justice in the hearts of the people is such that if they recall a man and learn later that they did wrong they will be only too glad to do him justice. When his position is restored the restoration will far more than overcome the first reflection cast upon him.

"I believe in good salaries, but they should not be excessive. When you consider salaries there are two things to be remembered. First, the amount of money that a man spends determines his associations and his environment. When you raise a man's salary so high that he associates with only a few you must expect that he will be influenced by his environment and that his sympathies will become alienated from the people who pay his salary. Second, the value of the honor conferred upon him is a thing that can fairly be taken into consideration as a part of the salary. The honor you confer upon a high official, the standing you give him in a community, the place you give him in history—these things can not be overlooked. If you have any doubt as to whether a man's salary should be increased it is better to provide him with a house or furnish him with things that he may need temporarily than to add the value of these things to his salary. When you furnish him a house you have some influence in fixing his standard of living and can thus prevent the embarrassment we have sometimes felt in our Diplomatic Service when a very rich ambassador lived so expensively as to embarrass a poorer ambassador who succeeded him.

"I also suggest a three-fourths verdict in civil cases. There is no reason why a unanimous verdict should be required in a civil case.

"The court procedure should be simplified, and absolute equity in punishments should be insured. There is nothing that arouses dissatisfaction and discontent more than inequality in the punishments visited on criminals. I recall that some twenty-five years ago we had a bank failure in Lincoln, and that about the same time a cab driver robbed a passenger. The man who embezzled a half million dollars was sent to the penitentiary for five years, while the cab driver was sentenced to seven years for taking $46. As far as human wisdom can enable you to do so, you should see to it that the punishment fits the crime; and, I may add, imprisonment is better than fines. To fine a man $1,000 for doing an offense when he makes $10,000 during the trial is not punishment. A few years ago a Chicago judge was severely criticized for assessing a large fine against the Standard Oil Co. Some said it was excessive, and yet the fine did not nearly equal the amount of money that had been made by the company while the trial was in progress. The people who complained of that as an exorbitant fine did not find fault with relatively higher fines assessed against minor criminals.

PUBLIC COUNSELOR.

"In this connection it is worth while to consider the advisability of creating the office of public counselor. Such an official could hear the complaints of the poor who are in trouble and advise them wisely and without charge. Is there any better way for a trusted lawyer to round out his life than to be the counselor of a community, one to whom the needy can go for advice with confidence that he will give them the benefit of his accumulated wisdom?

"Let me say a word in regard to the enforcement of the law. I believe in self-government. The local community should be allowed to decide local questions as far as possible, but I call your attention to one exception that you should consider. You can not intrust the enforcement of a law like the prohibition law entirely to the community. Why? Because the power to punish must be as wide as the influence of the thing to be prevented. I reached the conclusion a good while ago that a saloon is in some respects like a slaughterhouse; any man can complain of a slaughterhouse who lives near enough to it to be injured by the odor. So any man has a right to complain of a saloon who is within the radius of its evil influence. A saloon in one town in the State does not confine its evil influence to that town. The State must have power to enforce a State law; no wet community should be permitted to defy State authority or to protect those who conspire against the welfare of the State. The power of the State to suspend any officer in any locality who does not enforce the law of the State should be absolute. You should remember also that the liquor habit may incapacitate a man for deciding what is right and what is wrong. A habit that can make a man forget the mother who brought him into the world, break all the vows that he made at the marriage altar, and ignore the welfare of his own children may make him indifferent to the obligations of citizenship and the welfare of the community. Those engaged in the business of creating this habit can never be trusted with the enforcement of laws against the traffic.

THE PEACE WAY.

"In speaking of the officials in the governor's cabinet I suggested a secretary of transportation and highways. I ask you to consider the propriety of so writing your constitution that this State, whenever it desires to do so, may have government ownership and operation of railroads, just as a city should have power to have government ownership of telephones, street-car lines, or anything else that is local in character.

"And now, my friends, I urge you to consider whether the constitution should not authorize the construction of a peace way. I believe the time has come when we should enter systematically upon the building of highways. I would like to see the Nation build a great peace way reaching into every State of the Union. It would be a memorial to those who died in war and a monument to the restoration of peace. It would be educational as well as useful; it would bring the word 'peace' into the thought and conversation of all the people for centuries to come. It would be gratifying to have the State of Nebraska enter upon this and, if possible, set the example. This Nation is committed to peace; it will help establish a League of Nations, and I can think of nothing better than a peace way, which is both patriotic and educational, with which to honor the dead and promote universal peace. It should connect all the counties, as the national peace way should connect all the States.

PURITY IN POLITICS.

"Let me ask you to consider for a moment purity in politics. We must have candidates and campaigns, and we should limit expenditures so that there may be equality of opportunity among the candidates before the people. The primary principle should be protected. It is in harmony with the doctrines of popular government; we can never return to the boss-ridden convention. If the primary throws upon parties a burden greater than they need to bear, you can consider whether it may not be wise to combine with the primary the principle of the initiative and referendum and allow a small percentage of the party voters to invoke the primary in advance of the convention or to compel a referendum on candidates or platform after the convention.

BALLOTS SHOULD BE COLLECTED.

"In the interest of a full vote I suggest that at primaries and elections ballots should be collected by carrier as mail is delivered in rural districts and from those unable to go to the polls, care being taken to preserve the secrecy of the ballot. The voter who lives some distance from the polling place and can not vote without loss of valuable time suffers a disadvantage that is equivalent to a tax upon suffrage. When women vote, the carrier system will become even more necessary.

EMBEZZLEMENT OF POWER.

"Candidates for offices in which they can influence public policies should be compelled to file a statement of their position on issues before the public and to answer written inquiries (filed with designated officials) or give written refusal with reasons. Statements on public issues should be regarded as a contract between the candidate and his constituents, and violations should be defined as embezzlement of power and punished with imprisonment.

"We should have bipartisan election boards, and by bipartisan election boards I mean boards made up of representatives of different parties selected by those for whom they speak. My observation is that a bipartisan board, made up by appointment of all its members by one party, is usually a fraud. The persons appointed to represent the so-called minority party are as a rule appointed in payment for betrayal of their party in the past or for promised betrayal in the future. We should have honest election boards, and the members of these boards should be selected by those for whom they speak, and therefore interested in the detection of fraud rather than in covering it up.

A GOVERNMENT BULLETIN.

"I believe the time has come when in this Nation and in every State there should be a bulletin, not a newspaper but a bulletin, that will carry official information to all people as to the things accomplished and the issues before them. Editorial space should be given in the bulletin to the representatives of the different parties, and these editors, chosen by the sides they represent, should present in that bulletin the reasons pro and con, in order that the voters may be able to decide every question on its merits. The American people, if they understand a question and have the arguments before them, can be trusted not only to decide wisely but to settle quickly every question that comes before them.

LABOR LEGISLATION.

"On the subject of labor the right of organization should be guaranteed; profit sharing and cooperation between employer and employee should be encouraged, and power should be given the legislature to fix a minimum wage whenever that is deemed necessary; the right of collective bargaining should be recognized and every form of peaceful persuasion permitted. The use of force should be prohibited; no fraction of the people should be allowed to employ violence to compel others to act with them. The right to employ force and coercion should be reserved to the Government, which acts for all the people. If, however, we have the machinery that we need, industrial disputes can nearly always be settled without a resort to strike or lockout. I beg you, therefore, to consider whether we should not now apply to industrial disputes the plan embodied in our 30 peace treaties and in the League of Nations and create a board of investigation that can be invoked at any time by either side, and with power to act upon its own initiative—a board with a representative from each side, chosen by that side to be a part of the board during that investigation. Such a board would investigate the causes of the dispute and give the facts to the public. As in our 30 peace treaties, each side would reserve the right to act independently after the investigation, but investigation would bring out the facts and in most cases lead to a settlement. That is not compulsory arbitration, but compulsory examination for the guidance of public opinion and for the enlightenment of the people.

OUR EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM.

"Our educational system will receive your careful consideration. Education is necessary; everybody believes in the public school. There should be a school open to every child, but our public educational system should not exclude private schools which comply with the rules laid down for public schools.

"Civilization may be defined as the harmonious development of the human race—physically, mentally, and morally. Each person, therefore, contributes to the civilization of which he is a part in proportion as he offers to society's service a body strong to endure fatigue and resist disease; a mind trained to think quickly and weigh accurately; and a heart that is pure and undefiled. To insure strong bodies, more attention should be given to physical development. On this point I beg to quote, with my earnest indorsement, a suggestion recently made by Mrs. Bryan. It reads as follows:

THE GREEK GAMES.

"One of the valuable by-products of the recent war is the information gathered by statistics. Physical examinations, for instance, have proven the young men of the land below par. Instead of the vigor of which we had boasted, we find a large per cent who are either diseased or poorly developed.

"The ancients trained their youths by exercises and games. The statues of those days show how perfect was the development attained. Can we do better than to revive this system, modifying it to meet present conditions?

"The task would not be difficult. The games should be arranged under the supervision of the best medical authority, with a view to giving to each child the highest possible physical development. To give these games the maximum effect, they should be made so attractive that the children will be glad to enter the contests and will enjoy them. A great deal will depend upon the cultivation of public opinion which will surround the children with an atmosphere favorable to the games, and prizes in the form of both medals and money will help to stimulate interest.

"The division of the country into districts—beginning with the school district and proceeding upon any basis which will be just and impartial—can be readily accomplished.

"A number of stadia which hark back to Grecian days are even now owned by colleges, and no better places could be provided for the greater contests.

"The contests for girls should be separate from those for boys, and the exercise provided should have special regard to the needs of members of that class.

"The final contest should be held in Washington; be witnessed by our high officials; and the victor should not only be crowned with laurel by the President of the United States but should receive a cash prize worthy of the struggle.

"It is believed that some such system as the one outlined would go far toward raising the physical development of the boys and girls of the United States and would be as valuable to those who failed as to those who were the successful contestants.

"I would bring education as near to the people as possible. With this end in view, I would urge the establishment of intermediate colleges throughout the State, at least one in each congressional district, covering the last two years of the high school and the first two years of the university. In these intermediate colleges I would try the experiment of separating the boys and the girls, it being the period when premature attachments may shorten the educational career or, at least, divert attention from physical and mental development.

"During this critical period I would reduce to a minimum the temptation to leave school and supply the greatest possible incentive to complete an education.

NEED OF RELIGION.

"The greatest menace to the public-school system of to-day is, in my judgment, its Godlessness. We have allowed the moral influences to be crowded out. When I say moral, I mean morality based on religion. We can not build a system of morality on any other than a religious basis. We have gone too far in allowing religion to be eliminated from our schools. I would not have religion taught by public-school teachers, but all sects and creeds should have equal opportunity to furnish, at their own expense, religious instruction to students whose parents desire it, such instruction not to interfere with the hour of school. Our people will be better citizens and stronger for their work if along with the trained mind there is also an awakened moral sense.

"As we approach higher education the religious element becomes even more important. It has given me grave concern when I have seen skepticism, infidelity, agnosticism, and even atheism taught in our universities under the guise of science and philosophy. Nietzsche's doctrines that repudiate God, ridicule Christ, and overturn all standards of morality have been taught where the Bible has been barred. If we are to have religious neutrality in our universities, it must be a real neutrality. We do not ask public-school teachers to teach religion in the schools, and teachers, paid by taxation, should not be permitted to attack our Bible in the schools. I was in Wisconsin last May, and a former university teacher told me of a conversation he had with a young lady who, coming out of a classroom, said to him, 'My teacher has just told me that the Bible is a collection of myths; I do not like to doubt my teacher, but I have been taught that the Bible is the Word of God.' When I heard the story it recalled that passage in the New Testament where Mary exclaimed, 'They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre and we know not where they have laid Him.' We can not afford to have the faith of our children undermined. If I were compelled to choose between the two, I would rather have a child unlearned, but heart whole, than to have its head developed and the heart's faith destroyed. The time has come when we are justified in saying that no man or woman shall be put in charge of the teaching of children who does not believe in God. One who does not believe in God can not conceal atheistic views in teaching the children, and the harm such an one will do them spiritually is infinitely greater than any good done them intellectually. I am not willing to believe that we shall have any difficulty in finding among those who believe in God teachers competent to instruct students in all the branches of learning.

AMENDING CONSTITUTION.

"I have left for the last a very important subject, namely, the provision for amendments. It does not matter if you make mistakes, provided you make it easy to correct them. The Constitution should be amendable in two ways. First, the legislature should be able to submit an amendment as now, but instead of requiring a three-fifths vote for its submission, a majority should be allowed to submit an amendment. There is no reason why you should put into the hands of a minority the power to obstruct progress. If you fear there might be undue haste and desire to insure deliberation, it is better to allow a majority to act in two successive legislatures than to require more than a majority in one legislature.

"Second, we have the initiative and the referendum in Nebraska; do not disturb them. If defects have been discovered, correct them and perfect the machinery. If you think that there is danger of fraud in the circulation of petitions, my first answer is that the traffic which was responsible for most of the fraud will disappear from politics next Friday; we will not have that to contend with any more. But if, after the abolition of the saloon, you still think that there is danger, you can provide that those who desire to sign petitions shall go to some public office and sign there instead of having their signatures solicited, but you should lessen the number of petitioners necessary if you make it necessary for them to go to the petition instead of having it brought to them.

"It might be wise to require a larger number to suspend a law passed than to compel its submission to popular vote. It might remain in force until voted on. Make it possible for the people to have what they want. This is especially important just now; we are the world's teacher in democracy; we have spent our money and the lives of our people to make the world safe for democracy; the world looks to us for an example. We can not ask others to trust the people unless we are ourselves willing to trust them. Our answer to the man who suggests the possibility of revolution is this: Ours is a people's government; if it is not yet completely in the hands of the people, it will be; come and help to make this a government in which the people rule. This plutocrat carries the germ of revolution in his bite just as surely as the mosquito carries the germ of yellow fever. The people will, if they have the power, destroy the breeding places of plutocracy. The initiative and referendum give them this power. They put the people in possession of their government and make it possible for them to secure through the ballot anything and everything they want. For any man who suggests force or violence, we say, 'Out of this country! We have no room in our broad land for any enemy of a people's government.' The more securely we build this Government upon the people's will, the more complete their power to control it, the stronger and safer it will be.

"Mr. President and gentlemen of the convention, I can not adequately express my gratitude for your consideration and attention."

ADDRESS BY JUSTICE STAFFORD.

Mr. THOMAS. On the 22d of this month Justice Wendell Phillips Stafford of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia delivered an address which is devoted to the consideration of some of the issues of present importance. I ask unanimous consent for permission to have it inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUR LABOR TROUBLES AND THE WAY OUT.

[An address on Washington's Birthday, 1920, by Wendell Phillips Stafford.]

"Once more we come to celebrate the birthday of Washington. There is but one fitting and proper way, and that way is to consider the state of the country to which he gave his laborious days and watchful nights. What else would he ask about if he were here? Washington's love for his native land is something that passes the comprehension of ordinary men. It was as much greater than their own as his mind was larger and his heart more fiery and strong. Washington's emotions were under stern control, but they were his. He rode and curbed a temper more mettlesome and headstrong than any steed he ever bestrode. It is said that he could break his horse's ribs with his knees. If that is a fable it is no fable that he could crack the ribs of his own furious temper when there was need, and at all times, except when he was deeply moved by treasonous conduct on the part of his officers, he could and did ride it with the imperturbable calm of a master. But his love for his country, the deepest human passion of his nature, he never tried to curb. Washington was Pater Patriae. His love for this Nation was the love of a strong father for his daughter, beautiful and brave, but ever needing the protection of his powerful arm. Humanly speaking, there is no doubt that she did owe her very being to him, as truly as any daughter owes her existence to her sire. He carried the Revolution upon his own shoulders through more than one desperate strait. He secured the adoption of the Constitution. He gave up the coveted quiet and ease of age to bear the New World on his shoulders for eight years more; and when at last he laid aside his Atlantean load, and left the seat of power to his successors, he left his counsels to them and to his people in massive and enduring words which we do well to ponder on this day.

"That solemn charge discloses the faith of the man of God. Nothing in it all is more impressive than the consciousness it reveals of the Divine guidance. Washington had no doubt that God had been with him throughout his Herculean labors. He had no doubt that God had deliberately withheld the Western Hemisphere from settlement until a time had come when men had learned to prize their freedom and had achieved the strength and wisdom to set up and carry on a government 'of the people, by the people, for the people.' He anticipated by three-quarters of a century Lincoln's great utterance at Gettysburg, for, in his first inaugural he declared that the future of free government itself was 'deeply, perhaps permanently, staked' upon the success of their experiment. And finally, in his Farewell Address, he pointed us to the constellation which he had organized in the zodiac of the new skies, and said: 'These are the principles by which you are to steer the ship of state.' If any man doubts the prophetic vision of the Father of his Country let him read again that part of the Farewell Address dealing with the dangers that lie hid in factional combinations.

"The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the Nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community. * * * However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

"The question that stares us in the face to-day is this: How can we curb the selfish and tyrannical combinations of labor and of capital alike without infringing upon the rights of property or the rightful liberty of the individual citizen? It is often asserted—and it is Mr. Samuel Gompers's favorite maxim—that the mere right to combine can not be limited at all. It is said that whatever one man has a right to do by himself any number of men have a right to do together. We are told that no law must be passed attempting to curtail this right; and we are warned that if any such law is passed it will be the right of every man to disobey it. Let that proposition be tested. It can be done in a word. I have a right to walk down that street. But have a thousand men a right to walk down the street together? If so what becomes of your right to use the street? In ordinary times I have a right to sell my goods or to keep them for any price I may demand, but have I a right to join with all my fellow dealers and say, 'We will not part with a cent's worth of these goods till they bring the price we fix'? The answer to the labor leader's proposition, then, is simply that it is false. The danger may and often does lie in the mere fact that a multitude is doing what any one of the multitude might do without harm to anyone.

"Now, let us come to close grips with this question. Do you assert that all wage earners have a right to unite to raise their wages, or get whatever else they want, while at the same time you deny to other classes the same right, or do you concede the same right to all? Test it. What if all the physicians, all the surgeons, all the trained nurses, and all the registered druggists were to unite in one great federation of medical aid and should refuse to lift a finger to save a human life until their demands of whatever nature they might be were met and satisfied? Do you say that the people through their lawmaking power could not deal with a case like that? I am not speaking of what the law is now, I am not discussing any question now in litigation before the courts. I am only trying to find out what can and what can not be done by the people if they make up their minds that the circumstances call for a new law in place of the old. Even a judge, I assume, has a right to express his views upon a great and fundamental question of governmental policy, and I wish to lay down the broad outline of a legislative program which I believe would be within the power of the people, and which might go far toward relieving us of our present troubles. Do me the justice to see that I am not speaking as the advocate or as the critic of any class whatever, whether of labor or of capital. The question I am dealing with is a question that transcends all lines of class, and the solution I offer is one that applies to every class alike.

"Now, the foundation on which we have to build is the principle which Washington laid down for us in the passage that I read—the right of the people, through the expressed will of the majority, to decide for themselves upon every governmental question, and the correlative duty of every citizen to respect and obey the law. It follows therefore that any attempt by a group to override the will of the majority as expressed in law is treason to the people and to the Government itself. Therefore any industrial union that threatens to use its power by way of strikes to overawe the constituted authorities is attempting to use industrial power to control political power. It is attempting to substitute for the right of the majority the mere selfish will of a minority, and that is tyranny; and a tyrant is a tyrant even if it is a labor union! The right to combine in political parties is, and it ought to be, absolutely without limit. Men have a right to go to the polls in as large numbers as they can muster, and to vote for the men and measures they believe in. But what if all the men engaged in running the railroads were to unite in demanding from Congress the passage of a law that would turn over the roads to them on their own terms and leave the people saddled with the debts of the roads, and should threaten to leave their work as one man if their demands were not completely satisfied? That would be an instance of an industrial union using its strategic advantage as a minority to coerce the majority; and it would be doing it in a matter that affects every home and every poor workingman in the United States. It is a cruel and wicked weapon that only cowards and bullies would ever use. It is a holdup as much as a highwayman's act in demanding your money or your life.

"Now, if you will take a glance at the field of operations you will see that all who labor may be arranged under three groups.

"First, all who work for the Government itself.

"Second, all who are at work in the service of the public, but under the name of public utilities.

"Third, all others whatsoever.

"First, then, what is the right of Government workers to combine? There is and there can be no such right if it interferes with their paramount duty, at all times and in all places, to the people, whose servants they are and must be. This principle forbids the organization of Government employees for the purpose of compelling the Government to do their will, in any manner whatsoever, by strike or otherwise.

"Second, what is the right to combine of those who also work for the people, but under the name of public utilities, like those who run the railroads and repair their equipment? There can be no such right in these if it conflicts with the public welfare, for that is the very purpose for which the utilities were created, and there can be no interference with the public right under the guise and pretense that it is a private enterprise that is being carried on. Thus far we have been blind enough to admit the right of workers in this field to unite as freely and in as great numbers as those in the common private business of the workaday world; and see what a pass it has brought us to!

"We have said to labor: 'You may unite; you may unite in any numbers. You may strike; you may strike at any moment and with all your power; you may do so even when you are carrying on a work upon which the very life of the public depends.' And labor has taken us at our word. It has organized to perfection, and it now stands on a vantage ground where it can say, in one thing, 'Hand over the railroads to us and let us fix our own wages, or we will leave you in the lurch. We are going to have what we believe is right or you must take the chance of ruin to the whole country and starvation to all the people.' To such a pass, I say, we have been brought by treating as if they were not public servants, but only hired hands in a petty, private business, the men upon whose constant, loyal service not the welfare merely but the very existence of the community depends. Now, what is the way out? Why, the way out is to go back to where we started from and face the fact. The fact is that the men who engage in a service like that are not private employees at all. They are public servants. To use an expression that socialists use and approve, they are 'soldiers of the common good.' Well, then, if they are soldiers, they have no more right to strike than any other soldier has. That is what is right in the moral sense. Let it be made the test of what is right in the legal sense as well. The law ought to be so changed that when men engage in a service of that public character it shall be a crime to strike; it shall be as flagrant an offense as the desertion of a soldier who throws down his arms upon the firing line. 'But is not that slavery?' you ask. 'How can any man be forced to stay and work on a railroad if he wishes to work somewhere else?' Well, in the first place, we are not talking about that. We are not speaking of one man leaving his work by himself, and leaving it for good and all. We are talking about his doing that in combination with all his fellows, and doing it just long enough to force the public to see ruin staring it in the face and come to terms. That is not liberty; that is conspiracy. I claim there must be a surrender of this right to strike when men enter upon a service which is in fact, and which the law should declare to be, a public service. All who enter upon such a service must enlist. They must be bound by agreement and by law to stay in the service until they are properly and legally discharged, and the conditions upon which they can be discharged must be such as to make impossible any such thing as a strike or a lockout. But to accomplish this one other thing is needed. Some method must be devised whereby grievances and disputes can be adjusted. Some tribunal as a last resort must be given the power to determine, and determine finally and conclusively, the merits of the case.

"Call it compulsory arbitration or what you please, but the power must be lodged somewhere, to be resorted to when all other means have failed. But you ask, 'Can that be done, even in the case of these public utilities?' My answer is, it can. Of the right of the people, through their lawmaking bodies, to create a tribunal with such powers I have not the slightest doubt. The power is implied in the very fact that the business is a public business. As lawyers say, it is charged with a public interest; a public trust. There is nothing new in the principle itself. It is as old as the common law. Our fathers saw it and acted upon it even in what you would call the old, unenlightened days in England. When all traveling in country districts had to be done on horseback the traveler had a right to demand that the first blacksmith he came to should shoe his horse. If the smith was surly or groggy and would not do his work, he went to jail. By the same law the innkeeper was obliged to take in travelers to the capacity of his house. And so to-day, as we all understand, a railroad is obliged to receive and carry the freight you tender it.

"Well, then, if the road is bound to carry it, how has it come about that the men who actually run the road have a right to get together and say, 'This road shall not carry anybody's freight till we have had our way'? Can we not see that the same principle forbids that they should have the right to say so, and that as soon as they have made themselves a part of that business they have become bound by all the obligations that inhere in the business itself? But we must not stop there. If we insist on the workers taking upon themselves those obligations, we must do one or the other of two things: Either we must acknowledge their right to some share in the management of the business or else we must put the service on the classified civil-service basis, as we have the post office, and give to every citizen an equal chance to enter it. But in no event can we concede to the men who happen to be operating the road the right to control it while we, the public, are left to carry the property and make up any possible losses of the business. Railroad employees are only one part of the public. Like every other part, they must bow to the majority. And what has been said about railroads applies in turn to every public utility.

"Now, look at the third group. This brings us to the most important as well as the most difficult part of the problem. Is there a right to combine in those who are at work for private employers? Many of these are also doing work that must go on if the public is to live and prosper. But if we begin to take charge of these works also, where are we going to stop? Most of us would hold back from setting up a socialistic state. Then we must find means to check combinations among such workers as well as among those who work for the Government directly and those who work for the people indirectly in their public utilities, provided it can be done without breaking over the bounds of liberty. What are those bounds? We have already seen that there is and can be no such thing as an unlimited right to combine, even in respect to private conduct and private property. But we must hold an even hand between the rights of private property and the right to personal liberty. Take the case of an employer who has a thousand hands at work in his factory. He has the strength of the earnings of past generations of labor and he is far stronger than any single hand at work for him. His hands ought to be at liberty to unite and bargain with him as one man. But if he is not allowed, and he ought not to be allowed, to unite with other employers to keep wages down why should his workmen be permitted to unite with other workmen to keep wages up? Their right ought to be as broad and unquestionable as his, but why should it be broader or more perfect? Why should either employer or employed be permitted to combine with mere outsiders? As we have seen, we can not make a privileged class out of wage earners. We must treat all classes alike. But this we have not done. We have let the thing run on until we are faced with a condition that can not be borne any longer. We must curb this power of combination or it will destroy us. We can, and I believe we shall, find means to curb both labor and capital by laws that will make it impossible for either, by itself or both together, to strike hands and cheat the people out of anything the people need for their welfare. Such overgrown combinations of workers as the American Federation of Labor are incompatible with the welfare, if not with the very safety, of the people, as incompatible as is the most overgrown and arrogant combination of the money power that now attempts to hoard and sell our daily bread and to take its blood-sucking gains from our necessities. The public will soon be ready to cry out, like the gasping Mercutio, wounded to death in the quarrel of the rival houses of Verona, 'A plague o' both your houses!' I know that labor unionism came to birth because of the cruel iniquities of the capitalistic class; but the laws have been changed in many ways since then and they now give to labor a large measure of protection. If they are still imperfect in any way, they can and ought to be made perfect, and they will be made perfect if the laborers make use of the regular political methods to secure the needed laws. But the methods they are making use of now are a menace to all that we would and must save from the whirlpool of factional strife, and if they are persisted in much longer they will wreck the organizations themselves that use them—organizations that have been in days gone by a necessary counterpoise to the tyrannical power of rich and greedy classes—classes that still grind the faces of the poor to gratify their own desire for luxury.

"Now, with these facts before us can we not lay out a plan that we can work to? Remember, we are dealing now with private workers only.

"First. Let us frankly and fully acknowledge the right of any body of employees, no matter how large, at work for the same employer, to join hands and make their bargain with him as if they were one person, and let us also freely acknowledge that they have a right to strike when all other lawful means have failed.

"Second. Suppose, however, that we require every such body wishing to make a bargain as one person to take out a charter of incorporation and give bonds to keep their contract.

"Third. Let us make it unlawful for workers to combine for the purpose of a strike unless they are at work for the same employer. This would do away with sympathetic strikes.

"Fourth. Let us provide for boards of arbitration, even if their decisions can not be made binding in law upon the parties. Let them hear disputes and publish their awards, giving the people full knowledge of the facts. Public opinion will go far toward enforcing any fair award.

"Fifth and last. Let it be the law that when a case is brought before the board the right to strike shall be held up until the board has had a reasonable time, made certain by the law, to hear the case and publish its award.

"These are some of the checks upon the power of combination which I believe the people have a right to put to use. Should we not make use of all the means at hand before we go afield in search of doubtful and heroic remedies?

"Finally. Have we no word to-day for the men who tell us that even if the people, through their lawmaking assemblies, should take away their claimed right to combine for the purpose of striking, and thereby of starving and freezing the poor people of this country into submission to their demands, they will spurn and spit upon such laws and will utterly refuse to heed them or to follow the direction of any court that commands them to obey such laws? We can at least remind ourselves of what Washington would say. You remember his favorite maxim, "thorough." We must be thorough with these men, and we must not yield one single inch to their insulting and imperious demands. We must put ourselves upon the right road, and then we must go along that road to the very end no matter who stands in the way. We must not be cowed by capital nor bulldozed by labor, and we must be sure that we are right before we go ahead. 'The people mean right, and in the end they will have the right.' 'You can't fool all the people all the time, but you can fool a part of the people all of the time, and you can fool all of the people some of the time,' as Lincoln said.

"It is not a misfortune for liberty that the people have such questions to face and to decide. On the contrary, that is the very condition upon which free government exists. As Wendell Phillips said:

"If the Alps, piled in cold and still sublimity, be the emblem of despotism, the ever-restless ocean is ours, which, girt within the eternal laws of gravitation, is pure only because never still."

PROTECTION OF TRADE-MARKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9023) to give effect to certain provisions of the convention for the protection of trade-marks and commercial names, made and signed in the city of Buenos Aires, in the Argentine Republic, August 20, 1910, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. NORRIS, Mr. BRANDEGEE, and Mr. KIRBY conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On February 25, 1920:

S. 2775. An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

On February 26, 1920:

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate, as in open executive session, proceed to the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and as in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. LODGE. I have not yielded the floor, Mr. President. I desired, if I could have the opportunity, to make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Kirby	Pomerene
Ball	Frelinghuysen	Knox	Ransdell
Beckham	Gay	Lenroot	Reed
Borah	Gronna	Lodge	Sheppard
Brandegee	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Capper	Harrison	McNary	Spencer
Chamberlain	Henderson	Moses	Sterling
Colt	Hitchcock	Nelson	Thomas
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Trammell
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kellogg	Nugent	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Kendrick	Page	Warren
Edge	Kenyon	Phipps	Watson
Elkins	Keyes	Pittman	Williams
Fletcher	King	Poindexter	Wolcott

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the next reservation in order is reservation No. 2, known as the reservation to article 10. Everyone is aware that that is the point of special controversy, and I think it will facilitate the consideration of the treaty to pass over that reservation until the other suggested amendments and reservations have been disposed of. I therefore move that the second reservation be passed over until action has been taken upon the other reservations which have been reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the second reservation be passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I did not ask unanimous consent; I made the motion that the second reservation be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair misunderstood the Senator from Massachusetts. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the second reservation be passed over until the other reservations have been disposed of.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts why he thinks it would facilitate the disposal of the treaty to pass over the second reservation?

Mr. LODGE. Because before we dispose of the second reservation I should like to know what disposition is to be made of the other reservations. The second reservation is the one as to which the principal controversy has arisen.

Mr. KNOX. I so understood the Senator; but I ask why does he think it would facilitate the disposition of the other phases of the treaty to pass over the second reservation?

Mr. LODGE. I think that we could in that way get through with the others more quickly.

Mr. KNOX. If we take up the crucial question of the treaty and can not get beyond that, will it not make for expedition to consider that first?

Mr. LODGE. I think not; I think all the others will have to be taken up in any event.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the second reservation be passed over until the other reservations have been disposed of.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator from Maryland desires the floor for a few moments, and, if there is no objection, I will yield to him.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this point to introduce a joint resolution which I would have presented during the morning hour. I ask to have the joint resolution printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and in that connection I desire to say a few words, if the Senator from Missouri will yield. I shall not take much of his time, because I know that he can plead the great cause of the preservation of our liberties and the promotion of the welfare of the world better than can I.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland desire the joint resolution read?

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to have it printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, without objection.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) providing for the reestablishment of peace and the calling of an international conference to institute a concert of nations to advise concerning international cooperation as a substitute for the League of Nations, and for a national referendum, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) providing for the reestablishment of peace and the calling of an international conference to institute a concert of nations to advise concerning international cooperation as a substitute for the League of Nations, and for a national referendum.

Whereas on the 11th day of November, 1918, the President of the United States announced the signing of an armistice between the United States and the powers with which the United States had been at war, the President at that time declaring "the war thus comes to an end"; and

Whereas it is most desirable that there shall be a prompt termination of the status of war by the formal legal reestablishment of peace between the United States and Germany; and

Whereas the peace treaty has failed to receive the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate, one of the reasons for the negative action being that more than one-third of the Senate hold that the covenant of the League of Nations incorporated in said treaty, if adopted by the United States, would contravene its fundamental principles, as declared in the Declaration of Independence, by subjecting the external relations of the United States to the control of a foreign body not recognizing these principles, would violate the Constitution by attempting to change the form of government of the United States without a constitutional amendment, and would ignore and tend to destroy the right of States under the law of nations to defend themselves and to extend civilization in behalf of all civilized nations by means of war when other means are possible; and

Whereas there is a profound unrest throughout the world, due in large part to the failure of the Paris peace conference to formulate such plan for peace and for international cooperation for the advancement of justice, liberty, and the general welfare as would commend itself to the great liberal spirit of the age and the new enlightened conscience of mankind; and

Whereas the long-continued underproduction and rapid destruction during the war of the necessities and commodities of life, particularly of food, have resulted in a serious shortage, which makes imperatively necessary an immediate reorganization of all agricultural, industrial, financial, and commercial activities for the maximum production in all countries and for the distribution among the nations by the normal methods of trade and commerce of such food, necessities, and commodities; and

Whereas because of the close community of financial, industrial, and commercial interests of all of the nations of the world, the industrial and financial prostration and paralysis of Germany, Austria, Russia, and other recently belligerent countries of Europe, with the necessarily ensuing unemployment, impoverishment, and starvation of their citizens, with the threatened unrest and revolution in certain of these countries, are impeding the rehabilitation and are menacing the peace of the world and the stability of all government; and

Whereas, therefore, it is desirable to bring about immediately a situation of general peace and to take measures for establishing at the earliest practicable moment a form of international organization, approved by the public sentiment of the people of the United States, to deal with the social and economic problems growing out of the present war, and to bring about as nearly peaceful relations as possible between States by judicious and carefully wrought-out measures of international cooperation; and

Whereas those opposing the plan of international organization contained in the covenant of the League of Nations recognize that it has now become necessary for the United States to cooperate methodically and permanently with the States and countries of the world and to take the lead in establishing a concert of nations to direct such cooperation by considered advice, but have heretofore been confined to an indirect and imperfect expression of their views by means of reservations to the said covenant proposed in the Senate; and

Whereas the question of the participation of the United States in an international organization is an issue in the approaching presidential election, and it is desirable that the plan of international organization approved by those opposing the League of Nations should be formulated so that the voters, by supporting a candidate for the office of President pledged to one or the other of the two plans may express the public sentiment concerning the policy to be pursued by the United States respecting international organization: Now, therefore, in order to promote a general pacification, to declare the plan of international organization approved by those opposed to the plan of the League of Nations, and to make provision so that at the next national election a referendum vote may be had determining the public sentiment of the United States concerning the form of international organization which the people approve, be it

Resolved, etc., That the status of war with Germany, declared by the Congress by S. J. Res. 1, on the 5th day of April, 1917, be, and it is hereby, declared to be terminated and the full status of peace be, and it is hereby, declared to be reestablished.

2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and advised to make treaties of peace without annexations or indemnities and of trade and intercourse with the Republic of Germany, all matters of dispute between the two countries to be submitted for arbitration to The Hague tribunal.

3. That in pursuance of this resolution declaring the reestablishment of peace all American troops now upon foreign soil shall be immediately returned to the United States.

4. That the President is hereby authorized and directed, by invitations to be sent out by him during the month of May, 1921, to invite the States signatory of or adherent to the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes, of July 24, 1899, and their successors, and all other States since recognized or which may be recognized prior to the sending out of the invitations, to send three delegates each, and also two delegates in behalf of each of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, respectively, of the various States having colonies, protectorates, or dependencies, to assemble at Washington, on a date in September, 1921, to be fixed in the invitation, to consult concerning the formation of a more perfect general concert and union, the establishment of general justice, the assurance of the general tranquillity, the promotion of the general welfare, and the securing generally of the blessings of liberty to the peoples now living and to their posterity.

5. That the list of said States to be invited shall include the following: Argentine Republic, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hedjaz, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Jugo-Slavia, Luxemburg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Persia, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Salvador, Serbia, Siam, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Uruguay, and Venezuela.

6. That the invitations shall expressly state that the motive of the United States in issuing them is to initiate and bring about a concert of nations as a substitute for the League of Nations, and shall be expressly with the understandings as herein set forth, namely: There shall be an international conference of the States, composed of three delegates from each of the States, and an assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, composed of two delegates from each of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, the international conference and the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies to sit separately but at the same time. The assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall deliberate exclusively concerning social and economic measures and shall report to the international conference. The international conference and the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall be the first of a series of periodical conferences and assemblies of similar character, meeting at periods of three years at places determined by the international conferences. The general object of the conferences and assemblies shall be to constitute a concert of the States and countries of the world on the general lines of the international conference of American States and the inter-American high commission, by means of central and national institutions and processes adapted to carry on orderly discussion, deliberation, and judgment concerning matters of common interest with a view to inducing such peaceful and voluntary action of the States in the common interest as may be needful to bring about international cooperation. All resolutions agreed upon either in the international conference or in the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall be of an advisory character, and any international or pannational organs or processes initiated or instituted shall be of a voluntary nature and shall have only advisory powers. The international conferences shall establish and maintain a system of advisory correspondence, with continuation committees sitting in the intervals between the conferences to prepare for the international conferences and the assemblies of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies and to carry on the system of correspondence. The more specific objects of the international conference, of the assembly of colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, and of the continuation committees, and the purpose of the correspondence between the States participating shall be—

(a) To consider the common and mutual interests and the social and economic relations of the States and peoples of the world as naturally and necessarily united for mutual aid and benefit and to recommend such projects of uniformity or reciprocity in the action of the States, respectively, as will enable them to cooperate for the general welfare.

(b) To formulate a body of international law based on the security of the fundamental rights of the individual as the prime function of all Governments and for applying as between States the analogies of the laws of partnership and cotenancy, and as between States and their respective colonies, protectorates, and dependencies the analogies of the laws of conservatorship, guardianship, and trusteeship.

(c) To devise methods for the advancement of the peoples of colonies, protectorates, or dependencies from the status of dependence to that of independence and to full participation in the international conferences.

(d) To decide concerning the admission into the international conferences of any communities claiming to be States formed by the division of existing States or by the junction of States or parts of States.

(e) To promote cooperation among the more advanced nations for the improvement and advancement of the backward countries and territories, particularly those of Africa and parts of Asia, by the formulation of plans for the reclamation of waste land, for the utilization of natural resources, including water powers, for wise colonization, for the promotion of education, and the spread of civilization throughout the world.

(f) To consider the problems of the congestion of some and the underpopulation of other nations and the unregulated competition between the more populous and industrial countries for the trade and raw products of the less populous agricultural ones.

(g) To study the problem of international finance, credits, and exchange, with a view to the prompt shipment on suitable credits, particularly into Russia, Germany, Austria, China, Africa, and any other agriculturally and industrially undeveloped or prostrated countries of tools, agricultural implements, seeds, and other materials necessary to production, as well as foodstuffs, necessities, and commodities, for the purpose of encouraging a resumption of production which will be favorable to the rehabilitation of the world.

(h) To localize hostilities between States by cooperative policing of the high seas or otherwise and to take such action in case of such hostilities that the result of any armed conflict between States may be to increase the area within which the rights of the individual are effectively secured and to render more perfect the union of all the States for mutual aid and benefit.

(i) To make further provision for the pacific settlement of international disputes and for the settlement of such disputes according to accepted principles of law and by due process of law; and for this purpose to establish an international supreme court of justice and a system of inferior international courts having jurisdiction of controversies between States in which the parties in interest are citizens of different States, and also of such controversies between States in their own right, as may be susceptible of decision by application of accepted principles of public or private law.

(j) To encourage the establishment, where stable governments do not exist, of constitutional republics or governments of such character as would make for that national stability upon which would be based a permanently peaceful international order, and to promote the institution in each nation of appropriate national agencies of international correspondence and concert and the control by national legislatures of the appointment and instruction of national delegates to the international conferences.

(k) To promote amity and mutual understanding between the oriental and occidental peoples and to proceed with all possible means and speed to conciliate the people of Russia, China, India, Afghanistan, the Central Powers, and Turkey, in order that these nations or countries may not form against the western powers a hostile coalition which might menace the peace of the world.

7. That the functions of the United States as the initiator and host of the international conference and the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall be in the charge of a committee which shall come into existence in the month of April, 1921, and shall consist of the then Secretary of State as chairman, the then Secretary of the Treasury, the then Secretary of Commerce, two Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The delegation of the United States to the international conference and to the assembly shall be nominated to the President by said organization committee and said nominees when approved by the President shall be appointed by him by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The said organization committee shall also suggest to the first international conference and to the first assembly a plan for their organization, a program of matters to be considered, a project for regulating the action of the continuation committees, and a plan for organizing and regulating the central and national agencies of correspondence and concert; but nothing in the plans, project, or program so suggested shall be inconsistent with the provisions of this resolution.

8. That the general expenses of the international conference and of the assembly shall be borne by the United States, each participating State, however, paying the salaries and expenses of its own delegates and of the delegates in behalf of its colonies, protectorates, and dependencies.

9. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any sums in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the carrying out of the provisions of this resolution, the sum of $500,000.

10. That in case a candidate for the office of President, who shall have publicly announced his adherence to the plan of the League of Nations with or without reservations, shall be elected at the national election in November, 1920, this act shall expire on March 4, 1921, at noon, and shall thereafter have no force or effect.

11. That the provisions of this resolution shall take effect immediately after its passage and its approval by the President.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, although we have had a prolonged debate upon the subject which is uppermost in the minds of all of us, the peace treaty with the League of Nations covenant, there seems to be still a very great confusion as to the real question at issue.

It seems to me that in our debate and deliberations upon this most fundamental and vital issue the decision of which must so profoundly influence the future of mankind, we have descended from a high, broad, and unpartisan consideration of great principles to mere quibbling over verbiage, to legal subtleties and sophistries which obscure our vision of the essential verities. For many months I have been making an effort to state the question as it should be stated to the people of the country. Shall we adopt this treaty of hate and destruction, with its provision for a new armed coalition of powers to enforce its bitter terms, a coalition designed for the protection of the great empires and for the perpetuation of a system of oppression and exploitation of the weak people by the strong, or shall we write a new treaty, which shall look to the rehabilitation of the world through international cooperation and international concerted action for the spread of civilization and for the elevation, education, and liberation of all men everywhere? This is the essential question. An effort has been made to cloud the issues.

Some have sought to make the question whether we shall ratify the treaty with or without the so-called Lodge reservations a paramount one. To my mind this is a wholly immaterial question, for no candid man will contend that the Lodge reservations, or the Hitchcock reservations, or any other seriously considered reservations essentially modify the character of the treaty or of the covenant. Others have sought to state the question thus: Shall there be a League of Nations or shall America pursue a policy of isolation? This can not be the question, because America never has pursued any policy of national isolation and never would, even if she could inaugurate such a policy. One great fact, clear to many even before the war, has by the war been made apparent to all intelligent men. That fact is this: During the decades since 1870, by steam and electric communication, the separated peoples of the world have been energized and galvanized into an organic whole with a unity and community of industrial, financial, commercial, and social interests. This one great fact the Kaiser and his advisers overlooked when they made war, and upon its granite truth they wrecked the greatness of the German Empire and imperiled the civilization of the world. The Kaiser and his ministers failed to see that to destroy France or England or Russia would be also to destroy their own nation. This one great fact was also ignored by the peace ministers at Paris, who were in the grip of reaction and blinded by intolerance and hatred.

International bankers, prime ministers, financiers, dukes, lords, presidents, and kings in the marble-mirrored palace of Louis XVI at Versailles had no more vision than had he who laid its very stones in the blood of the peasantry of France. As the Kaiser made war so they sought to make peace—for destruction. I am counted one of the "bitter enders" against this treaty, and so I am, for if I shall live and shall be in the Senate when this treaty comes to a vote, either with or without the so-called Lodge or similar reservations, if there shall be but one vote against it that vote will be mine; and I say this because I have since the armistice been contending for peace and for a concert of the nations for the purpose of advancing the general welfare of the world. My first resolution for this purpose was introduced on the 14th day of January, 1919, and recently I introduced another resolution more comprehensive than the first. The joint resolution which I present to-day is the product of much thought upon this subject, and of collaboration with a distinguished student and very highly esteemed friend, whom I consider one of the leading American authorities upon the whole problem of international relationship.

This joint resolution speaks for itself, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD. Its principal purpose is to assist in setting before the American people the one great, vital question involved in this whole controversy, and that is this: Shall there be a treaty of destruction and a new armed coalition for the perpetuation of the old order, or a treaty of rehabilitation and a concert of nations for the realization of the hopes of the world for new and better conditions? This joint resolution also practically provides for a referendum to the American people on the question, Shall there be a League of Nations or a concert of nations?

I hope soon to discuss this question at greater length, but in the meanwhile I submit the matter for the consideration of the Committee on Foreign Relations and of the Senate.

I thank the Senator from Missouri for yielding to me.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland a question. Has he any objection to giving us the name of this gentleman with whom he has collaborated with reference to this resolution?

Mr. FRANCE. I do not think he would object to having his name known, and certainly I do not. The gentleman is Mr. Alpheus Henry Snow, a distinguished writer on international subjects, a gentleman who, because of his great learning and because of his investigations, particularly of the great question, and perhops in some respects the greatest of all questions, affecting international relations, the question of the duties and responsibilities which the advanced nations owe to the aboriginal and primitive peoples, was asked by the State Department to submit special reports and advices which might be used by the peace conference at Paris during their deliberations.

Mr. Snow is the author of a most important work, The Administration of Dependencies, and of another most valuable monograph on The Question of Aborigines in the Law and Practice of Nations.

He has published in our leading journals and law reviews numerous articles on questions of political science and international law and has frequently addressed our learned societies, all of his work being of exceptional value because of his careful investigations, wide learning, and knowledge of the law.

It is unfortunate for the world that the peace conference did not see fit to adopt and embody in the treaty more of the great principles which have been so ably discussed by this eminent scholar and student of world problems.

I thank the Senator from Missouri for yielding to me.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will yield for just a moment, I merely wish to say, in order that we may have something directly before us, that the next reservation is No. 3, the adoption of which I move as it stands, and that is now before the Senate. It is the reservation in regard to mandates.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we are to have the contest over the League of Nations, which has been once rejected, all over again, and that we must kill this serpent of treason the second time, I feel that any Senator is warranted in taking whatever time he pleases to discuss the question. I am very glad to notice that progress is being made. The process of conversion has been slow and painful, as was the propagation of the Christian religion in the pagan world, but it is as resistless and as holy.

Senators who a few weeks ago declared for this instrument without the slightest change, who inveighed against all who dared to suggest an imperfection, who treated with contumely and self-righteous scorn every suggestion of fallibility in either the instrument or in its authorship, are now in favor of 14 reservations. That is to say, they are in favor of 14 changes. Again that is to say, they admit that there are 14 pitfalls which they hope to avoid by specifically providing that we refuse to put our feet into those 14 particular traps.

So it appears that the senatorial mind, like the sun, to quote the euphonious phraseology of the colored philosopher, "do move." Probably if we wait long enough we may realize that "the vilest sinner may return." I am informed that on this side the Chamber there are now a large number of Democrats who only a few weeks ago arose each morning, and turning their faces, like pious Moslems, toward the shrine of the Prophet, exclaimed: "We pray thee, tell us what we are to believe to-day," who have arrived at the conclusion that at least on 14 questions they are going to follow "the light of reason and the common counts."

That is a wonderful progress; it is a marvelous transformation; it is a hopeful change. Very recently these gentlemen told us that if we eliminated article 10 we would be tearing from the covenant of the league its sacred heart. Now, with unholy hands, they are preparing to rend the heart from the bosom of the monstrous thing called the League of Nations.

But they have not yet arrived at the point where they are willing to remove the United States from Europe, to cut the entanglements of Old World diplomacy, chicanery, trickery, and cruelty and to fully return to and observe the doctrine of Washington, whose words only a few days ago were read from yonder rostrum and applauded, either in honest devotion or in hypocrisy.

Deny it who may, seek to avoid it who will, the whole propaganda for the League of Nations covenant as now delivered to us has been one of fraud and misrepresentation. The American people have not been told the truth regarding this instrument. One of the men who most assiduously misrepresented the document to the people of the United States has just been named for Secretary of State. I simply remark in passing that if he does not know more about our international relations and the League of Nations than he did when he was out in Missouri making speeches, he needs a long and painful course of instruction before he assumes the responsible duties of Secretary of State. However, in view of his political acrobatics, he probably can change any of his opinions very easily. That consideration opens the door of hope.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRANCE in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REED. Yes; for a question.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not have a question to ask. I wanted to apply some antidote to the poison which the Senator is trying to put in the RECORD against Mr. Colby, and I thought the antidote ought to go in with the Senator's statement. But if the Senator will not yield, all right.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I do not want a controversy with the Senator. I just thought he ought to yield for that purpose.

Mr. REED. I am entirely willing that the Senator shall occupy any reasonable length of time in administering the antidote. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute or two?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator began his speech with a very sarcastic fling at Democrats who are going to vote——

Mr. REED. I thought the Senator was going to talk about Mr. Colby.

Mr. ASHURST. I can not talk about two sets of people at the same time.

Mr. REED. I am not going to yield for a reply to all my speech at this time, but I will yield for anything the Senator wants to say in behalf of Mr. Colby, provided the Senator keeps within a reasonable time limit, because I want to get through to-day.

Mr. ASHURST. In the first place, the Senator from Missouri, my learned friend, is the master of invective and sarcasm.

Mr. REED. We will admit that. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. In many instances his just excoriation of various men in this country is proper; but I hardly think it comports with the standard of a great Senator, as the Senator from Missouri is, when a man has been nominated for an office, and that nomination is to be considered in executive session, to say in the opening of a speech that the nominee has been guilty of perpetrating fraud.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, are we not in executive session now?

Mr. ASHURST. We are not in executive session with respect to considering the name of Mr. Colby, notwithstanding the observation of the very agile gentleman, the Senator from New Hampshire. So I just want, along with the Senator's speech, to make the statement that I think a mistake was made in not sending in the name of a Democrat, Mr. President; but I think if you were to search the country you would not find a more courageous man, a more reliable man, a more honorable gentleman than is Mr. Bainbridge Colby. I regret that I will be unable to vote for a Democrat, but I am perfectly pleased to vote for Mr. Colby, because he has, in my judgment, shown qualities of statesmanship, of courage, of truth, and justice that are very needful in these times. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REED. I am wondering what these wonderful qualities of courage are. [Laughter.] It may have been an act of great courage to leave the Republican Party and go to the Bull Moose Party; but that quality of courage was possessed by a very large number of American people. It may have required courage afterwards to leave the Progressive or Bull Moose Party and come over to the Democratic Party; but a very large number of other people did that. There is, however, this distinction: When the other people changed parties they did not gain anything, but our friend had hardly landed in the Democratic Party before he landed in a job. [Laughter.] If the Senator wants to extract any more poison, I will give him the opportunity now.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I want to say this as to the impropriety of mentioning Mr. Colby because he has been nominated by the President. It takes something besides the holy oil of presidential approval to render a man immune from criticism in the Senate or elsewhere. What I have said about him was apropos of the proposition we are discussing—the League of Nations. Mr. Colby is now in the public light. There is no impropriety in discussing a man because his name is sent to the Senate. The Senator will not seriously so contend. If there was impropriety in my saying what I did about Mr. Colby, the Senator followed with an equal impropriety. When men's names are sent to this body they are here for discussion, and, so far as I am concerned, I propose to discuss them any time I feel like it, and in my own way; but I will always try to be entirely fair. I repeat that if Mr. Colby does not know anything more about the covenant of the League of Nations now than he did when he was in Missouri, judging his knowledge by his public utterances, he needs a long course of education.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there are a great many of us who need education, and we demonstrate that daily. But the Senator began his speech with the most artful thing I have seen happen in the United States Senate.

Mr. REED. Thank you. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator made a sarcastic reference to those Senators who are going to support the Lodge reservations. I believe that the Senator, whom I esteem so highly, and who I say is one of the greatest lawyers in America——

Mr. REED. We will admit that, too. [Laughter]

Mr. ASHURST. Hopes artfully and shrewdly to keep Democratic Senators from voting for the Lodge reservations. He hopes that the sting of his terrible sarcasm will keep them away from the position that they intend to take, of voting for the Lodge reservations, so that there will be no hope of ratifying the treaty at all. The Senator is perfectly justified in making that argument, but I simply want him to know that I think I see the plan. It is not an improper plan. If he can prevent Democrats from ratifying the treaty, he will achieve his point, for which he has contended in a way which can only be described by the word "greatness." That is the only way that the fight the Senator from Missouri has made can be described. But, at the same time, I do not propose that those Democrats, if any there be, who are honestly convinced that we can have a treaty by voting for reservations, shall by any sarcastic flail of his be driven from their position; and I say this not in unkindness, but in order, if I may, to weaken the force and effect of his blows.

Some of us on this side of the Chamber want a treaty; we want to have the war liquidated, and he ought not to fling that giant flail, that pitiless, remorseless hail of, I will not say abuse, but of sarcasm, upon us simply because some of us want to have a treaty. Whether it is the Wilson way, the Hitchcock way, the Lodge way, or any other way, we want the war liquidated and peace established. That is all; and I thank the Senator.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator has performed a very great service to his country, for by his warning he has prevented Senators from being misled. Surely you ought all now to be in such a mental attitude that I can not deceive you. [Laughter.] I am just wondering how the Senator discovered all this about me, and knows so much better than others how artful and how conniving an individual I am.

Oh, Mr. President, we do not have to argue this question on that low plane. What I have said I have said to the Senate in good faith, and I am saying it to the country as well as to the Senate. There is indication of movement. The Dead Sea absolutely is beginning to fructify. That part of the Senate which abrogated its duty, which refused to think for itself, which for weeks and months has daily sent emissaries to the White House to find out what it should think and how it should vote, is evincing a little evidence of a desire to function on its own motion. It is a hopeful sign.

It looks like we may be getting back gradually to the olden time when men who were sent here regarded themselves as the ambassadors of sovereign states charged with high responsibilities and sacred duties, and who felt themselves to be part of a great coordinate branch of this Government.

Mr. GORE. And the equal of kings.

Mr. REED. Yes; to adopt the language suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma, the equal of kings, of course only in the sense that they were speaking for great and powerful and independent States.

Since I have been led aside by an interruption, let me say now that this Government shall never go down as long as the people rule, and the people will rule just so long as their representatives continue to be the representatives of the people and not the representatives of the Executive. But once they become the representatives of the Executive will, the echo of the Executive voice, the Government will be a despotism, no matter how loudly you may proclaim it a Republic.

Mr. President, I had hoped this morning in a very calm and deliberate way to call the attention of the Senate and the country to what I regard as the basic misrepresentations of this whole case. I may and I may not get the attention of my brother Democrats and of Republicans, and yet I will undertake, if they but give me their kindly consideration with open minds, to at least make plain one or two propositions.

I undertake to say that the League of Nations as submitted to us bears not the slightest resemblance to the character of agreement which was discussed in this country and discussed in the world at large up to the very time the President left the shores of America to attend the first conference of the peace delegates. It will be interesting to follow the line of demarcation between those two instruments. I unhesitatingly declare that the instrument that was proposed by the American Peace Society could be passed in the Senate in one day's time. The proposition that is brought to us is utterly different, and now, if I may be permitted, I will try to make that proposition plain.

If the people ever understand what the League of Nations lets them in for it will be overwhelmingly defeated.

So said Robert Lansing, the only real international law expert and student of international affairs whom the President took with him to Versailles.

The chief difficulty in understanding this instrument is its complicated nature, a thing deliberately planned. It will be remembered that the President on the eve of his return to Europe in March, 1919, threatened that "he would so intermingle the terms of the league and the German peace treaty that human ingenuity could not dissect the one from the other." Accordingly we have presented to us a German treaty consisting of over 80,000 words. Part I purports to set up the League of Nations covenant, and Part XIII is an integral part of the league. It is perhaps even more important because it creates a tribunal to control the labor conditions of the entire world. Besides, throughout the treaty, article after article refer to, enlarge, and qualify the power of the league.

The Austrian, the Polish, the Roumanian, and the Serbian treaties each enormously extend the powers of the league. They give it control to a large extent over the domestic affairs of those countries. The method of voting by the governing bodies of the league is as to those countries so changed that their obligations and the obligations of the members of the league may be determined by a majority vote of the council instead of by the much-heralded unanimous vote. Thus is presented several documents so complicated and intermingled that even a profound lawyer acquainted with international rule and precedent, as well as the possessor of an intimate knowledge regarding existing treaties and modern world history, finds that he must give to those several instruments many days of study before he can justly assume to express an opinion of value.

Under such circumstances the masses must look to public men and the press for accurate information as to the meaning of the contract under consideration.

It is singularly unfortunate that so much has been done to obscure the truth regarding the treaty. I shall not pause to catalogue the misstatements. I challenge special attention to certain fundamental errors into which the public has been led, namely:

First. That the league is an amicable arrangement between nations to settle disputes by peaceable discussion.

Second. That force is to be abandoned and war avoided.

Third. That armies and navies are to be disbanded.

Fourth. That all this is to be accomplished without the Government surrendering its sovereignty, forfeiting its substantial rights, or incurring grave liabilities.

These opinions were the result of a widespread propaganda preceding the President's visit to Europe and kept up to the present hour. Speaking broadly, the public believed them to be in accordance with the plan which had for 80 years been advocated by the American Peace Society, an organization still in existence. That organization, in a declaration of principles issued in December, 1916, set forth these principles.

I may say in the beginning that the American Peace Society is financed or largely financed by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. The president of the latter organization was Elihu Root. Its secretary was James Brown Scott. One of its trustees was Nicholas Murray Butler, from whom we have heard a great deal lately. I ask permission to print as part of my remarks the list of officers of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE—OFFICERS.

Trustees: President, Elihu Root; vice president, Joseph H. Choate; secretary, James Brown Scott; treasurer, Charlemagne Tower; assistant treasurer, Andrew J. Montague; Robert Bacon, Robert S. Brookings, Thomas Burke, Nicholas Murray Butler, Cleveland H. Dodge, Charles W. Eliot, Arthur William Foster, John W. Foster, Austen G. Fox, Robert A. Franks, George Gray, William M. Howard, Samuel Mather, George W. Perkins, Henry S. Pritchett, Jacob G. Schmidlapp, James L. Slayden, Oscar S. Straus, Charles L. Taylor, Andrew D. White, John Sharp Williams, Robert S. Woodward, Luke E. Wright.

Executive committee: Elihu Root, chairman; James Brown Scott, secretary; Nicholas Murray Butler, Austen G. Fox, Andrew J. Montague, Henry S. Pritchett, Charlemagne Tower.

Finance committee: George W. Perkins, chairman; Robert A. Franks, Samuel Mather.

Directors of divisions: Division of intercourse and education, Nicholas Murray Butler; division of economics and history, John Bates Clark; division of international law, James Brown Scott.

Assistant secretary and statistician, S. N. D. North; assistant to the secretary, George A. Finch.

DIVISIONAL ORGANIZATION—I. DIVISION OF INTERCOURSE AND EDUCATION.

Director, Nicholas Murray Butler; office, 407 West One hundred and seventeenth Street, New York City; telephone, 8644 Morningside; cable, Interpax, New York.

Special correspondents: Alfred H. Fried, 12 Kanonenweg, Berne, Switzerland; Francis W. Hirst, 27 Campden Hill Square, London W., England; T. Miyaoka, 6 and 7 Takiyamacho, Kyobashiku, Tokyo, Japan; Otfried Nippold, Thun, Switzerland; Wilhelm Paszkowski, Universitats Auskunftsstelle, Berlin, C. 2, Germany (membership ceased Apr. 6, 1917, upon the declaration of the existence of a state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government).

EUROPEAN ORGANIZATION—ADVISORY COUNCIL.

President, Baron Paul d'Estournelles de Constant, 34ter rue Moliter, Auteuil, Paris, France; senator from the Sarthe; delegate from France to The Hague Conferences of 1899 and 1907; member of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague; president of La Conciliation Internationale; recipient of the Nobel peace prize (with M. Beernaert), 1909.

Apponyi, Count Albert, Schloss Eberhard, près de Pressbourg, Hungary; a member since 1872 of the Hungarian Parliament and president of that Parliament, 1902–1904; formerly minister of public instruction; a privy councilor; member of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague; member of the Interparliamentary Union.

Bajer, Fredrik, Korsgade 56, Copenhagen N., Denmark; a member from 1872 to 1895 of the Folkething; established in 1882 the Peace Society of Denmark (Dansk Fredsforening); publisher of Fredstidende; one of the founders in 1891 of the Bureau International de la Paix at Berne, and now honorary president of the bureau; member of the council of the Interparliamentary Union; recipient of the Nobel peace prize (with M. Arnoldson) in 1908.

Beaufort, W. H. de, care ministry of foreign affairs, The Hague, Holland; formerly minister of foreign affairs; member of the second chamber of the states-general; delegate from Holland to The Hague Conference of 1907; president of the second committee of The Hague Conference of 1907.

Bourgeois, Léon, 3 rue Palatin, Paris, France; senator from the Marne; formerly member of the Chamber of Deputies; formerly minister and president of the council of ministers; formerly president of the Chamber of Deputies; delegate from France to The Hague Conferences of 1899 and 1907; member of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague.

Renault, Louis, France; professor of international law in the University of Paris; professor of international law, in the École Libre des Sciences Politiques; jurisconsult in the ministry of foreign affairs; member of the permanent court of arbitration; delegate to the first and second Hague peace conferences, to the Geneva Red Cross conference (1906), to the London Naval Conference (1908–1909); formerly president of the Institute of International Law; arbiter in international controversies.

Scott, James Brown, United States; secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and director of its division of international law; member of the Institute of International Law; president of the American Institute of International Law; editor in chief of the American Journal of International Law; technical delegate to the second Hague peace conference; counsel in the North Atlantic coast fisheries arbitration at The Hague; formerly solicitor for the Department of State; special adviser to the Department of State in matters arising out of the European war, 1914–; chairman of the United States Joint State and Navy Neutrality Board, 1914–1917; also international law adviser to Mr. Lansing and President Wilson at peace conference.

Taube, Baron Michel de, Russia; counselor to the ministry of foreign affairs; professor of international law in the University of Petrograd; member of the permanent court of arbitration; delegate to the London naval conference; associate of the Institute of International Law.

Mr. REED. In December, 1916, Mr. James Brown Scott printed, at the instigation of this organization, a declaration of principles and demands. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read them, although they are not long, but I ask to have them inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

I. To urge the call of a third Hague conference, to which every country belonging to the society of nations shall be invited and in whose proceedings every such country shall participate.

II. To advocate a stated meeting of The Hague peace conference, which, thus meeting at regular, stated periods, will become a recommending if not a law-making body.

III. To suggest an agreement of the States forming the society of nations concerning the call and procedure of the conference, by which that institution shall become not only internationalized but in which no nation shall take as of right a preponderating part.

IV. To request the appointment of a committee, to meet at regular intervals between the conferences, charged with the duty of procuring the ratification of the conventions and declarations and of calling attention to the conventions and declarations in order to insure their observance.

V. To recommend an understanding upon certain fundamental principles of international law, as set forth in the declaration of the rights and duties of nations adopted by the American Institute of International Law on January 6, 1916, which are themselves based upon decisions of English courts and of the Supreme Court of the United States.

VI. To propose the creation of an international council of conciliation, to consider, to discuss, and to report upon such questions of a nonjusticiable character as may be submitted to such council by an agreement of the powers for this purpose.

VII. To commend the employment of good offices, mediation, and friendly composition for the settlement of disputes of a nonjusticiable nature.

VIII. To approve the principle of arbitration in the settlement of disputes of a nonjusticiable nature; also of disputes of a justiciable nature which should be decided by a court of justice, but which have, through delay or mismanagement, assumed such political importance that the nations prefer to submit them to arbiters of their own choice rather than to judges of a permanent judicial tribunal.

IX. To insist upon the negotiation of a convention creating a judicial union of the nations along the lines of the Universal Postal Union of 1908, to which all civilized nations and self-governing dominions are parties, pledging the good faith of the contracting parties to submit their justiciable disputes, that is to say, their differences involving law or equity, to a permanent court of this union, whose decisions will bind not only the litigating nations but also all parties to its creation.

X. To endeavor to create an enlightened public opinion in behalf of peaceable settlement in general, and in particular in behalf of the foregoing nine propositions, in order that, if agreed to, they may be put into practice and become effective, in response to the appeal to that greatest of sanctions, "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind."

Mr. REED. Briefly, the organization demanded—

(a) That a third Hague convention should be assembled at the conclusion of the war;

(b) That there should be created a judicial union to which the civilized nations would agree to submit their justiciable disputes; that is to say, their differences involving law or equity;

(c) That there should be arbitration of nonjusticiable disputes voluntarily submitted by nations to arbiters of their own choice;

(d) That there should be created a council of conciliation to consider and report upon nonjusticiable questions voluntarily submitted.

(e) It also agreed to recommend an understanding upon fundamental questions of international law "based upon the decisions of English courts and the Supreme Court of the United States."

The above principles were advocated by the society as late as December, 1916. They were indorsed by Elihu Root; they were indorsed by Nicholas Murray Butler; they were indorsed by James Brown Scott; they were indorsed by all the international societies organized for the promotion of peace. They represented the most advanced thought at that time.

The epitome which I have given is a fair presentation of the demands then made. The public undoubtedly believe that the President took these demands or similar demands with him to Europe and that he has written them in the covenant of the league. Whatever his intentions may have been when he left America, the covenant as produced was as diametrically opposed to the plan outlined as darkness is to light. Let me place these principles in contrast with the terms of the League of Nations covenant.

The peace society advocated an organization of persuasion, not of force.

The League of Nations is throughout an organization of force.

The President in submitting the draft to the peace delegates declared "force is in the background," but it is in the background. It is, of course, immaterial whether force is in the background or in the foreground, so long as it is present. I shall show that force is the very soul of the league itself.

Article 10 expressly binds every member of the league "to preserve against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league."

That is nothing more nor less than an agreement binding every member of the league to summon its army and navy to crush any nation at war with any member of the league. The fundamental thought is force, not persuasion.

Moreover, it is expressly provided that "in case of any threat of such aggression the council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled"; that is to say, the council shall set the force in motion.

It is immaterial whether the council merely "advises" or commands. Plainly, if the advise is to be followed it is equivalent to a command; if it is not to be followed, the provision is senseless and useless. Without quibbling as to terms, I remark in passing that it is contended that a correct translation of the French text would be that the council shall "direct" or "command." If this is true our English copy should be revised and the word "direct" be substituted for "recommend."

Again, article 11 declares that "any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any member of the league or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be (by it) deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations." The language is calculated to soothe those who are opposed to war, because it speaks of "taking action to safeguard the peace of nations"; but it is perfectly plain that the action to be taken may be, and almost necessarily must be, the employment of overwhelming military force.

The language—

The league shall take any action that may be deemed * * * effectual—covers the employment of all kinds of force. That this is the purpose is shown by the concluding paragraph, which provides that upon the request of any member of the league the council shall be forthwith summoned. Summoned to do what? Summoned "to take any action deemed effectual to safeguard the peace of nations"; that is, to compel nations to submit to its will and to, if necessary, employ force. This is the construction the President himself puts upon the treaty. He says:

Article 11 is my favorite article. At present we must mind our own business, but under article 11 we can mind other peoples' business.

That is very true; but the obligations and privileges of the contract are mutual. Therefore, when we acquire the right "to mind the business" of 32 other nations, members of the league, they acquire the corresponding right to mind the business of the United States; and, without indulging in harsh statements, I can not refrain from saying whoever confers upon foreign Governments the right to control the destiny of the United States is, in my humble judgment, guilty of treason against the United States.

The instrument that gives us the right to join our force with the force of other nations to crush any country going to war at the same time gives to the 32 States of the league a corresponding right to crush the United States if, in defense of its rights as a nation or the protection of its people, it engages in war. Clearly we are asked to sign away the sovereignty of the State, for that nation which surrenders the right to protect its rights as it may deem best is no longer a sovereign power.

The league is, in a word, a combination for the government of the world by force. It is not a league of persuasion. That is put beyond all cavil by the speech of the President delivered on May 21 last. That speech was censored and carefully withheld from the American people—a performance un-American, un-Republican, un-Democratic, and unsafe.

The circumstances under which the speech was delivered were that the representatives of Roumania and Serbia had protested against the sections of the treaty with Austria, which compelled their countries to recognize the right of the four great powers to intervene on behalf of minorities in Roumania and Serbia. The ground of the protest was that such an assumption of authority clearly interfered with the right of these States to govern their internal affairs. They also objected to the division it was proposed to make of territory. The President, in answer, said:

We want to insure the peace of the world. * * * One of the essential conditions is an equitable distribution of territory. * * * This distribution made—the allied and associated powers will guarantee the maintenance of the conditions which we shall decide upon, having made these conditions as just as possible. These powers are the nations which will undertake the contract and the burdens; on them will rest the chief responsibility, just as, by force of circumstances, they have made the greatest efforts during the war.

And it is necessary always to remember that it is force which is the ultimate guaranty of the public peace.

Under such conditions is it unreasonable that we should say to you, speaking in the language not of dictators but of advisers and friends, "We can not guarantee your frontiers here if we do not believe that they conform to certain principles of right and wrong"?

Exactly the same line of reasoning applies to the question of minorities.

That is, of the internal business of these States. I continue reading:

It is with the same concern that condition as to minorities has been discussed. If you want the principal allied and associated powers—

The principal allied and associated powers! Let us put that in plain language: "If you want Great Britain, France, and the United States," and, perhaps, we had better include Japan—

If you want the principal allied and associated powers to guarantee the existence of your States, is it unreasonable that they should be satisfied as to the conditions which they regard as indispensable if we are to avoid future causes of war?

If these States—

are solidly established, thanks to the treaty which we are making together, the right belongs to the powers which will guarantee the execution of this treaty, in the last analysis, to see to it that the conditions on which these States will be established are of a sort to insure the public peace. * * *

If the world should be troubled again, if the conditions which we all regard as fundamental are challenged, the guaranties which will be given to you will pledge that the United States will send its Army and fleet across the ocean.

Yet there are Senators who have argued on this floor that we are not bound to send our troops across the sea; there are Senators who have argued on this floor that there is nothing in this covenant obligating us to send our troops over there; but here is the construction of the President himself; here is his solemn word passed to the representatives of these two European countries:

> The guaranties which will be given to you will pledge that the United States will send its Army and fleet across the ocean.

He continues:

> Is it surprising under such conditions that it should desire a right solution of the various problems which seems to it satisfactory?
> I hope we will reach—that is our goal—a cordial and voluntary cooperation on the only possible basis. That basis—one must express in this fashion—will have to be supplied by those who will furnish the force which will insure the maintenance of peace—

To furnish the force to conquer any nation that violates the mandates they put forth. That is the meaning of that language. Perhaps I should read it in context:

> That basis will have to be supplied by those who furnish the force which will insure the maintenance of peace, by those in whom will dwell that force which will be the supreme guaranty of peace.

I hope we will not hear it again said on the floor of the Senate that we do not obligate ourselves to send our troops to Europe to fight the battles and to defend the territory of the various European countries. I hope the converse of that proposition will never again be denied, namely, that European nations acquire the right to come to this continent and to employ their joint force against us when in the opinion of the masters of the league the employment is desirable.

Here, taking the President's own statement, are two propositions laid down:

(1) That the peace is to be a peace of force, a peace by compulsion of the four great powers.

(2) That each of the great powers is bound to send its army and navy to compel that peace; or, stated in different language, to send its army and navy to conquer and devastate any country that has offended against the supreme will of the league. That is to say, the four great powers, by a combination of ships and men, are to control the world.

That the league is a league of force could be proven by the utterances of nearly every great public man. I, however, content myself with the quotation from the President.

I, however, challenge attention to the fact that an international army is contemplated. The man who deceives himself or deceives his people in regard to that truth does himself and his people a poor service. We are at this moment enlisting men for the foreign service. You can not enter a country depot in those States where they are now seeking troops without finding its interior plastered with posters calculated to seduce the young men of the country into the Army. The argument used is that by joining the Army they can see Europe and Asia and Africa without expense. They are told that rich people buy their tickets and pay their own expenses, but that the Government is willing to take its soldiers on pleasant excursions to all parts of the world; that they will serve within sight of ancient castles and enjoy delightful visits to places of historic interest. Occasionally their eyes are dazzled by pictures of French girls flirting with American recruits as they march in glory down the streets of Paris. To-day, while some of you have been telling the American people that this league does not contemplate the service of our troops abroad, the officers of the Army of the United States in your own communities are gathering recruits by promising them service within the shadows of the Pyramids and romantic adventures amidst the forests of Africa. I intend before these debates close to put some of this literature into the RECORD.

So let every candid and honest man in this body tell his people that it is contemplated that we shall have an internation army, and that the men are being recruited now, under the authority of the President of the United States, for that foreign service.

One of the plainest statements in regard to this international army was made by Winston Churchill in the House of Commons on February 23. He was speaking about the burdens of the mandatory in Turkey. Now, of course, Great Britain is immensely interested in Turkey. She has taken over Persia; she has taken over Egypt; she holds India. Turkey is the seat of Moslemism, but the adherents of that doctrine are in Persia, they are in Egypt, they are in India. Turkey is a sort of wedge driven into the vast domain of Moslemism. What Great Britain has feared for a half century of time has been a revolt by the Moslems as a whole. Of course, if the United States could be induced to keep an army in Turkey it would, in the event of an uprising of Great Britain's subject and enslaved countries, be a very convenient thing for Great Britain.

Speaking of this mandatory in Turkey, Winston Churchill said, on February 23, in the House of Commons:

> We do not know when peace with Turkey will be made or what degree of acquiescence it will demand from the Turkish people. We do not know what aggressive action the Russian Bolsheviki will take in this sphere. We do not know how far Viscount Milner's commission may be able to reduce the contention in Egypt. We do not know when our responsibilities in Constantinople will terminate or when the expense of maintaining an international force will be taken over by an international body.

Winston Churchill does not know, because the Senate of the United States has not yet ratified this treaty; but if we do ratify it the troops that are now being enlisted for foreign service will probably be sent immediately to Turkey, and the expense, added to the other enormous burdens now resting upon the American people, would be magnified. Be assured that we will soon be doing police duty for the benefit of the British Empire, and the British Empire alone. Yet, one might as well cry out to the deaf ears of the adder as to those who go down to the White House to get their orders as to how they shall vote.

In this connection, and on this proposition of peace, I read a few more quotations.

On July 3, 1919, Lloyd-George declared:

> After all, the league could have no value unless it had behind it strong nations prepared at a moment's notice to stop aggression.

Prepared at a moment's notice to impose their will upon the world, but let us take his own language:

> Prepared at a moment's notice to stop aggression.

There can be no preparation for action at a moment's notice unless there is an international force near the scene of the disturbance. For men to shut their eyes to that plain fact is for them to be voluntarily blind, indeed.

Again, he said:

> Had the league been in existence in 1914 * * * America would have been in [the war] the first day, instead of two years after.

And yet Senators will tell their people, "We are under no obligation to make war or to contribute to an international army"!

Perhaps I ought to put in a statement from that great advocate of the league, William H. Taft. On January 8, 1919, he stated that—

> The plan of the American league as recently announced contemplates the use of the combined military and naval forces of the league to wage war. It is merely a treaty obligation of the United States to begin a war for the league purpose in a certain contingency.

An obligation of the United States to begin a war for the league purpose! Yet Senators will go back to their people and say to them that we are not obligating ourselves to enter a war, and that the Congress retains perfect freedom of action!

Again, the President said, as quoted by Mr. Taft—and I suppose that no one would dispute the right of Mr. Taft properly to represent the President on this issue—

> If you say, "We shall not have any war," you have got to have the force to make the "shall" bite.

You have got to have the Army and the Navy to compel obedience to your will.

I shall not further quote Taft; what he says is immaterial. [Laughter.]

So, Mr. President, instead of having a league of persuasion, an organization to produce good will, we have a league of force. Between a league of force and a concert of powers acting in accordance with the principles of law, and having a judicial tribunal to interpret that law, there is the difference which exists between despotism and liberty.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. In giving the utterances of various prominent men construing the obligation of the members of the league to resort to force and furnish armies and navies whenever required by the league, has the Senator in mind the cablegram to Mr. Tumulty, sent by the President at the time he announced the making by the United States of an alliance with France to send an army for France's relief at any time when called upon to resist German aggression, in which the President said that the obligation under the special treaty with France is no more than the United States would be compelled to do under the provisions of the league? That is, in substance, the cablegram sent to Mr. Tumulty, and by him made public in the United States about that time.

Mr. REED. I remember the cablegram. I had not quoted it, and I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it, and I hope he will, if he can, furnish a literal copy and insert it as a part of his statement, because it ought to be known.

This miserable, beggarly method of procedure, of trying to deceive the people with reference to what we are entering upon, ought to be stopped. We are proposing the creation of a vast power to control the world. That power will be exercised, as is stated by the President, whose words I have read, by the powers that are to furnish the force. The powers that are to furnish the force the President describes as the "principal allied powers." We, of course, know that we will be expected to furnish most of the money and most of the force.

Let the American people be told this plain truth, that if we enter this covenant we must tax our citizens for the money to maintain the peace in Europe as construed by the leading powers of Europe. That is to say, we must pay our money to support an international fighting force great enough to impose the will of the four or five great powers upon the world; we must continue to burden our taxpayers with that enormous weight, although in the control of that international government, we will be a minority of one sitting on a controlling board of nine. Let the people be told the truth on that one question.

Then let them be told that in addition to furnishing the money they must furnish their sons.

Let them be also told that the military bill, now laid down by the executive department, demands the application of the involuntary draft the moment the United States is at war. Let them be told that the United States will be at war the moment the controlling members of the league give the command to move an international army or navy against any nation. Under the new draft, as proposed, the moment war appears anywhere in the world, automatically, without action of Congress, the President can call out every citizen of the United States between 18 and 45, and if the citizen fails to respond he can be thrown into the penitentiary. Let the people be told that this war condition can be created without the action of the Congress of the United States, but by the controlling powers of the League of Nations.

Men may seek to avoid that to-day; they may try to deceive themselves about that to-day; they may be mild reservationists, who long for a rattlesnake with only two fangs instead of a full set of teeth. But they will be obliged to face this issue because it will be immediately before them. The practical application of the league will begin the day after it is signed—indeed, it has already begun. How has it begun? The government of the world now sits in secret. Nine men behind locked doors determine the business of the world, and "open covenants openly arrived at" has been transformed into a government of the world carried on in secret.

The second proposition I lay down is this: That the American Peace Society advocated a tribunal judicial in its character, governed by rules of international law based upon the decisions of the highest courts of England and the United States. That is the very language they employ, "a tribunal judicial in its character, governed by the rules of international law, based upon the decisions of the highest courts of England and the United States." The League of Nations is not judicial, it is political. Its will is supreme in all international matters regardless of any international law.

There is no provision binding the league to observe the principles of international law, whether based upon the decisions of the courts of England and of the United States or the decisions of any other courts. It is in its very nature a political tribunal, and it can not be impartial for two reasons:

First, its members will be the political representatives of the political governments of the States, and therefore bound to serve the political interests and obey the commands of their principals.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him at this point, assuming that statement to be correct, how can the Monroe doctrine be exempted from the operation of part 1 and remain at all effective? In other words, if the decisions of the league, and particularly as affecting other countries in the Western Hemisphere which are members of the league, are to be controlling, does the exemption of the Monroe doctrine from the jurisdiction of the league in practice amount to anything?

Mr. REED. I can not see how it could amount to anything, and I think there is a great flood of light thrown on that by the statement of the English "white paper" which I have with me.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Balfour was the man who said that.

Mr. REED. I should be glad to insert that statement. It seems to me utterly ridiculous to say that we save and reserve the Monroe doctrine and at the same time set up a superworld government that has jurisdiction of every question that affects the peace of the world. You can not have two supreme places of authority and decision.

If the United States has the supreme right to decide all questions arising under the Monroe doctrine, then they must decide those questions whether they affect the peace of the world or not, and decide those questions for the United States in accordance with the view of the United States. But if you have a tribunal sitting at—where is our new capital to be?

Mr. THOMAS. Geneva.

Mr. REED. At Geneva, with authority to pass on every question affecting the peace of the world, that supreme jurisdiction covers every controversy on this side of the ocean as well as on the other side.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. The interruption I desire to make applies more particularly to what the Senator was discussing just a few minutes ago. I wanted to find the dispatch before I interrupted him, and he had left the subject when I found it. I wanted to ask the Senator if he noticed in this morning's paper the dispatch from London showing that this league, which has moved its capital temporarily from Geneva to London, is now doing just what the Senator said a few moments ago they would do under the league when it was established. I would like to quote one sentence from the dispatch. The entire dispatch is interesting, but one sentence shows what is going on now. It shows that this supergovernment is right now deciding for the balance of the world what shall be done in regard to the recogniton or nonrecogniton of the so-called soviet government in Russia. The sentence I want to quote is as follows:

> The somewhat cryptic statement by the supreme council yesterday, indicating a more tolerant attitude toward Russia, pieced together with significant remarks made to the correspondent of the Sun and New York Herald here by responsible bankers, permits the following deductions.

Then he proceeds to deduce what the new order really means in regard to Russia.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, does the Senator from Nebraska understand that the supreme council is a part of the league now in operation in London? My understanding was that the supreme council is altogether a different department from the league.

Mr. NORRIS. The supreme council, to which I presume the Senator refers, will be superseded later, as I understand it, by the league; but it is in operation now, performing the functions that I have mentioned.

Mr. STERLING. The supreme council is, but not the League of Nations.

Mr. REED. But the Senator will hardly deny that the supreme council is composed of the political representatives of political Governments. Neither will he deny that the council of nine of the League of Nations will be composed of the political representatives of the same political Governments; that the two bodies are identical in origin, in character, in jurisdiction; and that the functioning of one furnishes a very good example of what will be the functioning of the other. I think we ought to discuss these questions broadly.

But, Mr. President, although it interrupts what I have been saying, I want to go back and conclude a theme that I had passed without having concluded. I was discussing the question of war, the question of force, and I omitted to say that we have conclusive evidence that the league is to be a league of force, in which the United States must furnish an enormous portion of the military power.

The Secretary of War, acting, of course, for the White House, demanded, as I recollect the latest figures, a standing army of 576,000 men, and testified that we needed that many men to redeem our obligations under the league. The Chief of Staff, Gen. March, gave the same testimony. In addition to that they both testified that we must have universal military training, which, as I understand the figures, would put constantly under arms an average of about 200,000 men, boys who are to be called from their homes and, under a Prussian military system, forced into the Army and to do service. You may call it "military training," if you please. William of Prussia called his three years' service military training. It is, in fact, the draft, the involuntary military service of Prussia fastened upon the United States. Two hundred thousand on the average from that source, as I understand the figures; 200,000 all the time of new men. Every time a boy reaches the age of 19 he is marched to a military camp, put under a Regular Army officer, and begins the regular drill, just as the Prussian drillmaster took the recruit from the farm or the shop of Germany.

Thus you have an Army constantly in the service of approximately 776,000 men, nearly 800,000 men, and a reserve has been suggested of 760,000. It will certainly be more than that. You will find that your reserve will run away above that in a short time.

Let us stop and compare that with the good old days when we did not propose to run the world, but to run ourselves; when we did not seek to impose our will or to help Great Britain impose its will upon the world; when we did not propose to "mind other peoples' business," but to mind our own business. Let us compare:

Under Theodore Roosevelt, the Army at one time, as I recall, got to nearly 80,000 men, and he reduced it. Nobody ever accused him of being a mollycoddle, to adopt his own phrase. Prior to that we had had in this country an Army of only 25,000 men for many years, but 80,000 to 90,000 was the highest we ever had in time of peace, and we recruited up to that point because of threatened trouble with Mexico. Now, it is proposed to have, first and last, substantially 800,000 Regular soldiers, or men forced into the Army under the draft. You call it military training, but it is the military draft.

So we are to multiply our old Army obligations by ten times and to do it for the sake of a league of nations to help Great Britain to maintain her supremacy over one-fourth of the earth's habitable surface and over one-quarter of the earth's population, 400,000,000 of whom are not free men. Take it to your people if you will, take it to them if you dare, but tell them the truth about it.

But, sir, in addition to that comes the Secretary of the Navy with a demand for $913,000,000 worth of new ships, although the $725,000,000 we appropriated three years ago has not yet been fully exhausted. He testifies this enormous Navy is necessary under the League of Nations.

He demands a personnel for the Navy of 250,000 men; 250,000 fighting bluejackets and marines. Adding them to the military force—the Army—as I have figured it, we would have over 1,000,000 constantly under arms in this country, and we are to supplement that enormous establishment by the universal draft. If that be not the Prussianization of America, if that be not the adoption of Prussian methods in America, then will some Senator rise in his place and tell me what would constitute the Prussianization of this country from a military standpoint? The greatest army that any country in Europe maintained until very recent years was less than 1,000,000 men, and yet in this Republic we are to take at least 1 out of every 10 of our men capable of bearing arms and put them upon the fighting forces of the sea and into the military camps. It is the longest step toward Prussianization that has ever been taken in any country in the same length of time.

While we are doing that we are talking of democratizing the world. At the same time, Great Britain, according to dispatches a short time ago, has adopted as a permanent policy the draft in Great Britain, although for 500 years Great Britain has refused to draft except in the very extremity of mortal conflict, although she was not able to adopt it until the closing days of the late war, and although she only adopted it then to keep faith with the married men, who had agreed to go to war provided the single men were all compelled to go. She now adopts it, and this although Australia, proud of her liberty, had rejected it by a popular vote; New Zealand had done likewise.

It appears that the Prussian military system has taken a change of venue, if I may use that term, from Prussia to Great Britain, and proposes to move over to the United States under our flag. It can not be smiled away. The tramp of a million men, Regular soldiers or drafted men, under the American flag is as un-American a thing as the crown of a British King would be.

This is but the beginning. When we once contribute these forces to these international armies to impose the will of four or five men upon the world—for that is what it means—there will be calls for further contributions, for further service in military training; that is to say, in military servitude.

Soft phrases will not get you anywhere, Senators. The gentle and seductive term of "mandatory" might as well also be understood. It is the holding in subjection of a people by force of arms; it is the heel of a military master upon the bosom of a people that have been crushed to the earth; it is the term that has been employed in arrant hypocrisy by France and Great Britain for a century past. They have had mandatories and they have had protectorates in every country. Great Britain established a protectorate in a small part of India. It was the beginning of a great empire in the Orient. The liberties of 300,000,000 people were engulfed in that gentle term "protectorate." England had a mandatory or protectorate in Cape Colony, which she established by force of arms, and that developed into a complete seizure of all governmental powers, until the poor Boers trecked away into the wilderness and established among the savages of the forest and the desert two little Republics. Even there Great Britain trailed them and established another protectorate. The liberties of the Boers were soon snuffed out by the deadly flame of the cannon.

England had a protectorate or a mandatory in Egypt and her statesmen invoked as witnesses of their truthfulness the presence of Almighty God and by His name swore they were only going to shield Egypt; but it ends to-day in the complete absorption of Egypt. France had a protectorate in parts of Africa, but her protectorate resolved itself into marching legions and was translated into the roar of French cannon. Let us understand the fact when we propose to establish mandatories that we mean to send our armies there to impose our will upon a subject people; that if they rise we will declare martial law and with fire and sword force them into subjection. Let us have done with hyprocrisy. In place of "mandatories" let us write into this treaty that we will enter upon the business of holding in subjection people who are thousands of miles from our shores and to do so by arms, because that is what we propose to do.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to return to the theme on which I started a little while ago, that the international government that is proposed to be set up is not judicial; that it is political. I lay down the propostion again that the members of the council and of the assembly will be the political representatives of political States and be bound to serve the political interests and to obey the commands of their principals; and, second—and this I desire to enforce upon the mind of every man whose mind is open to appeal—that there is no great international question in the settlement of which all of the chief members of the league will not be gravely and, perhaps, vitally interested. Accordingly, those who assume to act as judges will be prejudiced because interested. Cursory examination of the covenant makes the proposition perfectly plain.

The league organization is to be composed of a single representative for each member State. These representatives constitute the membership of the two governing bodies, namely, the assembly and the council. Such representatives, whether acting as members of the assembly or of the council, necessarily sit not as impartial judges of controversies but as accredited agents of political powers for which they are sent to speak. They must, in the very nature of things, be governed by the interests of their respective principals.

Now, let us pause for a moment. Is there any man here who does not expect the representative of the United States to be governed by what he regards as the interests of the United States? If we sent a man there who was not governed by what he regarded as the interests of the United States, we would want to hang him when he came home, if he dared come home. If we sent a man over to this international tribunal who did not fight for the interests of the United States, we would have no representation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. In a moment. We would have nobody to speak for us; we would have nobody as our champion; nobody to look after America at all. If we expect that kind of service from our representative, will not every other country expect the same kind of service from its representative? Therefore you will not have a judicial tribunal but a tribunal of men representing the interests of their respective States; and as every nation will be interested, as I shall show, in every great international question, the tribunal does not bear the slightest resemblance to a judicial body. Now I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was going to suggest that I think it would be more accurate to say, would it not, that our representative on that tribunal will have to act in accordance with the orders issued by the man who appoints him, whether it be for the interest of the United States or not? The man who appoints him may think that certain action which he favors is for the interest of the United States, and the delegate will have nothing to do but to obey orders.

Mr. REED. I have not any doubt that that is true, and if he did not obey orders, if he differed, I suppose he would meet with the same fate exactly——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That Lansing did.

Mr. REED. That others have met with. [Laughter.] And that might or might not be a good thing.

Of course, if we had a king in this country, he might give to us a better government than we now have, but the American people are not yet prepared to yield the authority to a king; they want to keep it for themselves. Some Senators, however, are willing to yield the authority to a body of foreigners not only to control all our great international questions, but they are quibbling around about saving it by reservations that do not reserve, and most of them want to make the reservations just as mild as they can; that is, they want to get us in as far as they can. If they can not get us in the whole distance, then they insist we shall be involved as far as possible. They want to reserve as little of American rights as they can; they want to make this document just as British as they can, just as European as they can, just as dangerous as they can, but get it through in some way. So says the international banker, and so say the mild reservationists. So says the American bondholder of European bonds; so his agents have said as they have carried on this propaganda.

So the newspapers which they have established or purchased have said—and I am not making any general charge against the press, but some papers have been purchased for this purpose—and so the gentlemen who expect to speculate further in European securities have said, "Get it for us in some form; for God's sake give us something in the nature of a guaranty; if you will not guarantee everything, get the guaranty as broad as you can, but get it through quickly." And so we find a number of Senators on this side who have recently been saying that the league must go through without an amendment and that they would never vote for it except it went through unimpaired are now scurrying around trying to help pass it. No doubt all of their names are sacredly recorded in the house of Morgan. Democrats who have stood here and proclaimed their championship of the people now champion the thing that Mr. Davidson and Mr. Lamont, of the Morgan syndicate, want.

But I return to my theme. There is no international question of importance in which the judges will not be interested, for the States which they represent will be interested. Let me mention a few instances, and then I will challenge any man on this floor, mild reservationist or recently converted Democratic reservationist, to name me a single great international question where I can not make the same demonstration, namely, that an honest and disinterested decision is impossible in such a tribunal, because there is interest everywhere.

Take the Panama Canal dispute which we have already had with Great Britain. We contended for the right to send our ships through the canal free. Great Britain said we did not have a right there that she and all the rest of the world did not have. The President yielded. It was my first radical difference with him.

I said then, and I say now, that under the proper construction of the treaty, under the construction that common sense puts upon it, the country that built the canal, that protects the canal, that maintains the canal, that owns the canal, has the right to send its own ships through on whatsoever terms it pleases. But Elihu Root, who speaks as the mouthpiece of the big interests on this league to-day, Elihu Root, in whose hands the German treaty was found before it reached the United States Senate, Elihu Root, who received that treaty from the hands of the Morgan bankers before the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate was permitted to see it—Elihu Root stood on this floor and championed the cause and the contention of Great Britain, the contention which had been made by Mr. Bryce for Great Britain, and from which Senator KNOX, then Secretary of State, had compelled Bryce to recede. So we yielded and said that we would charge the same tolls to our own ships going through our own canal, between our own banks, and protected by the guns of our own fortresses, as we would charge the ships of Great Britain.

Suppose we get a President next time who has a different opinion than the present Executive, and suppose that he shall declare, or that the Congress shall declare, that the United States can send its vessels through the canal free of toll, whereas a toll will be exacted from ships under other flags. Suppose that question is protested and carried to the League of Nations. And now, sir, our nine judges of the council come forward. One is an American. One is Great Britain's representative. Each of those must stand aside, because in this controversy Great Britain is the protesting party and we are the defendant. Neither of them votes. Who does vote? Spain, Greece, France, Japan, Brazil, Belgium, Italy. Every single one of those nations has exactly the same interest Great Britain has. All of them want their vessels to go through free, just as Great Britain wants her vessels to go through free. Every judge is prejudiced by interest. Every judge is disqualified by interest. If it were a controversy in the courts of any civilized country, that interest would result in a new judge being called in; but, go where you would in the world, you could not find a disinterested judge coming from a nation that owned a single vessel plying the waters of the oceans. You can not get a disinterested tribunal out of the political representatives of nations.

Let us take another great international question. Let it involve the Suez Canal, the opening or the closing of it, the restrictions upon commerce, the dominance over it, and every nation that owns a vessel is interested in the controversy. But there are certain nations having a vital interest. France, because of her possessions in Algeria, because of her proximity to the Mediterranean; Spain, for similar reasons; indeed, all the European maritime powers are directly interested. They will seek to conserve and preserve their own interests. They can not be distinterested judges, because no man can be a disinterested judge in his own case.

Why, a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, with rules of law to govern him, with precedents to guide him, with the solemnity of his oath resting upon him, would disqualify himself in an instant if a case came before that tribunal in which he had the slightest direct interest; and if that be true of these great and reverend judges, how much more is it true of the political representatives of political States that have shown, as they have carved up the world since this war, as ruthless a disregard of human rights as the butcher exhibits when he carves up the carcass of an ox upon the block.

Let us take the question of the Dardanelles. Will there be a disinterested nation on earth represented upon this tribunal when that question comes up?

First, as to Russia: If the Dardanelles are opened, a territory twice as large as the United States, and said to be more fruitful, will be in a position for unexampled development. It is estimated that the territory I have referred to, with a direct opening to warm water, is capable of supporting a population of one thousand million people.

The Russian people are multiplying more rapidly than any other people. They have increased in the last century by approximately 80,000,000. That country, then, is vitally interested, and because it is vitally interested Great Britain and Germany and all of Europe are intensely concerned about the opening of the Dardanelles; for it is a fact that every student of history knows that one of the great influences that have kept the Dardanelles closed for a century of time has been the fear that Russia would grow into a giant so great as to menace the rest of Europe. But Roumania, Serbia, Austria, and Germany—all of the countries lying contiguous to these great waters or touching contiguous seas—are directly and immediately concerned. Even we have an interest, a disqualifying interest, for the opening of the Dardanelles will probably mean the expansion of American trade to the amount of hundreds if not thousands of millions of dollars. Like every other nation owning a fleet—and we still own one; and, please God, we will continue to own one under the American flag—we are greatly interested.

Let us take the question of freedom of the seas that has recently been forgotten. Let it be brought forward again in some form. Every nation is interested. Some are interested in one way and some in the other. We might be interested in a just rule because of our position. Great Britain might be interested in an entirely different rule because of her dominance of the waters of the seven seas. But interest, disqualifying interest, is there always and at all times.

Let us take into consideration any question involving any of the governments of Europe, where the much-talked-of balance of power is involved. That is an ever-present question, and when it arises every European nation feels that its life is involved; and we, in turn, perhaps the most nearly disinterested of any of them, nevertheless have a great interest.

Let us take the question of Shantung when it comes forward for settlement. The two countries quarreling over it, to be sure, are China and Japan; but who else is interested? Great Britain's dominance in the Orient is a question directly affected, and along with Great Britain, France has an interest; and along with both of them every country desiring a free-trade territory where it can sell its goods and where it can buy with equality of opportunity is interested.

I shall not pursue the theme, but I renew my challenge to the Senate: Name me a great international question where the tribunal is not inevitably bound to be interested and prejudiced by that interest. I pause for a reply. I also challenge the learned advocates of this league, in the Senate or out of the Senate, to name me such a question.

Therefore I point, as one of the distinguishing characteristics between the league now submitted and the league which was proposed before the war began and during the early days of the war, to the fact that they proposed a judicial tribunal to settle questions according to law and equity, whereas this is a tribunal of political representatives of political States, where the interest is certain to disqualify.

Mr. President, the very powers of the league itself are political. It creates itself by the reception or rejection of new members. It elects four of the five members of the council, and its sphere of action is not the judicial controversies that may arise between States where a question has come forward which is submitted for decision. Its sphere of action is found in these words:

It may deal with any matter affecting the peace of the world.

You may endeavor to limit that as you please by your reservations; I say to the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, that if that language remains in this instrument—

It may deal with any matter affecting the peace of the world—

It means that the league may deal with any matter with which it chooses to deal; for there is no power under high heaven, except a resort to arms, that will control the will of that body. Whenever it says that in its opinion the question affects the peace of the world, it thereby assumes jurisdiction to deal with it. It will therefore have jurisdiction over the questions embraced under the Monroe doctrine as it will over others, your reservation to the contrary notwithstanding.

It will have jurisdiction, too, of internal matters. Is not that already sufficiently plain? Let us take the case of Russia. What were the Russians doing? They had an internal disturbance. They were settling the question of internal government. Regardless of whether they were doing it our way or not, they were dealing with their own affairs. Whereupon the monarchs of Europe and of the United States and elsewhere concluded that that internal warfare in Russia involved the peace of the world, and because they so concluded, they sent in an English army, a French army, a Japanese army, and an American army. They crossed the frontiers of Russia. They began their warfare inside of Russia. They operated entirely inside of Russia, against a force of Russians fighting other Russians.

Set this power up if you dare! When you do set it up, understand that, like the Holy Alliance, it will proceed to pass its judgment upon the affairs of the nations of the world. It will interfere in internal as well as external affairs whenever its managers conclude that their interests are at stake. The minute they conclude that, they will say that the peace of the world is at stake, that the peace of the world is concerned.

But lest I forget it later on, let me call your attention to a fact that has not been much debated. After pretending that we are not going to interfere with the internal affairs of countries, what have we done?

The Austrian treaty is submitted. Read it, and you will find out that it provides that Austria shall give to her people equality of opportunity, equality in civil and religious matters, equality in the schools, and equality of all civil rights. That sum embraces all there is of human government. But they have taken an additional step; they provide that Austria must give education in their schools in the language of the several peoples. Now, what have we? Is it not a complete control of the internal affairs of that State, for that is all that government is set up for. Then, what? This Austrian treaty provides that any failure to comply with these conditions on the part of Austria shall become an international question, and shall be justiciable by the council of the League of Nations. So that you have now vested the internal control of Austria in the council of the League of Nations. Then what? After all this palaver and talk about unanimous votes, it is provided as to this matter that the majority of the council shall control. So that before you have your League of Nations, with its unanimous proposition, adopted, by these treaties that they are enacting they are giving to a part, to a mere majority of the council, a right of decision.

That is not all, sir. The same provisions are in the treaty with Poland. You may say that Austria being a conquered State, we have unusual rights there; that Poland being a State of our creation, we have unusual rights there. But the same provisions were forced into the treaties with Serbia and Roumania, two of our associates in this war, whose soil was drenched in blood and the bones of whose people make white their plains and fill their valleys.

So that we are assuming a jurisdiction by a majority of the council over the people of Austria, the people of Poland, the people of Roumania, and the people of Serbia, and this before the league covenant is even adopted, this at a time when the Senate of the United States has refused to advise and consent to its infamous terms.

How long will it take them to make more changes of similar kinds until they shall have brought the greater part of the world beneath their jurisdiction? Indeed, sirs, the method is already provided, for it is recited in the covenant of the League of Nations that the assembly may accept or reject the application of all other nations except some few smaller nations, and they must come in within a given period of time. It is provided that when the other nations do come in the assembly can name the terms and conditions upon which they come in; and lest there should be any doubt that that power is all embracing, and that it touches the very life of the States, that it involves the sovereignty of peoples, they have provided that the assembly can regulate the size of their armies, their navies, and their armaments. Therefore the league can, in the act of admission, compel these States to submit to the will of the majority of the council, or any other number specified in the articles of admission.

Thus a government of the world is being set up, not by the unanimous consent, as we have been hypocritically and falsely told, but by a majority of the council of the league. The man who does not know that Great Britain will control that council in all great international affairs is so dull of comprehension that argument would not penetrate his mind, and I refuse to make it.

Mr. President, I come to proposition 3. The American Peace Society announced as a fundamental doctrine that disputes, whether justiciable or nonjusticiable, were to be submitted only by voluntary agreement. It demanded "the creation of an international council of conciliation to employ its good offices in mediation and friendly composition of disputes of a nonjusticiable nature submitted by an agreement of the powers."

Similarly included are disputes of a justiciable nature submitted to it by the parties of their own choice.

Provision is also made for submission by agreement of justiciable disputes to a justiciable body. All this is laid down by Mr. James Brown Scott, and is a part of the 10 precepts which I introduced into the RECORD in the early part of my remarks.

It will be observed that in no case was it proposed that the organization should assume jurisdiction of any controversy unless voluntarily submitted by the parties in interest.

In direct opposition to the principle thus announced, the League of Nations assumes, as of right, a jurisdiction over every international controversy.

Articles 3 and 4 declare in identical language that the assembly and council will deal with any matter affecting the peace of the world.

Article 10 I will not quote because Senators are so familiar with it.

Article 11 holds that in case of war or threat of war, whether affecting any member of the league or not, the league may take any action that it may deem wise.

Article 15 expressly states that in case of any dispute between members of the league likely to lead to rupture, which is not submitted to arbitration, any party may force a submission to the council by merely giving notice to the secretary general. Any party to a dispute may cause it to be referred to the assembly upon mere request.

Article 16 seeks to control the independent action of any member of the league by providing that in case of resort to war in violation of articles 12, 13, or 15, the nation shall, ipso facto, be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, who thereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, and the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of all other States, whether members of the league or not.

Article 17 caps the climax by the provision that in—the event of a dispute between a member of the league and a nonmember, or wholly between nonmember States, the council may take such measures and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities and will result in the settlement of the dispute.

Ah, let me put it to these gentlemen who say the council has no right to make war, that the league has no right to make war. Whether they do or not, they have a right to demand that the States back them with whatever power is necessary to do what? Article 17 provides—besides I have shown an international army is contemplated—

The council may take such measures and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities.

How are you going to prevent hostilities if nations refuse to take your recommendations except by an army and a navy? You must have, as President Wilson said, force. Force is there. It is the thing that all the British statesmen have said is necessary, the thing that all the quotations I have given bear me out in saying is the very heart and soul of this enterprise—force.

The council shall take such measures as will prevent hostilities.

What does that mean? This whole instrument is drawn in that soft phraseology calculated to deceive. That was well exposed by Mr. Keynes in his book. There is no better illustration than this: "They shall take such action as will prevent hostilities." But that action consists in the summoning of an overwhelming military force.

In other words, you preserve the peace by conquering the country that has offended against the will of the league. That is all there is to it. Let us have done with this knavish attempt to deceive the people by soft phrases.

By the language I have just read from article 17 and the other articles there is asserted a general jurisdiction over the world to be gained, not by the voluntary consent of nations but by the assertion of a right of jurisdiction, all to be backed by the immense power of the league. How complete is the diversity of such a plan from the one submitted by the American Peace Society, which, I repeat, was that a judicial tribunal governed by law should be created to which the nations would voluntarily submit their disputes.

Now I come to proposition 6 of the American Peace Society. The American Peace Society said that in the organization to be created no nation shall take as of right a preponderating part. They saw that some nation would want to control; they looked ahead and saw that unless there was a safeguard some great power would insist upon dominating the league. But the league covenant violates the principle in several ways.

It gives to the five great nations permanent seats in the council. Of the other 27 nations, only 4 can be represented in the council at all, and those must be from time to time elected. At all times 23 nations are without representation on the council. They have neither voice nor vote, yet their interests may be considered and decided by that body.

The British Empire is permitted "as of right a preponderating part." Who shall say that when the Empire is allowed a vote for the mother country, Great Britain, and a vote each for Australia, Canada, New Zealand, South Africa, and the conquered empire of India, it is not allowed "as of right a preponderating power"?

Besides the six votes thus obtained, the Empire absolutely controls the vote of Hedjaz, whose King is in its pay; of Persia, the possession of which the Empire has recently taken; of Siam, now completely within its dominance; of Portugal, long its pawn; of Greece, largely its creation and dependent upon it for existence; of Belgium, which it helped set up as a buffer State and which is helpless without British support. Even France must look to the British Navy and British Army for defense.

The league is clearly dominated throughout by Great Britain. Her colonies may be elected members of the council even while the Empire occupies a permanent seat on that body.

The votes she thus controls can prevent an effective decision by the assembly ever being rendered against the British Empire.

The plan of the American Peace Society was builded upon the idea of nationalism. At no point did it contemplate the surrender by any State of its sovereignty. The league assumes a complete supersovereignty over nonmember States. It impairs and nullifies the sovereignty of member States and is violative of the Constitution of the United States.

I have in the preceding remarks, I think, demonstrated that the league assumes practically complete jurisdiction over matters international. Supreme jurisdiction can not exist in two bodies at the same time. What the league gains in power the States must lose. A State which has surrendered the power to control its dealings with other States of the world can no longer pretend to sovereignty. The right of self-determination is the very soul of sovereignty. The right of a State to stand ready always and without limitation by outside authority to defend itself against attack, aggression, or wrong is an essential of sovereignty. The right of defense, of course, implies the right to possess and control the instrumentalities of defense; that is, to create armies and navies and armaments. The transfer of the control of that right is a surrender of sovereignty. The body to which such a power is transferred holds over the surrendering States the authority of life and death. This does not mean that States may not by mutual agreement consent to reduce their armament, for that is the exercise of their sovereign power. The distinction is between a voluntary agreement among independent States, from which they may withdraw at will, and the transfer of authority or control to an outside body. In the one instance a State continues to act for itself. In the other it has lost the right to act for itself.

Recognizing the overmastering importance of the distinction just pointed out, and in an endeavor to mask the designs of its authors, the league covenant is made to provide that the council shall recommend to the various nations the kind of armaments each may possess. If the proposition ended at this point, sovereignty would not be surrendered, but the covenant further provides that once the States have accepted the recommendation they can not thereafter, without the consent of the council manifested by a unanimous vote, increase their armament in the slightest degree. Thus, as soon as the States take the practical step necessary to carry out the recommendations of the league, they forever forfeit and lose the right to increase their armies and navies and their armaments by a single soldier, a single ship, or a single gun. Their rights as sovereigns have been bargained away.

The power of each to create an army in accordance with its necessities and desires is no longer invested in the State, but in the superior authority of the council.

The power thus sought to be granted is directly in the teeth of the Constitution of the United States, which expressly provides that Congress shall have the power to "provide for the common defense," "to raise armies and navies," "to declare war," a power which in its very nature is unlimited, but which is entirely emasculated once the authority to limit the size of the Army or Navy has been transferred to the League of Nations.

These powers reserved by the Constitution to Congress are continuing in their nature. The President and Senate can not impair them by treaty without violating their oaths of office. The entire Congress and the President acting in unison can not take them away from a subsequent President and Congress. They can not, in fact, so far surrender them as to bind even themselves for a single hour.

At this point we are met with the singular argument "that we need not be concerned about these clauses of the league because the Congress and the President are powerless to surrender these great constitutional rights." That is to say, we are asked to sign a document which violates the Constitution and to excuse ourselves by the miserable plea that while we seek to destroy the Constitution we are powerless to do so. That sort of argument could be made in favor of every law and of every act of government which ignores the Constitution. Yet it has been made on this floor by Senators who are now conspicuously absent, as they generally are when an argument is being made on a question of this kind.

Senators who have claimed to be lawyers have said "that it is proper for us to enter into an agreement by which the rights of the United States to control the size of its Army should be granted away, because we can not under the Constitution grant them away." That is to say, if a thing is unconstitutional, you can not do it anyway, and therefore you have a right to go ahead and try to do it. Well, if we have statesmen of that kind, then God was kind to us when he gave us forefathers who wrote a Constitution which they are powerless to destroy. But a man who will stand on the floor of the Senate and seriously make that argument is a disgrace to the Senate and to the country under whose flag he lives. We might as well have some plain talk. A man who will say, "Go on and sign a document which by its words impinges upon the Constitution of the United States," and as you sign it say to yourself, "Well, although I seek to violate the Constitution I can not, and therefore I will do this thing." The man who will do that, I repeat, is a disgrace to the American Senate and violates his own oath of office, for instead of protecting and defending the Constitution he seeks to strike it down and violate it, and he acts in a manner that would put "Punic faith" to shame.

If he regards the Constitution as prohibiting these things and intends to fall back upon it, then he ought to say to the man with whom he is dealing, "We will not sign this, because it impinges upon our Constitution." He can not wait until the bargain is made and relied upon, and then say, "True, I signed, but behold I did not have authority." Why, the crookedest agent that ever engaged in the business of dickering is ashamed to sign a document which he expects his principal to repudiate. The crookedest principal who ever got into courts of equity charged with fraud reluctantly pleads want of authority in an agent. For a great sovereign State, that has been proud of its character, proud of its honesty, proud of its unsullied name, to sign a contract agreeing to do a thing that the Constitution of the United States says its Representatives can not do, and even when signing to have a secret intent that it will fall back upon a limitation of authority, is for that State to step from its proud position among the nations of the world into the filth of trickery and into the debauchery of fraud.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to ask the Senator, for my information, if his remarks just made have to do with that particular phase of the League of Nations covenant which deals with the plan to reduce armaments?

Mr. REED. They do, in part. I thought I made that very plain.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I caught the Senator's remarks to be that it had been argued on the floor by some of the sponsors for the league that we could safely sign an obligation that transfers to the League of Nations the apparent right to regulate the size of our Army and Navy, and offer as a justification for doing so that we had no authority, under the Constitution, to delegate that power. Is that the point the Senator makes?

Mr. REED. That is substantially it, although I prefer stating it in my own language.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Would the Senator be kind enough merely to let me have his idea? I did not catch it clearly.

Mr. REED. Certainly. I said, with all the clearness of which I was capable, that when the League of Nations recommends the size of our Army we are not obliged by the terms of the instrument to accept that recommendation, but that, if we comply with the spirit of the instrument, we shall accept the recommendation, and that once the nations have agreed to accept the recommendation, then, by the express terms of the instrument, they can not increase their armies or their navies without the consent of the council. That is what I said and that is what I maintain is true.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If that be true, then may I ask the Senator will the situation not be that the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of its independent judgment, has legislated in a constitutional way upon a question which the Constitution places in its custody?

Mr. REED. Absolutely not. The Constitution of the United States by no line gives to the Congress of the United States the power to delegate to any foreign body the powers that are vested by the people in the Congress.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator to state that I entirely agree with that proposition?

Mr. REED. Very well. Now, let us state what the proposition is. At the present moment the Congress of the United States can increase the size of the Army of the United States at will. The League of Nations is formed; the council of the League of Nations recommends the size of the armaments for the various nations, and fixes the size of the American Army at 100,000 men. Still we are free to act. But now the Congress proceeds to agree to the recommendation. Then what is the status? Then the Congress can not, without violating the national faith, increase the Army until it gets the consent of a body of eight foreigners, representing eight foreign Governments; so that Congress has granted away, by the terms of the instrument, the power to increase the Army of the United States as the Congress sees fit and has transferred that power to eight foreign gentlemen sitting at Geneva, or, it appears now, in London, for they got to London very quickly.

Mr. KNOX rose.

Mr. REED. In just one moment, if the Senator please. Now, the answer made to that proposition is that Congress is powerless to make such a grant, because the Constitution still exists, and under it the Congress can proceed, notwithstanding the contract. But we have agreed that we will not increase our Army; we have entered into a compact that we will not increase our Army; we have entered into a compact to yield the power of Congress to a foreign body; and the miserable defense offered is that it is all right to try to make such an agreement because the Constitution forbids us to make it. Now, I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I wanted to ask the Senator from Missouri if he could not safely go a step further and say that not only is it unconstitutional to undertake to delegate the power of Congress to fix the size of the Army and the Navy to a foreign body, and thereby put it in a cast-iron mold, so that it can neither be increased nor diminished, but that one Congress can not bind another Congress in that respect?

Mr. REED. I have made that remark; and I went a little further and stated that an existing Congress can not bind itself. If we made this contract to-day and solemnly signed it, if to-morrow we saw fit to increase the size of our Army, under the Constitution we would have the power to do so; but with what would we be confronted? A solemn agreement involving the integrity of this country, with the penalty that the great world power we have set up would probably mass its armies and its navies against us for daring to employ the powers that the fathers said the people should always exercise through their representatives in Congress. Yet we have listened to that argument on this floor! I would have been ashamed when I was a boy to have made it to a country justice of the peace, where it is an understood thing that you are to win your case by rough-and-tumble methods, awaiting the decision of the superior court on all questions of law and equity.

Senators have printed speeches containing this infamous doctrine and sent it out to their people as though they were proud of it.

Mr. President, I have referred in the preceding remarks to the principle advocated by the American Peace Society, not because it was the only organization advocating the principles referred to but on account of its activity and importance. It is proper to add that the principles by it advanced were those which have been upon the tongues and pens of distinguished men of this and other countries for many years. They were the principles sought to be wrought in agreement at The Hague convention, where the foundations were laid for their ultimate acceptance. Scarcely a modern writer of note or recognized thinker ever went beyond these principles up to the very time the President departed for Europe. From all that was said prior to the closing of the doors of the peace conference, when the doctrine of "open covenants openly arrived at" was supplanted by the policy of "secret agreements secretly arrived at," the public had a right to believe, and did believe, that the fundamental principles of the league would be in accordance with these well-known and long-advocated policies; but, while the people asked for and expected bread, they were given a stone; they asked for fish and were given a serpent; and they are now smilingly assured that the serpent is in fact fish and the stone an excellent quality of bread. However, the people are beginning to examine and to learn the truth; they are finding out, if I may employ the vernacular, that somebody "switched the cards."

I dislike to employ on the floor of the Senate the illustration, and yet it seems to me apropos at this moment. A number of important business men in the city of New York, so the papers tell us, were in the habit of meeting and indulging in a friendly game of poker. They expected to pass the time away; they thought they were playing with honest cards and with honest men, the object was amusement; but a crook got into the game. After he had relieved them of about $300,000, they discovered that he was employing marked cards, and that the game which had been entered upon for amusement had become a gambler's robbing proposition. So this enterprise of an assemblage of nations to rewrite or to enlarge international law and to decide controversies submitted by mutual consent of nations to a judicial body became in the end a device for the government of the world, that government in the last analysis to be controlled by one great power. Instead of a judicial body we have substituted a political body, responding not to the principles of law, governed not by the rules of equity, but by the political exigencies and ambitions of great States.

It is time that we cease closing our eyes to the plain truth. This League of Nations is not a democracy of nations, for in the council of the league 23 out of the 32 States are absolutely disfranchised. It is not a democracy of nations, because, even in the council, five nations sit permanently, and four nations are represented only so long as they are able to get their representatives elected; and that will depend upon their subservience to the five great States. He is indeed deaf to the warning of reason who does not know that this is, after all, a quintuple alliance for the control of the world. Outside of the five great powers, who will be heard, whose voice will be potential, whose rights will be considered, save as the question affects the five great powers? And among the five who is the chief beneficiary as well as the chief manager? Is it not that country whose flag floats over one-quarter of the habitable world? Is it not that country whose ships ride the waters of every ocean? Is it not that country "whose drum-beat" not alone "follows the sun in its course and keeps company with the stars" but extends its music from the Arctic to the Antarctic, and whose proud banner floats over the islands of every sea?

Is it not that country that in disregard of human rights, the right of self-determination, has placed the iron heel of its power upon the breasts of 400,000,000 protesting human beings, that holds under the thralldom of eleven hundred of its agents 325,000,000 people of India, that has gained every foot of that vast land by fire and by sword, that holds Egypt by the combined forces of chicanery, treachery, and arms, that gained Persia by the typical diplomacy of a country which never yet has failed to plant her flag wherever there was a defenseless people, that in the late war added 3,000,000 square miles to its territory, and brought under her dominance nearly 50,000,000 protesting, helpless people? Is she not to be the dominating force, and are we not to be the contributors of men and money?

I have no enmity for the British people. I am compelled to admire their ability. I say now, however, that a partnership between an altruistic country like ours, which does not want to impose its will upon a weak or conquered people, but rather seeks their liberation, their freedom, their independence—a partnership between a country actuated by such motives as those which have inspired us and a people numbering less than 60,000,000, who have imposed their will and their power on over 400,000,000 people, is impossible.

We are told that we must not speak ill of Great Britain. I do not. I admire the genius of her people; but, as God is my judge, I can not admire the policy which caused a nation to send its soldiers to South Africa to crush the free people who had established republics there; which caused a people to plant its flag in India, and then, by dint of superior arms and superior courage, to conquer first one province and then another, one prince and then another, until at last 325,000,000 unwilling, heartbroken people were compelled to obey the imperial will of a Government thousands of miles away.

I can not give my sanction to those policies of government which caused Great Britain to declare, when she first assumed a dominance in Egypt, that she proposed only to protect those people temporarily and then to withdraw, leaving them full liberty of action, only to suddenly grasp with the hand of power the government of that people and force into prison her representatives that came asking for a mere hearing before the representatives of the nations assembled at the peace conference. I can not give my sanction to the policies of that Government which, while this war was in progress, while Chinese laborers were digging trenches beneath the deadly fire of German guns, was secretly bargaining with Japan to turn over to her the chiefest Province of China, with 36,000,000 indignant Chinamen as thralls of their ancient enemy, Japan. I can not give my sanction, sir, to the policies pursued for many years by Great Britain and which were outlined by a great orator in an oration delivered a half century ago, when he described the British method. I think I can quote his language:

A shipwrecked sailor lands upon an unknown coast and begs for a bed at night. The next morning he asks permission to build a hut, the next day to plow a furrow and to plant a field; but the next day the hut has become a fortress and the furrow a trench over which floats forever the flag of Great Britain. The policy of the British Empire is the policy which was employed by imperial Rome. Intelligent men should look the facts in the face.

They talked of a league of nations, and disarmament, and freedom of the seas; but British statesmen said: "We will never give up a British ship. The freedom of the seas is already secure. It is already England's."

They talk about British fairness, and I will do nothing here to create discord between countries, but I can not forget our own history. While we are speaking of the Monroe doctrine, I can not forget that as late as the Venezuela controversy Lord Salisbury declared that there was no such thing known in international law as the Monroe doctrine and utterly repudiated it. I can not forget that in a British white paper, the official Government document, British statesmen are already preparing to cut the ground from under even the Lodge Monroe doctrine reservation.

Let me read:

The origin of the Monroe doctrine is well known. It was proclaimed in 1823 to prevent America becoming a theater for the intrigues of European absolutism. At first a principle of American foreign policy, it has become an international understanding—

Over England's protest, as I have shown to you—

And it is not illegitimate for the people of the United States to ask that the covenant should recognize this fact.

An international understanding, not a principle of international law.

In its essence it is consistent with the spirit of the covenant, and, indeed, the principles of the league as expressed in article 10 represent the extension to the whole world of the principle of the Monroe doctrine——

I am tired of hearing that piece of balderdash; but, now, listen to these words:

While, should any dispute as to the meaning of the Monroe doctrine ever arise between America and European powers, the league is there to settle it.

Should we say "the Monroe doctrine" applies, the league is there to decide whether it applies or not. In the reservation, it is true, we say, "We propose to settle that question for ourselves." Ah, but there are two parties to the settlement business, and, says this English official paper, "the league is there to decide"! Now, if we adopt the reservation it is true we will have said that we will settle it for ourselves; but, at the same time that we assert that, the question still remains to be determined, "Does the proposition come within the Monroe doctrine or not?" This supreme tribunal of the world assumes, and will assume, the jurisdiction to say.

Ex necessitate, that is the result. I will give you a very direct illustration. Suppose we were to say in a controversy over a question purely European, "Well, it is under the Monroe doctrine, and we are going ourselves to decide it." Of course, the league would not permit that, and properly it would so say. But the illustration points to the fact that somebody has to decide whether a question comes under the Monroe doctrine. That power is not vested in us alone, it can not be vested in us alone by the mere recitation in any instrument.

There is but one safe course for us to pursue, and that is to remain free from the entanglements of European alliances, to remain free from the worse entanglements of a world power, to which when we enter we surrender our right to govern ourselves.

Why should we make that surrender? "Behold, I show you a mystery." The debates have gone on for eight months, and not a living man on the floor of the Senate has had the temerity to say that we are entering this League of Nations for the benefit of America. No man has pointed out where it will save the life of an American boy or the expenditure of a dollar of American money. No man has dared claim that, standing within our seagirt shores, we can not defend ourselves. No man has dared to claim that we are menaced.

Why, then, are we asked to enter this abominable thing? The President gave the keynote. He is an idealist; that is what they call him. When he was going over to Europe he said it was "our duty to sacrifice," and that now was "the moment of supreme sacrifice," "to sacrifice for the benefit of the people of the Old World." It was not something to be mutually beneficial; it was not something to conserve our interests or protect our civilization. It was our duty to go there and sacrifice. He said that the American individually might be selfish, but that the American in the aggregate was longing for the opportunity to sacrifice himself. That is to say, if you add together 110,000,000 selfish individuals you get a grand aggregate of sacrifice and unselfishness. That is the kind of logic we have been hearing.

But, granting that there was a different meaning, and that perhaps my criticism may seem a little harsh, nevertheless the fact is that we were going, as he said, to sacrifice. What is that sacrifice to be? The sacrifice is to be that we will send our troops abroad to help police Europe; that we will send our boys to Asia and Africa to help suppress the people of those countries; that we will spend our money and maintain a vast Army and Navy for the purpose of producing peace in Europe. That is for the purpose of imposing the will of this quintuple alliance upon the rest of the world. That is, to put it brutally, for the purpose of guaranteeing Great Britain and France in their war loot. For these purposes we are to sacrifice.

I want some constitutional lawyer on the Democratic side of the Chamber to point me to the clause of the Constitution that gives us the right to levy a dollar of taxation for the benefit of a European or Asiatic country. I want some constitutional lawyer to point me to the authority in the Constitution for the United States to levy an army, to call forth our sons and send them forth to be sacrificed in the battles of other nations, for the benefit of other nations. I want to know where you got the authority to vote that the son of an American citizen can be drafted and taken from his home and sent to die in the wars of Europe, not for the benefit of America, but in sacrifice for the benefit of European countries. Where is your authority? Where is the clause in the Constitution?

To send our troops there to defend ourselves, making the battle there rather than here, is one thing. To send them there to punish an enemy that has impinged upon our rights is one thing. But to send them over to Europe to fight for the benefit of a particular country is in the teeth of the Constitution. Where do you get the right to sacrifice the boy on the farm? Who sent you here as the high priest to strap upon the altar some mother's boy and to cut his throat with the bloody knife of sacrifice? Where do you get that right? Where is your warrant of authority to spend a dollar of the people's money or a drop of their blood for the benefit of Europe?

Oh, you idealists, you idealists, who stand, as you preach your idealism, with your brutal feet upon the Constitution of the fathers, trampling upon the sacred rights of our own people, proclaiming with your mouth your desire to sacrifice. But it is not your blood which will be shed; it is the blood of boys who have no voice in this assemblage. It is not your money that will be spent; it is the money of the people of this land. It is not your eyes that will run rivers of tears. The tears will stream from the eyes of American mothers when some day in the future American boys are lined up upon the battle fields of the world to be sacrificed.

While I am discussing this question of sacrifice let me appeal, if I may, a little further to your common sense. Who made us a ruler and a judge over the earth? How do we know, when we go forth to sacrifice, that we may not be sacrificing on the wrong side? How do we know that the League of Nations is going to decide all questions righteously? How do we know that we may not be the instruments of European trickery and chicanery? After all, what is there to these European conflicts which have lasted for 10 centuries of time? Who is to blame? I say that if you will trace the roots far down you will find no particular race or nation to blame. If you will trace them far enough down—and I am speaking of the whole broad field—you will find out that if you could remove the ambition of about four ruling houses there would not be much war left in Europe. When England, under Beaconsfield, set out upon her vast career of militarism, when she added "Empress of India" to the title of the Queen, when her navies began to circumnavigate the earth and her armies to advance in every clime, she aroused the fears and the ambition of other ruling houses, cousins of the blood, and twice of the blood.

So Germany started out upon her career of militarism, and France reached for northern Africa. Russia was pressing down in what has always seemed to be the most justifiable of all these movements in an effort to secure a way to warm water for her commerce.

Italy was not content. She was also reaching out for other lands, and out of this clash of interests come trouble and danger for Europe. Out of similar causes trouble will come in the future. Are we to become the victims and the sacrificial offering in such disputes?

Let me warn you, Senators, of what will happen. If we keep out, if we say to these countries, "You must guard your own affairs," there will be something of the spirit of compromise manifested, and the likelihood of a long period of peace is ahead. But if we place ourselves in a position where we must back European powers, the result may be that these powers will increase their demands and arrogance until war will be inevitable. The best way to have a world war is to make certain of the European powers feel that they can call on the United States whenever they please and that we must come. The best way to preserve peace is to let European governors and monarchs, of whatsoever name, know that if they start a war they will have to settle it themselves.

This is the very bed of war. The highest assurance of war is for a few nations to try to control the rest of the earth. Fifty-seven million more white men are outside of this league than are in it. We have incurred the enmity of Russia without cause or reason. We have incurred the ill will of Germany, of course. For a very good cause and very good reason we incurred that; but we have it.

We have not gained the good will in a substantial way of any country on this earth, in my opinion. Italy is obliterating the name of Wilson from her statues and taking it down from her street signs. I do not say that in criticism of the President. It shows how quickly the pendulum of foreign public opinion can swing when it does not get all it wants. If we do not send them food in unlimited quantities, they will curse us for unkindness. If we send them food in unlimited quantities, they will regard it as an obligation to be repeated in the future and, as has been suggested, some of them will not begin work very soon.

Washington's Birthday has just passed. Is it not a good time to rebaptize ourselves in the spirit of the fathers? Is it not time to return to real idealism, the ideal of remaining an independent Republic, the ideal of remaining the freest people on earth, the ideal of maintaining America so clean and strong and great that her very example will aid other nations to achieve a better civilization?

Is that not our highest duty?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that we may have a vote now on the pending reservation, No. 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to reservation No. 3.

Mr. KING. Let the reservation be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Reservation No. 3, proposed from the Committee on Foreign Relations, is as follows:

3. No mandate shall be accepted by the United States under article 22, part 1, or any other provision of the treaty of peace with Germany, except by action of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Chamberlain	Dial	Elkins
Calder	Colt	Dillingham	Fernald
Capper	Cummins	Edge	Fletcher
France	Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Sheppard
Gay	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Simmons
Glass	Kellogg	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Gore	Kendrick	New	Smoot
Gronna	Kenyon	Norris	Spencer
Hale	Keyes	Nugent	Sterling
Harding	King	Page	Sutherland
Harris	Kirby	Phelan	Thomas
Harrison	Knox	Phipps	Wadsworth
Henderson	Lenroot	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Hitchcock	Lodge	Ransdell	Wolcott
Johnson, S. Dak.	McKellar	Reed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Reservation No. 3, on mandatories, is pending. I ask that the vote be taken by yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the demand seconded?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So far as I know there is no need for any vote by yeas and nays upon this particular reservation.

Mr. LODGE. I think we had better have a yea-and-nay vote on every reservation.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The opinion on this side of the aisle is that it clearly represents the meaning of the league provisions, and on that account there is no disposition, so far as I know, upon this side of the Chamber to oppose the reservation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I merely desire to say in explanation of the vote I shall give against this reservation that I have not the slightest objection to it except that, in my judgment, it is entirely unnecessary. I can not understand how the United States could ever become a mandatory except through an act of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I promised to take care of him by a pair during his absence, but in view of the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] with reference to the attitude of the other side of the Chamber on this reservation, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness. On this vote he is paired by a transfer with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. If present, the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is absent. I am informed, however, that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HENDERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I did not notice that he is not present. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I have reason to think that if present he would vote "yea," and therefore I let my vote stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is not present. I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who is not in the Chamber. I transfer my pair to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the affirmative). I note the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a pair. I am authorized to transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. REED. I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], but I am informed that if present he would vote on this proposition as I shall vote, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote in his absence. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] are unavoidably absent on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The result was announced—yeas 68, nays 4, as follows:

So reservation No. 3, reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, was agreed to, as follows:

3. No mandate shall be accepted by the United States under article 22, part 1, or any other provision of the treaty of peace with Germany, except by action of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in reservation No. 4, line 15, before the word "commerce," I move to insert the word "internal."

Mr. BORAH. We are now considering reservation No. 4, as I understand?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. That reservation as proposed to be amended reads in part:

4. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, tariff, internal commerce—

We have already provided, preceding the words "internal comerce," that "all * * * questions relating wholly or in part to internal affairs" shall be reserved to the United States to decide for itself. Does not external commerce or international commerce relate partly to internal affairs?

Mr. LODGE. I suppose foreign commerce does not come strictly within internal affairs.

Mr. BORAH. It does not come strictly within internal affairs, but it certainly relates, in part, to internal affairs. You can not say that it is wholly dissociated and separate from internal affairs.

Mr. LODGE. It could certainly be decided by the United States under this reservation to be within its domestic jurisdiction.

Mr. BORAH. Which—foreign commerce?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Then what is the necessity of inserting the word "internal" if it covers foreign also?

Mr. LODGE. It was suggested because it was thought by some that the reservation was thereby made more accurate and clearer.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it does make it more accurate. If the other portion of the reservation covers foreign commerce, then to insert the word "internal" before "commerce" would be a construction ourselves to the effect that we did not intend to include foreign commerce, would it not?

Mr. LODGE. No; I should not judge it in that way. The remainder of the reservation is so sweeping I think foreign commerce, so far as it relates to our internal affairs, is included within the language. I will say frankly to the Senator from Idaho that the suggested amendment originated with Senators on the other side of the Chamber at the time of the bipartisan conference. It did not seem to me a very important change, and I had no objection to assenting to it, but I do not feel very well able to defend it, I will admit.

Mr. BORAH. I really think it creates an ambiguity and a contradiction in the reservation. I myself would rather, if I were interested in the reservation, see the reservation read that—

The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Then there would be no question that all internal questions are within its jurisdiction, and we should not take the chance of naming some and thereby, by implication, excluding others.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator that the whole clause beginning with the word "including" is superfluous, and I thought so from the beginning.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, does the Senator say he would favor an amendment striking out that clause?

Mr. BORAH. If I should be compelled to decide between the clause as it is, with "internal commerce" in it or out of it. I think I would prefer to have it stricken out, because there is undoubtedly a contradiction there. When you undertake to include by a general clause all commerce, foreign and internal, and then afterwards specifically name internal commerce, you put your own construction upon your reservation, indicating that you do not intend to include foreign commerce.

Mr. LENROOT. It goes back, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. To the question of whether or not foreign commerce is a domestic question.

Mr. BORAH. But the reservation does not say that; it says "that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs." There can be no possible doubt that foreign commerce relates "in part" to internal affairs.

Mr. LENROOT. It may; but unless it is either a domestic or a political question it would not be covered.

Mr. BORAH. It is domestic in so far as it concerns us.

Mr. LENROOT. I mean, in international law, is foreign commerce a domestic question or an international question?

Mr. BORAH. It relates "in part" to our domestic concerns.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not seem to get my point. Whether or not it relates in part to our domestic concerns, it is only domestic and political questions relating to our own internal affairs that we reserve the right to decide for ourselves. So if foreign commerce is neither a domestic question nor a political question, it would not be covered, in any event.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he understands this reservation, either as now drawn or as proposed, to reserve our foreign commerce from the jurisdiction of the league?

Mr. LENROOT. It is my understanding that under this reservation, if foreign commerce be an international question—and in most cases it is—it would not be affected by this reservation, because all this reservation purports to do is to reserve to ourselves the right to decide what are domestic questions under the league.

Mr. REED. Then, if the United States does not have the right after entering the league to decide any question relating to our foreign commerce, who does have that right?

Mr. LENROOT. The question of the reservation is this——

Mr. REED. I ask the question for information.

Mr. LENROOT. I am going to answer the question. If foreign commerce is a domestic question, no dispute arising out of foreign commerce could come under the jurisdiction of the league. If the foreign commerce out of which a dispute arises is not a domestic question, the league would have jurisdiction over it; but we are to decide whether or not it is a domestic question.

Mr. REED. And the Senator's view, as I understood from his colloquy with the Senator from Idaho, is that a question affecting foreign commerce necessarily can not be a domestic question within the meaning of this reservation, and, therefore, all questions of foreign commerce will be decided by the league.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not say that. I can conceive that a question that would come under the term "foreign commerce," affecting our own exports from our own country, for instance, might be a domestic question; but supposing a question arises as to the entry of our commerce into Germany, and a dispute grows out of it, Germany refusing to give us the same treatment with reference to our commerce that she gives to other commerce under the "favored nations" clause, I would not say that that was a domestic question; a dispute over that kind of a question, I would say, would come under the jurisdiction of the league, and, of course, the Senator knows that half the wars of the world have arisen, directly or indirectly, over questions of commerce.

Mr. REED. I still can not quite understand the Senator's position, and I am not trying to be captious at all. Of course, every nation which has a foreign commerce necessarily has a domestic end to the foreign commerce. It either originates in the domestic markets of the country or it terminates there, so that in that sense every question of foreign commerce is domestic. But while that, therefore, can not be what we mean by "foreign commerce," I want to know from the Senator whether it is his understanding that under the league covenant, after the reservation has been adopted, the jurisdiction to decide a controversy over foreign commerce is taken away from the United States and vested in some other tribunal; and if so, what that tribunal is?

Mr. LENROOT. In reply I would say that it is not taken away from the United States and vested in a foreign tribunal in any case where the United States under international law would be the sole judge of the subject; but if it is a dispute that might arise over international law, and it is an international question and not a domestic one, the league would have jurisdiction.

Mr. REED. But, if the Senator please, there can be no dispute in which any nation is the sole judge for both parties. In every international dispute at present, however, we can be the sole judge as to our own rights; we can proceed to try to gain those rights in whatever way we please. But after we have adopted this instrument with this reservation the right of the United States to decide the question for itself as to its own rights will be taken away and will be vested in some tribunal, will it not?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think the Senator means to go as far as he indicates, because international law very well recognizes the right of a nation to decide for itself many questions, although they may affect another nation—for instance, questions like immigration. International law well recognizes the right of one nation to regulate its own immigration, although another nation from whom the immigrants come is directly affected; and that is exactly this kind of a question.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; but that is not the kind of a case I am talking about at all, because that question has always been held to be a domestic question. I am talking about the ordinary international question that comes up and is ordinarily regarded as an international question. At the present time, if the United States has a dispute, we will for ourselves decide our course of action. After we have signed the League of Nations covenant with this reservation, will we have that right of deciding our course of action for ourselves or will that course of action be determined by another body; and if so, what body?

Mr. LENROOT. If it is a domestic question, we have that right, and under the reservation we will be the sole judge of whether or not it is a domestic question.

Mr. REED. Suppose it is not?

Mr. BORAH. If that is true, there is no occasion in the world for putting "internal" in this clause.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho made a suggestion about striking out all of those words. I admit that they are not absolutely necessary, but I do think it is important that immigration and labor should both be mentioned by name, so that there can be no mistake. I think the same consideration applies to coastwise traffic and the tariff. They are not necessary, because the words "all domestic and political questions" cover them, but "immigration" was put in there because it was desired to make it perfectly clear that that question was wholly reserved.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho if the first two lines of this reservation do not secure complete protection to the United States, assuming that it is difficult to decide what questions are domestic and what are international? Now, the reservation reads:

> The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction.

That makes the United States the sole judge of what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction, does it not?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; quite so. If you stop with the first two lines, the Senator is correct; but when you go on and modify it, and construe it yourself, and name certain questions which come under it, the rule of construction, as I understand it, is that it permits no others to be considered.

Mr. COLT. I entirely agree, as a matter of construction, to the proposition of the Senator from Idaho, and that if you express in general terms what those questions are you weaken the reservation by undertaking to mention particular ones.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is true.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should just like to make a suggestion in reply to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I do not understand that any league or arbitral tribunal has any jurisdiction over American foreign commerce unless that commerce is regulated by a treaty or some principle of international law. The league can not decide with what foreign countries we shall have foreign commerce. It is for this country and the country with which we have that commerce to decide that, unless there is some regulation on the subject in a treaty or in international law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, no later than yesterday, according to press reports, the council of the League of Nations was proceeding to Russia for the purpose of adjusting the commercial relations between Russia and the Allies. It is naming a commission and going there for the purpose of rehabilitating the trade relations between Russia and Great Britain and France. Now, I think as a cold matter of technical law what the Senator from Minnesota says would be true; but he must remember that we are dealing with a political body—to wit, the council of the league—that it decides for itself what its jurisdiction is, and that there is no appeal from its decision to any other body in the world.

Now, Mr. President, there is another clause here to which I should like to call attention. The Senator is going to strike out "and all other domestic questions."

Mr. LODGE. That is mere repetition.

Mr. BORAH. It would be repetition if you had not named these specific subjects; but the Senator knows that when you put into a statute the specification that it is confined in its jurisdiction to the subjects specified, the general clauses do not define its jurisdiction.

Mr. LODGE. The way it is now it reads, "all domestic and political questions * * * and all other domestic questions." The other is merely parenthetical.

Mr. BORAH. But you say here "including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, tariff, internal commerce," and so forth, naming them, and then you say "and all other domestic questions."

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but it reads "all domestic and political questions * * * including * * * all other domestic questions." That is the way it reads.

Mr. BORAH. It is a repetition of the first two lines?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. Leaving out the list, it reads "all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including * * * all other domestic questions."

Mr. BORAH. Yes; precisely. If it read that way, then "all other domestic questions" should come out; but when you proceed in two lines to name specific subjects and then strike out "and all other domestic questions," the construction which a court would place on it—Heaven only knows what construction the council of the League of Nations would put upon it—would be that the particular questions named are the only ones which are excluded from the jurisdiction of the council.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; the Senator does not mean that.

Mr. BORAH. I do mean that.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator mean that when you say "all domestic questions, including" certain ones, a court would exclude every other question?

Mr. BORAH. You put your own construction upon it when you say "all domestic questions, including"; and when you say "internal commerce," the construction of any court in the world would be that you did not mean to include foreign commerce.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator says nothing would be included except those subjects specified. He does not mean that.

Mr. BORAH. I do mean that if you put it in the language which you have here in this reservation. Here you have two kinds of commerce. One is foreign commerce and the other is internal commerce. In construing the phrase "domestic questions" you say "including internal commerce." Would not the Senator, sitting as a court, say that the intention of the Congress was that external commerce or foreign commerce should not come within the purview of "domestic questions"?

Mr. LENROOT. I am inclined to think so.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is what I say.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator made the broad statement that no subject would be excluded except those specified. He does not mean that.

Mr. BORAH. If the words "internal commerce" exclude foreign commerce, by a parity of reasoning, in my judgment, the court would arrive at the conclusion that you intended to cover these specific questions of domestic concern, and no others.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me ask the Senator whether this is not the rule of construction, and the reason why foreign commerce would be excluded if the word "internal" is placed here: The construction would be that while the subjects specified are not the only ones that are excluded where you name a particular kind in a given class that is excluded one that is not so named will be included, but there may be many other questions that would be excluded that are not enumerated, and the general rule of construction is that in a case of this kind, if some things of a class are enumerated, all like things of that particular class will be excluded, but otherwise the language is all inclusive.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me perfectly clear.

Mr. LENROOT. So far as the word "commerce" is concerned, I agree with the Senator's construction.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he does not think this is true: Unless we insert the word "internal" before "commerce" then we would be saying that the United States reserves to itself the right of decision or determination as to all commerce?

Mr. BORAH. You would—all commerce which was domestic.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; but first we say here:

> The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs—

Are reserved to us, and we have the right to decide them for ourselves. Then we say "including" various things, one of which is "commerce." That would cover the whole field of commerce, foreign and domestic, and by the use of that language we would reserve all such questions for our exclusive determination; and yet there may be questions of foreign commerce as to which we would not have that right, and could not have, and should not have. For instance, we can not say here that a ship having American registry, flying our flag, shall go into Genoa or shall go into Bremen and shall do certain things in those ports, because we would not have the right to say that. The countries in which are those cities have the right to control commerce in their own ports and the ships in their own ports, even though they are our ships. I merely mention that as an instance where we could not say that we shall determine absolutely and alone all questions relating to that shipping.

Mr. BORAH. No; but, Mr. President, if the Senator will construe the word "commerce" in connection with the phrase "domestic and political questions," he will get a conception which will make the reservation perfectly clear. We deal with the commerce when it is domestic, whether it is foreign commerce or internal commerce. The foreign commerce is not always, in its relationship to the country, synonymous with "external." Foreign commerce may be of the utmost concern to us from a domestic standpoint, and, if it is, to that extent we want to control it. What you ought to do, in order to make this reservation plain, it seems to me, is to strike out "internal," and then you have your rule, your standard, to wit, whether it is domestic or not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there is no question in my mind that the insertion of the word "internal" weakens the reservation heretofore adopted by the Senate. The league has jurisdiction of all questions which, in its opinion, affect the peace of the world. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has said that one of the questions most frequently involved is that of commerce. The reservation as it stood provided that commerce should be within our domestic jurisdiction. The effect of the reservation is to say that only internal commerce shall be within our domestic jurisdiction, leaving for the league to take jurisdiction of all that vast commerce which may be partially internal and partially external; in other words, foreign commerce. Therefore, unless the intention is to weaken the reservation and to confer more authority on the league, the amendment should be voted down.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, section 7 of the first article of the Constitution of the United States provides that "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations." That is foreign commerce. I take it that by vesting Congress with the power to regulate foreign commerce, every other tribunal was divested of it; in other words, it is an exclusive power.

If you insert the word "internal" before the word "commerce" in this reservation, the evident intent and purpose of it would be to undertake, by the ratification of the covenant, if it should be ratified, to vest jurisdiction over foreign commerce in the League of Nations. I do not think that can be done. I think that the ratification of the covenant of the League of Nations would be absolutely void.

This reservation provides that—

> The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, * * * are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way, either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the League of Nations.

The evident intent and purpose of that is to provide that those things which are not included in this reservation shall be submitted to the consideration of the assembly of the League of Nations. I mention the assembly because that is the higher body; it is the court of appeals in this constitution of the federated States of the world, and under this covenant that assembly to which the foreign commerce of the United States would be submitted by this reservation, if the amendment is made in it, would have exclusive and supreme power, because the provisions of the covenant of the League of Nations provide the means by which the members of the league, acting through a central authority, can enforce its decrees, and from those decrees there lies no appeal.

Of course, foreign commerce is subject to treaty; but treaties, in turn, are subject to the regulation, to the amendment, to the repeal, to the repudiation, of Congress. It seems to me that we are confronted here in a very concrete way, in a very specific and a very clear way, with the question which runs all through the fabric of the covenant of the League of Nations, whether we are going to undertake to transfer the high powers of government which are lodged in Congress and in the President by the provisions of the Constitution of the United States to the assembly and the council of the League of Nations.

I do not think we ought to undertake, by inserting the word "internal," to give the assembly of the League of Nations the right of consideration, with the implied right of determination, of our foreign commerce, which, under the Constitution, is vested exclusively in Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, these two slight changes were made at the suggestion of Senators upon the other side when we met in what has come to be known as the bipartisan conference. As no Senators on the other side seem to take the slightest interest in them, and I do not think personally they are an improvement—although I was ready to yield to them—I shall withdraw both of them and ask for a vote on reservation No. 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendments to reservation No. 4 are withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think there is a slight error in the statement that the amendments originated with Members on this side of the Chamber who were members of the bipartisan conference. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will recall that Senators on this side urged that the word "commerce" be stricken out, and that the suggestion that in lieu thereof the word "internal" be inserted came from the Republican side of the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. My memory differs from that of the Senator from Montana; but he agrees with my main proposition, that Senators on the other side take no interest in them, and I suggest that we vote on reservation No. 4.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I had not quite finished. Senators upon this side are perfectly willing to justify their insistence, made in the bipartisan conference, that the word "commerce" ought not to remain in the reservation. When the matter was formerly before the Senate and it was suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], as my recollection is, that the word "boundaries" be put in this reservation, so that domestic questions in relation to boundaries should be without the jurisdiction of the league, and it was eventually withdrawn, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] congratulated the manager on the Republican side upon the return of good sense.

Mr. President, probably the majority of the wars that have perplexed the nations of the earth since the time nations came into existence arose out of questions of commerce, and if we are going to take away from the jurisdiction of the league all questions in relation to commerce, what is there left?

It is true that the word "commerce" in the specifying clause may be regarded as qualified by the preceding word "domestic"; but so was the word "boundaries" qualified by the preceding word "domestic," and yet the Senator from Pennsylvania suggested that it was absurd to have it there.

It is very stoutly urged upon the part of the Germans that the war from which we have just emerged, and which gives rise to this discussion, was a commercial war; that it arose because of commercial controversies and commercial rivalries between Great Britain on the one side and Germany upon the other; and that view is entertained by other people besides our late enemy.

If this should have the construction which would ordinarily be given to it, that all questions of commerce are to be withdrawn from the so-called jurisdiction of the league, I scarcely think that anybody would support that who really desires to see the league established and operative. It was intended, I am sure, even by those who drafted the reservation, that questions in relation to foreign commerce not intimately associated with our internal affairs would go for determination before the league.

When we talk about jurisdiction of the league, the jurisdiction of the league is such, as a matter of course, as arises under the provisions of articles 12 and 13. I do not know that the league has any further jurisdiction in the matter. That is to say, if we have a controversy with a foreign country in relation to a matter of foreign commerce, not a domestic question in relation to commerce, we agree, under the provisions of article 12, to submit that to arbitration, if we consider it appropriate; or, if not, we agree, under the provisions of article 13, to submit that controversy to the determination of the council, or to the assembly, as provided therein. That is the extent to which we go.

Is it desired upon the other side, I ask, to have it understood that we will not submit to determination by arbitration under the provisions of article 12, or to determination by the council or the assembly of the league, any questions of foreign commerce? Do we thereby declare that we will not submit controversies of that character to the arbitrament of the league?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, in return, if it is the view of the Senators upon the other side that they will submit to a foreign tribunal questions of commerce which concern the people of the United States?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Any question of commerce international in its character giving rise to a dispute between this country and another country, such as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]; if Germany, for instance, would undertake to exclude from her territory any of our products discriminatorily, we would, of course, submit a controversy of that character to the league, as I understand it.

Mr. BORAH. And you are willing to do that. On the other hand, suppose a question of commerce between Germany and the United States arises and it is submitted to the council, and the council takes Germany's view of it. Does the Senator think that the people of the United States would be willing that their commercial affairs should be dominated by a foreign tribunal?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will put to me a concrete case, I would be better able to answer it.

Mr. BORAH. I am putting the Senator a concrete case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I am not able to answer it that way.

Mr. BORAH. I am putting the Senator just such a case as would arise under this clause. All questions of commerce, as the matter now stands, might give rise to a question upon which the council would pass judgment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, I understand the attitude of the Senator from Idaho to be that he would not submit any controversy at all to the league.

Mr. BORAH. I would not submit to a foreign tribunal anything which concerns the domestic affairs of the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We differ upon that. I want to submit international controversies to the league.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield, the Senator from Idaho, in the illustration given, asked the Senator from Montana whether the people of the United States would submit to the decision. The Senator from Idaho understands that the effect of such a finding is merely to bind the United States, not to go to war over that thing, does he not?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not.

Mr. LENROOT. Well, I do.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I do not.

Mr. LENROOT. It would leave the United States any other remedy of retaliation that she might see fit to impose.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, that leads into another field which we will discuss later.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me remind the Senator from Idaho that we have gone a long way already in that direction. We have many treaties to submit these matters to arbitration.

Mr. BORAH. That is a different proposition entirely. We make a treaty if we want to do so when the emergency arises and the facts are presented to us upon that particular occasion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not dispute that, but we have treaties of arbitration now; that is, we postpone war under all the Bryan treaties and submit those matters to arbitration.

Mr. BORAH. I did not vote for them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has withdrawn the amendments?

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw them both and ask for a vote on the fourth reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the fourth reservation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. The fourth reservation as originally adopted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I have been trying for some time to get the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Chair did not see me; I am perfectly well aware of that.

I wish to ask, for the sake of information, if it is now the view of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that in all our international disputes under the treaty and without the reservation we are bound to submit them to arbitration, or if that does not take place we are bound to submit them to the decision of the council of the league?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have sent for the covenant. I will read to the Senator articles 12 and 13.

Mr. REED. I have read them, but I desire to get the construction of the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In what particular does the Senator want my construction? I will read articles 12 and 13 of the covenant——

Mr. REED. It is not necessary to read them in answer to the question, because I am perfectly familiar with them. What I am trying to do, and I am trying to do it without attempting to be at all hypercritical or captious, is to see if we can not get a plain statement from some one about where we are going by this instrument. I want to know if it is the construction of the proponents of the league that if we sign and do not put on this reservation, all international disputes which do not arise over purely domestic questions would have to be arbitrated, and if arbitration did not take place they would have to go to the council of the league for decision?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will give the Senator my view of it, although I can not speak for others. I think the plain meaning of the language under article 13 is that where the dispute grows out of a treaty we agree to arbitration. Under article 15 if either member of the league brings to the attention of the council a dispute likely to lead to a rupture, the council would ordinarily consider it, but if either party to the dispute claims that it is a domestic question and the council finds that the dispute arises out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the party, the council would abandon its consideration and make no report; otherwise, the council would seek to effect a settlement or proceed to consider it and give an opinion, but that opinion would not be conclusive except to the extent that we would forbear to enter or engage in war for a term.

Mr. REED. I am called to the long-distance telephone, and I am sorry to interrupt the colloquy. I will remain here long enough, however, to say that as I construe these voluminous answers it is rather strange that we can not get a direct answer even from my very candid and always very brave friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. They all answer as though they were a little fearful, and I say that without reflection——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I mean to construe the instrument just as I understand it.

Mr. REED. This is all I am driving at, and I wish we could get one statement to go to the American people: Is it not true that if we sign this league covenant as written and without the reservation we have agreed to submit to some foreign body for decision every question of international dispute that is not strictly domestic?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that in a measure is true. We agree to submit it to some form of arbitration or some form of reference rather than to go to war.

Mr. REED. And if the other nation does not agree to the arbitration, then it goes to the council of the League of Nations, does it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With the right of either party to transfer it to the assembly.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the conclusions found are published, and we then do not obligate ourselves to carry out those conclusions, but we do obligate ourselves to refrain from entering war for a time after the findings are published.

Mr. REED. Three months.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That provision is in the interest of calm action with a view of securing a fair expression of opinion and its consideration before war is begun.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I have heard that a good many times and it is well said——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When you ask the question you are obliged to hear that if you hear its answer.

Mr. REED. It is well said, and let me pause long enough to say—and I shall be very glad to continue the debate when I return to the Chamber—that there is another side to it. I want it to end instanter. The delay of three or six months may mean the life of the United States. The waiting to give the other nation three months or six months to get ready to strike may mean the difference between a great war and no war at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only want to say a word.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only want to say one word. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupants of the galleries will be in order. Expressions of approval or disapproval or any manifestations by occupants of the galleries are against the rules of the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that I think he misconstrues the covenant of the League of Nations in assuming that it only limits the United States for a time from entering into war in opposition to any decision of the assembly. There is no time limitation upon it at all. It is an absolutely unqualified obligation never to go to war in contravention of a decision of the assembly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not understand that it goes to that extent. What I desired to do, in just a word, was to reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that a delay of three months might allow our enemy to prepare for war against us. Again, it might allow cooling space to prevent any war from coming on at all. I believe if the time ever came that a question of the preparation for war was involved, we would prepare about as fast as anyone else, if war was necessary with any other country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is the language of article 15 of the covenant of the League of Nations:

> Members of the league agree that they will not go to war with any party to the dispute which complies with the recommendations of the report.

Of course, the party in whose favor the report is made is going to comply with it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Members of the league agree, without any limitation as to time, that they will not go to war with the member who complies with the report of the council. There is a further provision that the entire controversy may be referred, at the will of either party, to the assembly, and the same provision applies to the report of the assembly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it is our purpose on this side of the Chamber to support a substitute to the pending reservation reported from the committee. I desire before offering that substitute, however, to express regret that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was so faint-hearted in his effort to reform and improve the pending reservation.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me one moment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. No matter whether the Senator thinks I am faint-hearted or not, I can not undertake to defend two amendments which I presented here, because they have been presented by Senators on the other side, and I simply presented them because I hoped that we might get together with a view of ratifying; but when I present two things which I admit I can not defend, and find everybody silent on the other side of the Chamber, I am not going to undertake to carry them. You may offer them yourselves, if you wish to do so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If everyone was silent on this side of the aisle, it was possibly because almost everyone was vocal on the other side of the aisle. There were, for the most part, four or five Senators on the other side of the aisle on the floor at the same time, and it is a becoming trait of Democratic character that it gives way under such circumstances to the other side.

Mr. BORAH. When did that begin?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It has certainly been shown recently to a distinguished extent.

I wish to say, moreover, that the Senator from Massachusetts is in error when he states that the amendments which he proposed were Democratic amendments. The recollection of members of the conference on this side of the aisle is that the word "internal," for instance, was inserted on the recommendation and at the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will yield, I desire to say that it was nothing of the kind.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Who was the father of it, Mr. President?

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator's recollection is at fault this time, as it has been many times before.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly I am not here to find fault.

Mr. KELLOGG. Further, I should like the Senator to know that I drew the original, and I am perfectly satisfied with it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator denies the fatherhood of the amendment, I shall not impose it upon him, but I can find no member of the conference over here who was responsible for it. There was, however, a general concurrence in the conference upon the proposition that the word "commerce" was entirely too broad without any qualification to come properly under the designation of a domestic question, and it was thought that some qualification should be made.

Without insisting on baptizing any Senator on the other side of the aisle as the father of this reservation, I can say that all of the Senators present from the other side of the aisle concurred in the belief at that time that the word "commerce" was too broad and should in some way be limited. Commerce is world wide, and no single nation can undertake to say that any disputes growing out of world-wide commerce can be considered solely the property and under the jurisdiction of any particular nation. They are, in their nature, the very disputes that must be submitted either to the arbitrament of war or to the arbitrament of peace in some form; and it is the policy of the United States, a policy which is written into many treaties with almost all of the nations of the world, that we will submit such disputes to arbitration.

However, Mr. President, I did not deem the amendment which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has offered as of very great importance except to clarify a reservation which is in its language already cumbersome and clumsy. Senators have called attention to the awkward construction of this language, which reads:

> The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction.

That expression would seem to be broad enough. If you state the fact that the United States reserves to itself the right to decide what are domestic questions, and then declare that domestic questions shall not come within the jurisdiction of the league, you have certainly made an intelligent declaration; but you go further and use this language:

> And declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs.

How can a domestic question fail to relate to the Nation's internal affairs? Why put in that language of confusion and doubt? So, Mr. President, I shall offer, as I offered on the former occasion, the following substitute for the pending reservation:

> That no member nation is required to submit to the league, its council, or its assembly for decision, report, or recommendation any matter which it considers to be a domestic question, such as immigration, labor, tariff, or other matter relating to its internal or coastwise affairs.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question in reference to that reservation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the Senator think that that really is an amendment to the treaty, in that it changes the treaty provision as to all the other signatory powers as well as ourselves? All we are trying to do in the reservation is to fix our duty under the treaty; but the Senator's reservation—if that is a proper designation of it—changes the treaty provision as to the duty of all the other signatory powers as well as ourselves.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the answer to that is that if it is true, as the Senator states, that the reservation changes the treaty, it changes it in a way that all of the other nations would be pleased with.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That may be true——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly we do not want to enter into the league upon any other basis than the basis upon which other nations enter it. We enter it as equals. We should be bound by the same rule; and if we make a reservation for our own benefit, reserving our domestic questions, we should lay down the rule that all domestic questions of all countries are also reserved. We should not, as a member of the league, be put in a position of asserting a right to pass upon their domestic questions when we withdraw our domestic questions from their consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course that would render utterly negative the reservation which has been made by Switzerland, and it would be useless for us to talk about making any reservations if the Senator's theory were accepted.

Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent at this time to have the Secretary read a reservation that I shall probably offer later on. I merely desire to have it now read so that it may go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

Ratification shall not take effect unless the instrument of ratification shall have been filed within 30 days after the adoption of the resolution of ratification by the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the amendment may be printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered. The question is on the substitute for the pending reservation proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, just a word. There is no Senator upon this floor who has declaimed louder against amending the treaty and sending it back to the different nations than has the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]; and yet the Senator from Nebraska now offers to the Senate a clear amendment of the treaty that affects the rights not only of the United States, but attempts to change the rights and privileges of every member of the league as fixed by the treaty and after they have ratified the treaty. I am amazed at the change of position of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I desire to say that certainly the Senator from Wisconsin can not state there is any change in my position. This is the reservation which we voted for last November, and it is not a change in position for that reason, nor, in our opinion, is it an amendment of the treaty. It merely defines a right under the treaty which is already provided for, that domestic questions shall not be subjected to the jurisdiction of the league.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the treaty provide that the league itself shall determine what are domestic questions?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a dubious question. I doubt whether it does.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me a question, is the Senator from Nebraska willing to sign a treaty the meaning of which he is himself uncertain about?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is unquestionably an amendment to the treaty. I do not recall it as having been offered in November last. I think it would certainly have attracted my attention as a clear amendment to the treaty if it had been offered at that time. If the language were changed so that it simply applied to the United States and was made a reservation of our right to pass upon any question and determine if it was a domestic question, then it would be entitled to favorable consideration. Beyond any doubt, under article 15 as written the council determines whether a question is or is not a domestic question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Senator to allow me to proceed a little further, then I will yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The council is authorized to hear any dispute brought to its attention by any member of the league where the member claims that the dispute may lead to war. If the opposing member asserts that the question is a domestic question, then it is for the council to determine, in the language of the covenant, whether under international law it is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the party. It is to get away from that provision a reservation is essential. I yield now to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the reservation introduced by the Senator from Nebraska last November. I think he is correct in saying that he did introduce it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wish to say in addition to that that the Senator from Georgia voted for it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not remember having done so; I think the Senator is mistaken; if so, I overlooked its extent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can demonstrate it to the Senator. I hand him the volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the reservation and the vote upon it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. REED. If we can not determine what we ourselves have done within the last 30 days or so, what do we suppose will happen to us when we get in the hands of the League of Nations?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I prefer not to yield for the moment.

Mr. BORAH. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am just running through the RECORD handed me by the Senator from Nebraska to see what it was that the Senator from Nebraska sent to the desk at the time to which he refers during the last session. In the last hours of that debate it was simply impossible to appreciate the full extent of the provisions read only at the desk and not read otherwise.

The Senator from Nebraska said at that time—

I move that the treaty be referred to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to report it back to the Senate with the following reservations which I ask to be read.

Then follow quite a number of reservations which were no doubt read at the Secretary's desk. In connection with my vote to direct the Committee of the Whole to report back the treaty with the reservations then proposed, I said upon the floor that we would not be bound by the reservations as stated when reported back by the Committee of the Whole, nor would we be precluded from adding additional reservations; but, in order to bring the matter back to the Senate, I was willing to vote to have the Committee of the Whole report back the treaty with the reservations. That simply amounted to a committee report and would have brought the measure before the Senate. The reservations were read at the Secretary's desk, but it was impossible for anyone to have told exactly what was in them. However, before voting in favor of having them reported back from the Committee of the Whole I called attention to the fact that we would not be bound by them, but could amend them and perfect them after the report was made.

Mr. President, even though that statement had not been made by me upon the floor, the fact that lengthy reservations were read at the desk and the committee was directed to report the treaty back with such reservations would not in any way have precluded a Senator from criticizing the reservations themselves when the report came in from the committee. The reservation as presented by the Senator from Nebraska on November 13 was:

That any member nation proposing to withdraw from the league on two years' notice is the sole judge as to whether its obligations referred to in article 1 of the League of Nations have been performed as required in said article.

That no member nation is required to submit to the league, its council, or its assembly for decision, report, or recommendation any matter which it considers to be in international law a domestic question, such as immigration, labor, tariff, or other matters relating to its internal or coastwise affairs.

I should be perfectly willing to see a reservation of that character added to the league covenant, but I do not think it wise now for us to undertake to amend the original document. We have all conceded that reservations are the only mode by which we can proceed; the Senator from Nebraska has no hope that the Senate will vote for such an amendment now, and to present it as a substitute for a reservation is to offer something that he knows will be killed, and almost amounts to joining with the irreconcilables in hindering action.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I am not ready to vote. I do not wish a vote until we may have an opportunity for agreement on a reservation which may aid ratification of the treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I do not like to have the Senator from Georgia take the position——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senators on the other side desire to debate this matter still further, as it is now half past 5 o'clock, if the Senator will yield to me I will make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate, as in legislative session, adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 27, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father Almighty, inspire us with a profounder faith in Thee, that we may lay hold of life and its eternal values and prosecute the work Thou hast given us to do with new energy and zeal, thus fulfilling Thy purposes and satisfying our own consciences. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TRADE-MARKS AND COMMERCIAL NAMES.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9023) to give effect to certain provisions of the convention for the protection of trade-marks and commercial names, made and signed in the city of Buenos Aires, in the Argentine Republic, August 10, 1910, and for other purposes, and to disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which the Clerk will report, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. NOLAN, Mr. LAMPERT, and Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania.

LEGISLATION RELATING TO SOLDIERS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 470.

Resolved, That for the remainder of the second session of the Sixty-sixth Congress all proposed legislation relating to those who served in the World War (other than those of the Regular Establishment), excepting, however, legislation based on and relating to disability incurred in the service, shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Speaker is hereby authorized to make rereference of bills heretofore introduced in accordance with the terms of this resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to send to the Ways and Means Committee all bills heretofore introduced or that may hereafter be introduced relating to the soldiers who served in the World War, excepting legislation relating to disability.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. POU. I should like to ascertain from the gentleman if we can have some arrangement as to time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think I shall make a brief statement and then move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. POU. Does the gentleman mean——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The purpose is——

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. After I have made a brief statement.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is the gentleman going to move the previous question immediately on making his statement?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; I think I shall.

Mr. POU. That cuts off all opportunity for debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield to the gentleman for a question after I have made my statement. The purpose of this legislation——

Mr. POU. Does the gentleman, my colleague on this committee, mean to tell us that his purpose is to cut off debate on this resolution?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. After the brief statement that I wish to make.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman is going to do that, I will make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withhold that for a moment. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield for just a moment?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield for a brief question.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman will remember that when I appeared before the Committee on Rules the other day his statement to me about time was that there would be 20 minutes on a side.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I said there could be 20 minutes on a side.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman said there would be.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. POU. I would like to ask the gentleman why this departure from the usual policy of fairness that has characterized the gentleman's course heretofore. I see no reason why the gentleman should not yield us 20 minutes on this side. I want to suggest to my colleague on the committee that this course of procedure is unusual and in my opinion unworthy of the great Committee on Rules and the chairman of it, who is now addressing the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This is the first time that I have taken advantage of the right of the majority members of the Committee on Rules to move the previous question after a brief statement as to what the majority proposes to do.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Dupré	Kelly, Pa.	Reber
Bell	Eagan	Kendall	Rhodes
Benson	Ellsworth	Kennedy, Iowa	Riordan
Blackmon	Emerson	Kennedy, R. I.	Robinson, N. C.
Bland, Mo.	Ferris	Kettner	Rodenberg
Boies	Fields	Kreider	Rowan
Booher	Fuller, Mass.	Langley	Rucker
Brumbaugh	Gallivan	Larsen	Schall
Caraway	Garland	Lufkin	Scully
Carew	Godwin, N. C.	McCulloch	Sears
Clark, Fla.	Goldfogle	McDuffie	Smith, Ill.
Classon	Gould	McPherson	Smith, N. Y.
Cooper	Graham, Pa.	Maher	Snyder
Costello	Griest	Mann, S. C.	Steagall
Crago	Hamill	Mead	Steele
Cramton	Harrison	Moon	Stephens, Miss.
Crowther	Haugen	Moore, Ohio	Stephens, Ohio
Cullen	Hoey	Neely	Stoll
Currie, Mich.	Houghton	Nicholls, S. C.	Strong, Pa.
Curry, Calif.	Hudspeth	O'Connell	Sullivan
Dewalt	Hulings	O'Connor	Tague
Dominick	Johnston, N. Y.	Pell	Weaver
Donovan	Jones, Pa.	Porter	Welty
Dooling	Kahn	Purnell

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-nine Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the rule be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the rule.

The Clerk read the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, when interrupted by the point of no quorum——

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; not until I make my statement. Mr. Speaker, since being interrupted by the point of no quorum, I have talked with my colleagues on the Committee on Rules and am led to believe that statements made in the committee properly led members of the minority to believe that there would be at least 20 minutes allowed for debate on each side on this resolution. If that is true, and I believe it is after refreshing my recollection, I shall yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] out of the hour that is under my control. [Applause.] I will ask him to use as much of that time now as he can, because I think there will be little discussion on this side after he has concluded.

Mr. Speaker, I want to state, before I yield the floor temporarily, that the purpose of this resolution is to get all the bills now pending in all the committees before the Committee on Ways and Means so that action may be had by a committee that has jurisdiction of all bills on this subject and act as soon as possible.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I shall not yield for a question at this time. I want to make a consecutive statement about this matter. I know what gentlemen have in their minds. But it is more important to the soldiers of the late war that some committee shall have jurisdiction of all matters pertaining to the legislation desired by Members of Congress than that some committees in the House shall lose or retain some of the jurisdiction they now have over this legislation. [Applause.]

Bills have been introduced that have been referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, to the Committee on Ways and Means, to the Committee on Banking and Currency, to the Committee on Education, to the Committee on Military Affairs, and to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Each of these committees is jealous of its jurisdiction, but the country does not care a picayune for their jealousy or their jurisdiction. [Applause.] It is all-important that all bills referring to these matters be referred to some committee now organized and ready for action, that can do something upon this very important question. It is for the purpose of enabling the House to get action through an instrumentality that has already been created that this resolution has been agreed to by gentlemen who have been urging this legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I shall yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want the gentleman to yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Some of us would like to know what the resolution means.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The resolution speaks for itself.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman ought to explain the resolution and give the House some information.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be notified at the end of seven minutes. Mr. Speaker, nobody ever loses anything by being fair. [Applause.] I felt perfectly sure that the gentleman from Kansas, chairman of the powerful Committee on Rules, would consent, after consideration, to give the minority at least 20 minutes of time for the discussion of this matter.

Mr. Speaker, the desire of the minority, at least of the Committee on Rules, is to secure speedy action on the bills providing for supplemental or additional compensation to the soldiers and sailors who served in the Great War. [Applause.] If it is the purpose of the Republican steering committee in ordering the resolution offered, referring all such bills to the Committee on Ways and Means—if the purpose is to secure speedy action, we bid you Godspeed, but I have a very well grounded fear that the purpose of this resolution in referring all of these bills to the Ways and Means Committee is to put them to sleep during the remainder of this session. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minority of the Committee on Rules, with some immaterial amendments, offered a resolution, introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], some weeks ago as a substitute for the resolution now being considered, and I ask unanimous consent to have the resolution printed as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

House resolution 323.

Resolved, That a select committee consisting of 21 Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker for and during the period of the present Congress; such select committee shall have jurisdiction of all the following proposed legislation, which shall be referred to such committee, viz: Subjects relating to the civil reestablishment of all honorably discharged officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines of the present World War, including all bills, resolutions, or communications relating to their vocational rehabilitation, to their educational facilities of any kind, to their employment, providing credits, or providing additional compensation of whatsoever kind or in whatever form, including the bonus, hospital, and sanatorium facilities, or homes, or allotting lands; also subjects relating to war-risk insurance and compensation for disabilities incurred in the service, including allotments, and any and all other subjects principally and directly relating to or affecting the status or interests of the officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines aforementioned. Said select committee shall have the right to report at any time.

That all standing committees having jurisdiction of bills and resolutions referred to the select committee aforesaid under this resolution be, and they are hereby, discharged from further consideration of such bills and resolutions.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, that resolution provides for the appointment of 21 Members of the House by the Speaker. There is precedent for this. The committee should have jurisdiction of all bills relating to the subject. It was the idea of the minority and, no doubt, the introducer of the resolution that the Speaker would take the members of the respective committees which have charge of these bills—the Committee on the Public Lands, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the Committee on Education—and that the Speaker would create a committee from the membership of the several committees, appoint this special committee not burdened with work, not burdened with all manner of responsibility, that it should take charge of such bills and at an early date report to this House some measure whereby ex-service men may know it is the purpose to do more practical and substantial justice. They have a right to demand at least the same treatment as the Government clerk.

The only way to secure consideration of the substitute which in this brief time I have described is to vote down the previous question. If the previous question is voted down, there may be an opportunity for considering the substitute. If the previous question is voted up, there can be no consideration of the substitute which I have put in the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have been told that the Ways and Means Committee already has some 50 or 60 bills of this sort upon which they have taken no action. Is there any hope that they will be any more expeditious with this than with those?

Mr. POU. Of course I can not answer that question. I entertain a very pronounced opinion, but I will say this: I believe the people of the country, and the ex-service men particularly, would instantly take it as the earnest purpose on the part of this House to do something if, as in the water-power case, a select committee were appointed by the Speaker, with no other bills to consider except those dealing with this great question—a committee that would immediately go to work to investigate all the bills which have been introduced and in all human probability make an early report to the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under the terms of this resolution does the gentleman understand that it affects bills that have already been acted upon by committees and that are now on the calendar of the House?

Mr. POU. I think not. Bills upon the calendar are under the jurisdiction of the House. But this resolution provides that all bills heretofore introduced on the subjects enumerated shall be referred to this select committee of 21, and that the respective committees that have had charge of them heretofore shall be discharged from further consideration of them. But, as I have said, this would not change the status of bills already on the calendar.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is a bill to which I had particular reference, reported by the committee last week, providing for an increased allowance to the men taking vocational training.

Mr. POU. That bill would be referred to this committee, as I construe the resolution.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, it would not. The resolution under consideration specifically excludes all bills that deal with disability. They are not included.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman's idea of the purpose of this resolution is correct—and I am sure he can not be wrong—then this resolution would shelve all such legislation until after the elections.

Mr. POU. That is the fear of the minority of the Rules Committee.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. My time is limited. I have only a minute or so, and I have agreed to yield all of the remaining time.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman ought not to make insinuations against this side of the House without foundation.

Mr. POU. I yield for a question.

Mr. DYER. I would like to have the gentleman state on what he bases the fear that the Republicans are not in favor of helping the soldiers when, as a matter of fact, they have always been in favor of helping the soldiers and the Democratic Party has never been. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. POU. The gentleman is proceeding to take up my time to express his own views. The Republicans are in power, they have a large majority in this House, and if they had intended to do anything at all they would have done it by now. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DYER. The record of the Republicans speaks for itself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. POU. I will proceed just a minute. There is no need to speak of the debt of gratitude the Nation owes to the ex-service men. It is far greater than the Nation will ever be able to pay. Need I ask your pardon for speaking of the sacrifice of my own young son? I think not. I was very proud of him, and for a long time after his death I could not bear to speak of my sorrow, but I have thought a great deal about the lesson of his short life. It has made me a broader and, I hope, God being my helper, a better man. I think I have just reason to be proud. I have the tokens he won of duty well performed.

In one of his letters from France he wrote, "Papa, they call us all 'Yanks' over here, and I want to tell you I am proud of it." [Applause.]

Before he was 21 he paid the great price, but his work enrolled him with the immortals. They laid him away to rest in a casket draped with that flag. Yes; I have the flag, too, which I shall leave as a priceless heritage to posterity. Do you wonder I feel a thrill I never felt before when I look upon that flag? As a child my father taught me to love the flag, but my love for it, the reverence I feel for it now, no words can describe.

My boy did not die in vain. I reverently thank God I was permitted to be his father. The men who served in the great World War have buried sectionalism in America forever. [Applause.] If they had done that and nothing more, they would deserve all we will ever be able to do for them. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I wanted the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to yield, which he generously refused to do, for I would like to know what this resolution means before we vote upon it. A great deal of talk went around here yesterday among members of the Committee on Rules about what the Speaker was going to refer to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and what he was going to refer to this committee. I simply wanted to get into the RECORD whatever the Speaker had agreed to do on that question. I would like to have the gentleman from Kansas answer the question, if he will.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman from Texas, I have not consulted the Speaker about the references that he would make. I am sure that the Speaker will read the resolution and he will carry out its purpose and intent.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman does not have the information that I want.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. I want to ask the gentleman in reference to the language in the resolution. I would say that I am in sympathy with the spirit of the resolution, but I am doubtful as to the wording of it. The resolution states:

> Excepting, however, legislation based on and relating to disability incurred in the service, shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Speaker is hereby authorized to make rereference of bills heretofore introduced in accordance with the terms of this resolution.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. Do I understand that according to a proper construction of that resolution the Wason bill and the bills introduced by Mr. RAMSEYER and by Mr. TREADWAY and others, which are now being considered in our committee, would be rereferred to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. RAYBURN. They would all go to this graveyard of which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is chairman.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], who is the chairman of this committee, has already introduced a bill and got it reported here that will tear the War Risk Bureau wide open and put half of it in one department of the Government and half of it in another.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The bill that I introduced was to refer to the Committee on Pensions all pensions relating——

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no; the gentleman's bill reported to this House would take the compensation division of the war risk insurance act out of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and put it over here in this Pension Department.

Mr. FORDNEY. That has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. If a man wants to ask me about the ability of this Committee on Ways and Means, I would say that it is just as able as the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; but would any member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce contend that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is capable of handling a bill involving the intricate technicalities of a tariff law?

Will any member of the Ways and Means Committee of this House or any Member of this House contend that the Ways and Means Committee, that knows nothing about this law except in a general way, is as capable of handling the amendments to the war-risk insurance act as the committee that gave it birth and that has brought it to such a high standard in this land? [Applause.] In the name of all the gods at once upon what meat does this committee feed that it has grown so great? [Applause.] Sound the name of FORDNEY and the name of ESCH; ESCH will start a spirit of this House or any place else of this land as soon as FORDNEY. Call the roll of the committees. What committee of this House since the war closed has done anything for the crippled and the maimed of the American Army? The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, by passing the Sweet bill. If you take the amendments that are introduced now and before the Interstate Commerce Committee and send them to this Ways and Means Committee you are sending them to their death, and as sure as you do it the country will hold you responsible for it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POU. I have only one more speech.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, one of the squarest citizens in the whole United States as well as one of the most consistent friends of the ex-service men is the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], who opened the opposition to this measure. I hesitate very much to disagree with him because I know that he wants to accomplish the things that are best for the service men, and any disagreement I should have with him would be purely in the method we would want to adopt. He has been a constant supporter of all legislation advocated by the American Legion and by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and is and always will be a friend of the service men. No man who has made the wonderful sacrifice that he has made for his country could do otherwise than he has done. I think it is natural that some questions would be asked about this resolution, and I am going to tell some of its history.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for one question before he starts?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I would like to know why those of the Regular Establishment are to be excepted from this resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is one question, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, I myself asked, because I know that a great many men of this country went into the Regular Army just as soon as war was declared, but I do not believe it would apply to those men who volunteered in the Regular Army for the war, and I do not believe it would except the members of the Regular Establishment if the Ways and Means Committee desires to include them in bonus legislation, but the phraseology would naturally bring up the question the gentleman asks. Personally, I believe the Regular Army should be included. Now, this legislation was fathered by Republicans and Democrats alike, and I do not think we ought to be trying to talk politics over a resolution of this kind. It was fathered by men who wanted to get some action on the matter. It was taken up with Mr. D'Olier and the executive committee of the American Legion and they said that they wanted to get some kind of legislation, not trying to dictate to Congress at all, because Congress ought to decide for itself. They favored the getting of these bills and resolutions all in the hands of one committee in order that action might be secured. Now, most of us cared very little whether it came through legislation proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], because his resolution is the basis of the substitute that would have been offered by the gentleman from North Carolina if he had had a chance, or through this resolution. The idea was that it ought to come from the committee that has to raise the money——

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. In view of the fact that the Ways and Means Committee, as the gentleman well knows, have had 40 50 bills before it for all these months and have had hearings on them and has not reported, why should the gentleman want to put an additional burden on the same committee as by the method proposed, especially when every fact goes to show this committee is not friendly to this legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I think that is a very fair question, and I would say to the gentleman that the only reason we want to adopt this method of procedure is because we know the condition of the Federal Treasury, and we feel that the legislation ought to be brought out by the committee which was going to provide for the raising of the money. As a matter of fact I would, if we had plenty of available funds, be willing to accept the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina. I know that he has brought it in in the spirit of extreme fairness in order to get action, but I think it ought to go to the committee which has to raise the money.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does not the gentleman realize that this Ways and Means Committee is always penurious and that an appropriation committee is always liberal, and does not the gentleman think that the soldier would be better off if the matter were in the hands of an appropriation committee rather than in the hands of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman I do not care to discuss the membership of the Ways and Means Committee, either Republicans or Democrats. If this Ways and Means Committee does not operate, we probably can secure action through caucus of both his party and mine, which will make it operate without regard to politics. Now, the question was raised, particularly by the gentleman from Iowa, as to how the war-risk insurance measures would be affected. I have just talked with the Speaker of the House, who will construe the resolution if it passes, and he said evidently there is only one bill now before the House——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. There is only one bill before the House affecting war-risk insurance which would go to the Ways and Means Committee.

That is a bill that would provide that all the insurance premiums of all the ex-service men would be paid by the Government, and it is the only bill affecting the war-risk insurance which under this resolution would be transferred.

Mr. SWEET. I call the gentleman's attention to the Wason bill, on which hearings are being held. That relates solely to insurance. Would that be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Not unless it is a bill providing that all insurance premiums be paid by the Government.

Mr. SWEET. If it is purely an administrative bill, will it remain with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The Speaker assures me, and he can correct me if I misquote him, that that is one he would not take away and refer to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. SWEET. Under the terms of the resolution it is limited to "disability incurred in the service," which relates solely to compensation. I am in sympathy with the spirit of this resolution and doubtful only as to its wording. If I was sure that we could take up the Wason bill and continue the hearings and go on with it and report whatever the committee may see fit to this House I would have no objection to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I can assure the gentleman—and if I am wrong the Speaker will correct me—that the Wason bill will stay in the gentleman's committee, and desire to say that no one would desire to take any jurisdiction from the committee of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET]. He has done so much for ex-service men that they will all trust their interests to him.

I am sure the American Legion and its executive committee are perfectly satisfied with this particular resolution. I am sure that they would be just as satisfied, if the matter had come up before, and they could have made their decision on the substitute of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. It is purely a matter of what procedure we adopt; what we want is action, and we will get it. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, if the Democratic administration had taken as much time and had been as slow in preparing for and prosecuting a successful war as the Republican Party has been slow in giving justice to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who won that great victory, the German Kaiser to-day would be the military master of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I want to pay a compliment to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] who has just taken his seat. It is well known to the country, according to the reports recently in the public press, that it was the well-defined policy of the Republican Party in this House not to bring in legislation for the benefit of the soldiers who fought in the World War at this session of Congress. It was the gentleman from South Dakota who said in the public press, as I read it, that he intended to call a caucus of the Republican Members of Congress, and went so far, as the paper stated, to circulate a petition, and he laid down the law to you to the effect that unless you took this action he would let the country know who was responsible for the delay; and it is at his request to-day that you are trying to camouflage this proposition and make it appear to the country that you are going to do something for the ex-service men. I sincerely hope that you will.

So far as I am concerned I have been ready for months; and the Republican side has had control of this Congress since last May—almost a year—and now all that you can do in behalf of the ex-service men is to come in here with a resolution saying that all of these bills shall be referred to the Ways and Means Committee for consideration, while the men wait and wait for action. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We are on this side, so far as the minority members of the Rules Committee are concerned, glad to strike hands with the gentleman from South Dakota, and for any resolution which will get speedy action and speedy legislation for the ex-service men.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANTRILL. Let me finish my statement.

I hope the gentleman is correct when he says that the Ways and Means Committee will bring in a bill here, but I fear that he is mistaken. For one I do not expect them to do it. They have had nearly a year. You have now four months until your national convention. Do not put this thing off. I serve notice on you now that this side of the House will bring this question to your attention again. Bring in some kind of a bill between now and your national convention and pass it through this House for the benefit of the ex-service men.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANTRILL. Just for a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. We both of us desire action. Would not the best way to get this legislation be to vote for the previous question on the resolution and for the resolution?

Mr. CANTRILL. I want to say to the gentleman that I hope the House will vote down the motion for the previous question and give us an opportunity to present on its merits to that side of the House a substitute which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] has put into the RECORD. If you vote that down, I am perfectly frank to say to the gentleman from South Dakota that I will join with him to vote to put it in the hands of the Ways and Means Committee, but I believe that the substitute is the better plan, and one that will bring better results for the ex-service men of the country. Give us a chance to bring up this substitute and submit it to that side of the House on its merits, and let the Speaker of this House appoint a special committee, with nothing else to do except to consider these bills. Then you will get some action. Do not bury the bills in the Ways and Means Committee or in any other committee, as I fear will be the result. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Ah, Mr. Speaker, what is this action here to-day? As I pointed out, it is because the Republican side of the House is afraid to take issue with the gentleman from South Dakota and the men on this side of the House who want some action on this matter. It is a command from the Republican steering committee of this House to kill this legislation, just as the Republican steering committee has commanded the Judiciary Committee and the Committees on Public Lands, Public Buildings and Grounds, Education, and other committees of this House to bury legislation which the members of these great committees stood for. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, just on the question of the substitute.

The substitute which the gentlemen desire to offer, and I hope they will not get the opportunity to do it, proposes the appointment of a committee by the Speaker consisting of 21 Members, and, as stated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], it would be expected that that committee would be made up of a number of the ranking men on four or five or six different committees. These committees now are active committees of the House. They are all busy. Yet the gentleman says if they had a special committee made up in that way, that that committee would have nothing to do but to consider these questions. That committee would be composed of Members of the House now working night and day on their own committee work, and they never could get a quorum of the special committee together. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the observations made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] were the observations that controlled in the determination of the majority of the Committee on Rules against the special committee, and I think they are very well taken.

This is a very simple proposition. Here is a demand for soldier relief that has gone to the Committee on Public Lands; here is another that has come to the Committee on Education—a bill introduced that I myself fathered before the Committee on Education to provide for vocational education of all service men who desire such benefit; here is another that has gone to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; here are others gone to the Committee on Ways and Means. And if the business of this House is expedition, the first sensible thing to do would be to concentrate on a single committee to avoid conflicting proposals from various committees.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Not now. Therefore the Committee on Rules decided without opposition that it should go to one committee.

Now, as to whether it was to go to this particular committee or a specially appointed committee, it was thought first that a specially appointed committee, as was presented to us, would be too busy on account of its personnel being made up of members of other committees engaged in other work to do this particular work; and, second, it was thought that the Committee on Ways and Means is the one committee of the House to determine the income in the way of revenue to provide for the outgo to take care of such legislation as will be reported; and therefore, as the chairman of the Committee on Education, I voted to relinquish our claim upon that particular legislation which I fathered and which came to our committee. I believe all other committees will be willing to do the same. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 16 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope this rule will be adopted by unanimous vote and that the resolution which the rule makes in order will be passed with the same unanimity. Since the convening of the Sixty-sixth Congress last May I have been deeply interested in beneficial soldier legislation. Many others on both sides of this House have had a like interest. Indeed, the large majority of the membership of this House have been greatly interested. I gave considerable time and thought to the preparation of a bill, H. R. 5545, which proposes to organize the necessary credit facilities through which every honorably discharged soldier, sailor, and marine of the great World War may acquire a home. Many other Members of the House, I think about 75 in number, have introduced bills proposing various plans of recognition to the soldiers. Every man has no doubt proposed what he thought was best and wisest. These various bills have been pending for some time before a number of different committees. Some of us have been a little impatient over the apparent delay in their consideration. A number of us on this side of the House have several times conferred together on this matter. We have gone before the leaders of this side of the House and urged action. We have discussed among ourselves and with the leaders as to what would be the best plan to pursue. As a result of our conferences, we concluded some time ago that all of these soldier-aid bills should be referred to a single committee. Two plans were proposed. One was that a special committee should be created to which all of these bills should be referred. The other was that all of these bills should be referred to the Ways and Means Committee. After a somewhat careful consideration of the subject it was the conclusion of those in conference that, all things considered, the best plan was to refer all these bills to the Ways and Means Committee.

This committee consists of 25 members. It represents 24 States of the Union. New York is the only State having more than one representative on this committee. It has two. The East, the West, the North, and the South are represented on this committee. The soldiers from every part of the Nation will be represented on this committee. It will likewise represent the public interests in every part of this country. It is a safe committee to consider and act upon this important legislation. I believe the interests of the soldiers and the interests of the country will be safe in its hands.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman think that if the Ways and Means Committee would attend to its legitimate functions it would have enough to do between now and the end of this session?

Mr. MORGAN. I think that the Committee on Ways and Means for the time being, for 20 or 30 days, should suspend action upon all other bills pending and that its members should concentrate their time and ability in perfecting wise legislation in behalf of the soldiers of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. For a question.

Mr. GARRETT. The last suggestion of the gentleman raises a very interesting inquiry in the minds of Members.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. GARRETT. Back of all this is it the purpose to keep this legislation in that committee in order to relieve it from other duties?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know what pressing legislation is pending before the Ways and Means Committee. I have talked with the chairman and with a number of the members of this committee on this subject. None of them, so far as I know, have been asking that these soldier-aid bills be referred to this committee. Those to whom I have talked recognize the responsibility to be placed upon them. They have not sought this task. They have not been asking for this additional jurisdiction. Persons not members of the Ways and Means Committee first proposed this arrangement, and they have been the ones who have urged its adoption. But now for the future work. Whatever legislation is pending before this committee, except such as is of immediate, vital, and supreme importance, must give way to the soldier-aid legislation. The time has come when there must be no further unnecessary postponement. The committee must give reasonable time for hearings on the various bills. The soldiers, sailors, and marines, individually and through their organizations, must be heard. The public also must be heard. In my judgment the soldier-aid legislation is the most important matter now pending before Congress. The fact that these bills shall be referred to the Ways and Means Committee does not relieve the other Members of this House from responsibility. Every Member of this House should study this subject with the utmost care, diligence, and thoroughness. We should aid and assist the Ways and Means Committee in every way in our power. In this matter we should be guided by the best impulses of our hearts and by the light of patriotic devotion to our country and its free institutions, which have been preserved and perpetuated through heroic deeds of our soldiers, sailors, and marines in the great World War.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think there has been general agreement on both sides of the House for some time that it was important that all of the questions involving large expenditures on behalf of ex-service men should be considered by a single committee, at least all questions other than those that grow out of or relate to disability or have to do with the administration of present laws.

Some time ago certain gentlemen, who have been very actively interested in these matters, suggested and urged that some decision be reached in the matter. A committee of the American Legion with whom I talked also urged that all of these matters be referred to one committee. My first personal inclination was for the appointment of a special committee by the Speaker. But in discussing that with gentlemen on both sides I found there was much opposition to that procedure. It was urged, among other things, that any legislation involving large expenditures should be considered by the committee that has to do with the raising of revenue; that proposals of legislation that might involve a bond issue or raise the question of taxation, that would necessitate the general question of the revenues, ought to go to the committee that has jurisdiction over those matters. [Applause.] All of the other committees were perfectly willing to surrender their jurisdiction, except that there was some little question on the part of one or two members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. That committee is yielding less of its jurisdiction over these matters than any of the other committees of the House that have jurisdiction over them, because that committee retains all of its jurisdiction except jurisdiction over matters that relate not to service and disability but questions that go to the demands or requests or suggestions of all of the ex-service men. Otherwise the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce retains its jurisdiction, and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that under the circumstances the Committee on Ways and Means is the committee that logically should consider all of these great questions.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas, if I have time.

Mr. WINGO. On the gentleman's theory that the committee which has to do with the raising of revenue, or possibly bond issues, should have jurisdiction, does the gentleman intend to follow up that policy and have bills requiring compulsory military training referred to that committee, because, according to the gentleman's own statement, such bills will involve an expenditure of a billion dollars and involve a bond issue?

Mr. MONDELL. That question is silly.

Mr. WINGO. It requires neither character nor courage for the gentleman to take advantage of his position on the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, I presume.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming has the floor.

Mr. WINGO. I know he has the floor and is abusing the privileges of the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. The matter that the gentleman refers to has no relation whatever to the matter treated in this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The first vote will be on the previous question. If the previous question is not ordered, the control of the House will be turned over to the Democratic side, and everybody knows how incompetent they are to manage the affairs of this country, as they have shown in the last eight years. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand the members of the Ways and Means Committee are members of no other committees. Is it true that they always have a quorum at their meetings?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The members of that committee are members of no other committees, and I understand they have very little other work to do at this particular time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is it not a fact that the water-power bill, one of the most important bills before the House, has been delayed in its consideration for three or four months because the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], the chairman of that committee, is also a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has had the railroad bill before it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And would not that illustrate the situation we would have if the Democratic proposal prevailed?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think the gentleman is correct. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri and Mr. POU demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 208, nays 127, not voting 93, as follows:

YEAS—208.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia. I desire to withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OFFICIAL DELEGATION FROM THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a good many Members of the House at one time or another have visited the Hawaiian Islands practically as guests of the legislature or the people there. There is an official delegation now in Washington for a very brief period from the Hawaiian Islands, and I beg to ask that all those Members of the House who have made any of these visits will meet with us in the Republican cloakroom—Democrats being cordially invited—for the purpose of seeing whether we will take any action toward social or other entertainment for this delegation.

Mr. GALLAGHER. When do you want them to meet?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Right away.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"There is hereby authorized for the expenses of said commission, including the employment of expert services and all incidental and contingent expenses, a sum not to exceed $5,000, payable one-half out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 6863, entitled "A bill to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On Senate amendment No. 1: Authorized the appropriation of $5,000 for the expenses of the zoning commission. The conferees agreed to the amendment with an amendment authorizing an appropriation of not to exceed the sum of $5,000.

On Senate amendment No. 2: Provided that the zoning commission might make different regulations for the various zoning districts in the District of Columbia, and the conferees agreed to that amendment.

On Senate amendment No. 3: Provided that in the residence districts the usual accessories of a residence located on the same lot, including the office of a physician, dentist, or other person, and including a private garage containing space for not more than four automobiles shall not be prohibited, and the conferees accepted that amendment.

CARL E. MAPES,
B. K. FOCHT,
BEN JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the Senate added three amendments to the bill as it passed the House, two of them being more in the nature of regulations than anything else. One amendment provided that in making the different zones in the District different regulations might be made for the different zones. Another provided that no regulations made by the zoning commission should prevent the usual appurtenances going with a house and lot, such as a garage, and so forth. The third amendment appropriated $5,000 to meet the expenses of the commission, for expert services, clerical work, and so forth. The House conferees accepted the first two amendments that I have mentioned, and the amendment making the appropriation was changed so as to authorize not to exceed $5,000 of appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

RETURN OF THE RAILROADS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have received telegrams this morning from 52 business men living in the State of Michigan expressing the hope that the President would sign the railroad bill, and asking Congress to see to it that the railroads are immediately returned to their owners. I ask unanimous consent to insert these telegrams in the RECORD.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the resolution respecting the bonus to soldiers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the national memorial, for which a million dollars has been raised, to men who lost their lives in the late war, the memorial to be erected on ground given by Congress to the association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the resolution passed this afternoon with respect to granting a bonus to soldiers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair. The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Quartermaster General: Chief clerk, $2,750; principal clerks—5 at $2,250 each; 3 at $2,000 each; clerks—15 of class 4, 29 of class 3, 50 of class 2, 93 of class 1, 39 at $1,000 each, 10 at $900 each; draftsmen—3 at $1,800 each, 7 at $1,600 each; 5 at $1,400 each; hydraulic and sanitary engineer, $2,000; civil engineer, $1,800; electrical engineer, $2,000; electrical and mechanical engineer, $2,250; marine engineer, $3,500; sanitary and heating engineer, $1,800; 6 messengers; 14 assistant messengers; 12 laborers; laborer, $600; in all, $383,590: Provided, That immediately following the approval of this act the purchase service and the storage service in the Office of the Quartermaster General, Director of Purchase and Storage, shall be consolidated, together with their personnel, equipment, books, papers, and records, and thereafter these two services shall be administered by the Quartermaster General as the "Supplies Division."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso beginning with the word "Provided," in line 4, page 77, and ending with the word "division," in line 11 of the same page. It is legislation on an appropriation bill and does not come within the Holman rule, because it does not carry on its face evidence that it is a saving or a reduction of appropriation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, under the Holman rule it is in the province of the Chair to look to the law as it now stands to determine whether or not the provision proposed comes within the rule, with reference to the reduction of expenditures or a reduction in the number of officers or in their salaries. The law as it now stands provides for the office of Quartermaster General 59 clerks, at $1,000 each. The law as it is proposed provides for 39 clerks, at $1,000 each. The proviso against which the point of order is made is a part of this entire clause. I think it is a fair presumption that the reduction that is made, and which is patent upon its face, is due to the provision which requires the consolidation of these departments. It was for the purpose of reducing or making it possible to reduce not only the 20 employees that are reduced by reason of this provision, but to enable this department for the fiscal year 1921 to reduce at least 30 per cent of the employees now engaged therein. It will result by reason of this consolidation in the removal of those officers who are now engaged in duplicating work. It will result not only in that, but will eliminate innumerable delays and inefficiency. Very full hearings were had upon this subject, and not only is it the opinion of the Quartermaster General that this reduction may be made if this consolidation is had, but it is likewise the opinion of the Inspector General and the opinion of the experts who are in a position to know the possibility of that reduction; and they all agree with the report of the Bureau of Efficiency that it would result in a saving of many millions of dollars to the Government of the United States. For the very purpose of bringing this within the rule we, in this proviso, made it manifest that it will result in a reduction. We have reduced the number of statutory employees, and I think it is fair to say to the committee, in order that they may know what prompted us in doing this, that by reason of this proposed consolidation we were able to reduce, and it had much to do with our reduction in the general lump-sum appropriation of $2,500,000. Under the estimate for the Quartermaster Corps submitted by the War Department, upon which the appropriation of $2,500,000 is based, there were a great many officers who were provided for in the Quartermaster Corps and in these other corps that were omitted by your committee. That perhaps is dehors the record; but within the record it is perfectly patent that there has been a reduction made in the statutory employees of 20 men at $1,000 each, a net saving to the Government of $20,000 a year. It is by virtue of this consolidation that the reduction is made possible.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any question but that this proviso is subject to a point of order as being new legislation. I do not question the motives of the gentlemen who are members of the Committee on Appropriations, and I heartily approve their action in trying to reduce expenses; but, as a matter of fact, the number of commissioned officers in the Military Establishment is fixed by law.

There are so many in each grade and it is immaterial, so far as the expense is concerned, to the Government whether they are detailed in the Quartermaster's Department or in some other department of the Government, and this legislation would not, in my judgment, reduce the number of commissioned officers in the United States Military Establishment. They do have the right, however, to curtail the expenditure so far as the number of clerks are concerned, and in that I heartily concur, but it does not follow that in curtailing the number of clerks that they should have the right to usurp the functions of one of the standing committees of this House that has been given jurisdiction over this character of legislation. I might say further that the Committee on Military Affairs, having given this matter careful consideration, in its judgment will bring in a bill in a few days accomplishing the very purpose which the gentleman from Indiana intends to accomplish in this roundabout way. In the interest of orderly procedure, if nothing more, this legislation ought not to be attached to an appropriation bill and I hope the point of order will be sustained.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the Chair will recall yesterday in making a ruling as to the application of the Holman Rule that the Chair said, in connection with his decision of a point of order upon this question, that the Chair was not permitted to guess; that it must be plain from the section that it was germane and that it result in a saving. Now, the gentleman seeks to bring it within that ruling by saying that it is plain by referring to the law that gives so many clerks to this place and so many to the other, but he has made no reference whatever to the military side of this question, and I dare say, notwithstanding the wonderful hearings he has had upon this subject, he could not really tell this House how many men there were in these branches of the service, whether or not the consolidation was increasing or decreasing the number of men who are to perform the service. Now, in functioning from a military point of view certain rules of procedure are followed that are not followed in civil life. In functioning it is very probable that in putting these branches of the service together, while you may use a less number of clerks for the civilian work, that you would increase the work for the Army itself, and in that way increase the cost instead of reducing it. And because of that situation, and because it makes it necessary for the Chair to guess upon this subject, the point of order must be sustained and not rob the Committee on Military Affairs of the duty of legislating for the military affairs of this country, and particularly just on the eve of the bringing in of a bill which has been ordered reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and which will be in this week. I therefore insist upon the point of order and I ask for a ruling.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, in reply to one statement made by the gentleman from New York, I want to call the attention of the committee thereto. He said that this proposed limitation would not decrease the expense of the Quartermaster Department, because if we take out the civilian clerks, which, he admits, would decrease the expense by consolidating these two branches, he said officers of the Military Establishment would have to be detailed to do this work, at an increased expense. The Chair well knows that the pay of officers of the Military Establishment is not affected whether they are doing arduous and laborious work or whether they are sitting idle. The expense is the same, and they can be detailed to Washington or elsewhere. The purpose of this committee is not to deal with the officers of this Military Establishment or their detail, other than to bring the two deparments together under one head and increase efficiency and decrease the expenditures of the civil personnel of these two branches, and it seems to me clearly that the committee is within its right, under the rules of this House, in proposing this reduction of expenses, so far as the civilian clerks in these two branches are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. This is, of course, legislation. It may be good legislation and it might possibly save expenses, but the Chair sees nothing in this proviso that indicates on its face that the necessary result will be to retrench expenditures or reduce the number and salary of officers of the United States. To qualify under the Holman rule, this item would have clearly to show upon its face that is the necessary result. The mere fact that in another part of the bill some officers or employees have been dropped out does not change this item in any respect.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. May I make this suggestion: It is a well-known rule of construction that an entire paragraph must be construed together, just the same as an entire law. This proviso, with the paragraph, is a reduction——

The CHAIRMAN. But that does not change the question at all. The rest of the paragraph is in order. This proviso is new legislation, and can only be held in order under the Holman rule, and the Chair does not think that it comes under the Holman rule, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry. When this proviso is stricken out, do we then have enough money provided to care for both of these departments?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If this proviso is stricken out, the War Department, in their reorganization, will have to make their cloth fit the person. They will have to cut it accordingly.

Mr. SISSON. In other words, in order that this matter may be taken care of, it will be necessary that the Committee on Military Affairs shall adopt this language?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is right.

Mr. SISSON. Or something like it; if not, we will have to make an appropriation for the purpose to take care of both of these services?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no question——

Mr. CALDWELL. There is no question but what it will be taken care of, but we want it done in a scientific way.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And the other committee will do exactly what we are trying to do here.

Mr. CALDWELL. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Surgeon General: Chief clerk, $2,250; principal assistant librarian, $2,250; principal clerk, $2,000; chemist, $2,100; assistant chemist, $1,600; pathologist, $1,800; microscopist, $1,800; assistant librarian, $1,800; anatomist, $1,600; entomologist, $1,600; photographer, $1,500; 2 translators, at $1,800 each; clerks—14 of class 4, 13 of class 3, 26 of class 2, 36 of class 1, 13 at $1,000 each, 2 at $900 each; engineer, $1,400; skilled mechanic, $1,000; 2 messengers; 11 assistant messengers; 3 firemen; 3 watchmen; superintendent of building (Army Medical Museum and Library), $200; 6 laborers; 4 charmomen; in all, $185,740.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I note from this paragraph there are employed 105 clerks in this department. The paragraph just preceding has something over 250. May I inquire of the chairman how this compares with the number of employees in this department prior to the beginning of the war?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This is just exactly what they had before the war. These are the statutory positions they had at that time. Each one of these departments had additional employees which they obtained under lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. DOWELL. In this bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; in this bill for previous years; and I understand they are employing some of these clerks out of an appropriation they received from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, may I inquire if the list in this paragraph is all of the employees that were in the department prior to the war?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Approximately so, I understand, except occasionally when there were some special appropriations made or some arrangement was made for specific purposes out of some contingent fund. But in the main this represents the number of employees before we entered the war.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire if it is the purpose of the committee to bring these departments back practically to a prewar basis?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and for the purpose of doing it the provisions in this bill, if carried out with reference to the expenditure of money, and if the Committee on Military Affairs conforms to the ideas of the Appropriations Committee as expressed in this bill concerning the necessities of this department, it will reduce the number of employees in the War Department from the present total of about 21,000 for the fiscal year 1920 to 3,500 for the fiscal year 1921—a considerable reduction, is it not?

Mr. DOWELL. Quite a reduction; but upon reading this paragraph and seeing the number of employees I was wondering if the committee had really started toward a prewar basis.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We are making as strong an endeavor in that direction as we know how to make. If we could get the cooperation of everybody along this line, we would get back.

Mr. DOWELL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The services of skilled draftsmen, civil engineers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, may be employed only in the office of the Chief of Engineers, to carry into effect the various appropriations for rivers and harbors, fortifications, and surveys and preparation for and the consideration of river and harbor estimates and bills, to be paid from such appropriations: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year 1921 shall not exceed $50,400; the Secretary of War shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman if they usually carry this legislation in the legislative bill or in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It has been carried in this bill for a great many years.

Mr. GARRETT. The legislative bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, War Department: For purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, including their exchange; books of reference, blank books, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, maps; typewriters and adding machines; furniture and repairs to same; carpets, matting, oilcloth, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges, fuel, gas, and heating apparatus for and repairs to buildings (outside of the State, War, and Navy Department Building) occupied by the War Department and its bureaus; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor trucks and motor cycles, and one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, to be used only for official purposes; freight and express charges; street car fares, not exceeding $750; and other absolutely necessary expenses, including a per diem allowance not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence, $250,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on page 80, line 15, I move to strike out the sum of $250,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 80, line 15, strike out "$250,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee and the chairman to the fact that in this paragraph, to be paid for out of this $250,000, are the following items: Periodicals, newspapers, oilcloth, sponges, and street car fares not exceeding $750. Over on another previous page we find also to be paid for, cushions, wardrobe cabinets, leather for covering sofas; and on another page we find chamois skin, pitchers, lace, powders, tumblers, flower garden; and again the item of street car tickets not exceeding $250, making $1,000 for street car tickets alone. I want to ask the chairman and the committee if we are going to continue appropriating for all of these items of luxury, the great majority of which could be done without by these ease-loving department employees, and are we to keep on paying for these needless luxuries just because the departments place them in their estimates? Now, I take it that the young ladies who are employees in these departments, and the dandy officers, do not need these wardrobes, lace, and leather sofas, and they do not need these powders and chamois skins.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They may or may not need the powder.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to furnish their own powder, and their own chamois skin and their own lace, and I take it that these officers down there in the War Department ought to work during business hours and they would not have time for all these luxuries. They have no need and there is no necessity for these leather-covered sofas down there. We have done away with leather-covered sofas in the House Office Building. Why, I am informed that you will not find a leather-covered sofa in the whole House Office Building now. We are getting along without them. Why can not the War Department do without them? Do the well-kept officers, after their two hours' noon-day lunch, which usually takes about three hours to devour, have to take a buttermilk siesta for another hour on these leather-covered sofas? I want to say that we ought to wake up on this proposition of real economy, and we ought to cut out all of these unnecessary luxuries in these departments.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does not the gentleman believe that if a man ate a three-hour meal he ought to have a sofa to lie down on for a while?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say this, that I have rung up and have had my secretary to ring up department chief after department chief down there, from time to time, along about from 5 minutes to 12 o'clock until along about 5 minutes to 3 o'clock, and it has been almost impossible to get hold of anybody down there except some second or third secretary or some underling. I want to say that I can not come to any other conclusion but that after these long two or three hour meals at noontime, when we are told the chief is out at lunch, these leather-covered sofas are put into use down there for an afternoon buttermilk siesta.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Texas think when he waits three hours he ought to stand up during all that time or have a sofa upon which he can recline while he is waiting?

Mr. BLANTON. This is not a matter of levity with me; it is not a matter of facetiousness. This is a matter of strict business. I am here to represent 325,000 people who live in my district, who expect me to help the committees on appropriations cut out these useless and extravagant appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas has a misapprehension in reference to the kind of powder that is provided for here. It is not face powder for the ladies that he is talking about; it is bug powder, and the only question in the mind of the committee was as to whether or not we have appropriated enough for bug powder. We thought they ought to have more of it and get more bugs out of the department and out of these offices.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will reduce these appropriations and will cut out some of these useless luxuries for the offices out of this bill, we will probably get rid of some bughouse officers in some of the departments and save the people some of these expenses. If this is bug and not face powder, it ought to be so denominated in the bill, which merely says "powder." As chamois skin is used with face powder and not with bug powder, I expect this money will buy face powder.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment. I merely wanted to show the chairman where we are drifting.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the War Department, $23,700.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to return for a moment to page 75, for the purpose of making a technical amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to return to page 75 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, what is the technical amendment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. On page 75, in the item with reference to the Red Cross reimbursing the War Department for auditing the accounts of the Red Cross, the words "American National" should be inserted before the words "Red Cross." I ask unanimous consent to amend by adding, in line 3, after the word "the," the words "American National," and also adding, in line 4, after the word "the," the words "American National."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to return to page 75 for the purpose of offering the amendment indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Page 75, line 3, after the word "the," insert the words "American National," and, in line 4 of the same page, before the word "the," insert the words "American National."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee about the item in line 22 of page 80, "For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for use of the War Department, $23,700"? Does that include all of the buildings that the War Department occupies outside of the war building?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it does not. Twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars of that sum is for the payment of the rent on a long-term lease. There are many other buildings that are rented in the District of Columbia by the War Department, or quite a few other buildings, that are paid for out of the Army appropriation bill. We have provided in this bill, in order to retrench expenditures of that character, that steps shall be taken for the purpose of ascertaining the unoccupied space that may be used for the housing of the war activities. We discovered just a few days before we entered upon the consideration of this bill that they have two floors in the building which they rent for storage purposes on G Street, for which we are paying $10,000 a year, whereas all the material that they have stored there could be stored in one of the buildings in Potomac Park.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire if it is possible, if the proposed reduction of clerks be made, that there will be room in the war building for a number of these offices and if additional space can not be had by reason of the dismissal of a number of the thousands of unnecessary clerks there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have no doubt that that can be done.

Mr. DOWELL. Has this committee control over the rental of buildings, or appropriations for the rental of buildings, outside of the regular war building?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It has nothing to do with the rental of buildings. All it does when the proper showing is made is to provide the money to pay for the rental. I will say to the gentleman that we have sought in various ways to call to the attention of the allotment space committee the waste space that is now in many of the Government-owned buildings, where the activities now conducted in rented buildings might well be taken care of.

Mr. DOWELL. Has this committee any way of restricting these departments in leasing buildings outside and paying any rental they may see fit to pay?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They can not lease any building without authority, except under the war-time act—the Overman Act—under which they could rent almost anything they wanted to; but that will cease when the proclamation of peace comes, if it ever comes.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, may I inquire of the chairman if there is a possibility or probability that a restriction will be made as to the rental of these buildings outside of the regular war building?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They can not rent any building now outside of the established law except by specified authority, and, so far as the committee is concerned, we have nothing to do with granting that specific authority. But if we had, I assure the gentleman that we would restrict it all we could.

Mr. DOWELL. Let me inquire further: A large number of buildings were erected last year for the purpose of housing different departments of the Government. May I inquire if all those buildings are now being occupied by the various departments?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are all being occupied in some manner. But there is not any question in the world that if the proper authorities become active many of these departments could materially reduce their space. I am of opinion that the Director of Finance in the War Department, who has five wings in the Potomac Park building on the third flood, could confine all the activities of that department now easilly within two wings. But they are attempting to occupy everything they have.

Mr. DOWELL. That is what I wanted to inquire about. Is it possible now, with the influence of this committee, to reduce the space in the buildings outside of the buildings owned by the Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This committee has nothing to do with the space proposition. That is the function of a commission on the allotment of space, a commission appointed by the House and the Senate, and it is the business of that commission to look after and to provide space for these activities and to utilize the unoccupied space in the Government buildings to house bureaus and divisions now in rented buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. DALLINGER. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to say that most of this item of $23,700 was for a long-time lease of a private building. May I ask where the building is located?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is at Eighteenth and E streets.

Mr. DALLINGER. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that very considerable portions of the temporary buildings constructed by the Government for office purposes during the war have been vacated from time to time, and I believe that every single Government activity could to-day be housed in buildings owned by the Government. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he knows what the total rental of private buildings in the District of Columbia is at the present time; I mean the total rental per annum paid by the Government for the use of private buildings to house Government activities.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is absolutely no way for this committee to tell what the total rentals are, because of the fact that that does not come within the purview of our jurisdiction.

The Book of Estimates for the last year would tell what it was at that time, and perhaps the gentleman could get the information he desires from that quarter.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman if in his opinion it would not be possible for the Government to house all of these employees in the buildings that it owns, and then assign these leases? Of course, if the Government has a long-time lease, it must pay the annual rental which under the contract it is obligated to pay, unless there is a provision for cancellation in the lease; but is there any objection that the gentleman can see to selling those leases to private parties and having the money realized therefrom go into the Treasury, and then house these Government activities in Government buildings?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I can see no objection at all to it, and I think it would be a good business proposition to do it. I am perfectly frank to say that if the Committee on Appropriations had had jurisdiction over the allotment of space, there would have been a great many removals and consolidations here within the last few weeks. It was discovered to this committee that there is space in almost every one of these temporary buildings erected for war-time emergency. Especially is this true of the Potomac Park buildings, where that immense space is still being occupied in some way by the same bureaus that were occupying it with full forces during the peak of the war, and they do not make any effort to reduce that condition. We have a commission on allotment of space, and if we could just succeed in getting this commission to carry out the purposes for which it was created, I have no doubt it would result in a great saving.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that the Committee on Appropriations, by reducing the appropriations for various departments here which are still keeping up their war-time activities, will make still further space for other departments?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We put a provision in this bill requiring that when they come back before this committee next year they will have to make a showing to this committee with reference to the rented buildings occupied not only by the War Department but by other activities; that they are occupying these rented buildings because they can not get space in the Government-owned buildings. We put in that provision for the purpose of doing all that we could to stop the use of these rented buildings and to utilize all possible space in the Government-owned buildings.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is discussing the Potomac Park buildings and other temporary buildings, which are referred to two or three pages further along in the bill. Perhaps that is the more appropriate place at which to make some observations about those buildings; but if we are to continue the discussion here, I should like the opportunity to say something on the subject.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish the gentleman would wait until we get to that point in the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. That was my idea, to wait until that part of the bill is read, although we seem to have drifted into this discussion here.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will do that.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BEE. I have heard a good deal of discussion about a reduction of the forces in the War Department, and, of course, they ought to be reduced. But is it not true that growing out of the war there are a great many wartime activities which make it impossible to effect a reduction now to the prewar basis until they get rid of the multitude of correspondence that every Member of Congress has every day and that every Member of Congress refers to the War Department, which the War Department must investigate and refer back to Members?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no question about that. I will say to the gentleman that at the time we entered the war, and when it became necessary to provide some new housing for the War Department, the Army building and the Navy building on Potomac Park were built as practically permanent buildings—I suppose as permanent as any that we have—on the theory that after we got out of the war it would take at least 10 years to get back to normal conditions, and that during all that time a greater number of clerks and heads of bureaus would be required for the purpose of winding up these activities than were required at the time we entered the war.

Mr. GARD. Did the gentleman say a greater number each year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; a greater number than we had before the war. That is always one of the aftermaths of war. We have never had a war yet that has not left the Government with an increased number of clerical employees.

Mr. BEE. Necessarily so under the circumstances, in order that the resulting correspondence may be properly carried on.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I believe even after we get back to a peace basis the net result is always an addition to the pay roll of the civil service of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Park police: Lieutenant, $1,900; first sergeant, $1,700; sergeant, $1,580; 54 privates, at $1,360 each; in all, $78,620.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there has been any change of law authorizing this paragraph?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; there has been. The fact of the business is that these seeming increases—and they are increases—are made necessary because of public act No. 94, of the Sixty-fifth Congress, approved December 5, 1919, which fixed the salaries of these officers at exactly the amount for which we have reported the appropriation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What act is that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is an act amending the act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, approved December 5, 1919.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course that bill came from the District Committee?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Which committee had no jurisdiction at all, of course, over the Government officers who are under the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds. It is an odd circumstance, Mr. Chairman, that a man gets his salary increased from $950 a year to $1,700 a year merely by changing his title; and the District Committee, for reasons undoubtedly good to them, but probably without any knowledge of what they were doing, undertook to dispose of the watchmen upon the reservations in the District of Columbia cared for by the Government, and to put those reservations in the hands of policemen and then fix their salaries on the same basis as the salaries of the regular policemen in the District of Columbia. So that we have increased the pay of a watchman for a few little reservations in the District of Columbia from $48,410 to $78,620. Evidently the committee who reported that bill did not at the time know the state of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Did not the gentleman notice that they were called watchmen heretofore; and I wondered by what authority they have changed them to policemen?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The law changed them into police by the bill reported by the District Committee, which includes them in the police of the District. The same thing applies in a number of other cases. It is fortunate, probably, in a way, for the Federal Treasury that the watchman for the care of the monument and dock at Wakefield, Va., who does not have anything to do, for which he gets $300, that the District Committee did not think of him, or they would have called him a policeman and paid him a policeman's pay.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This committee and the distinguished chairman have agreed to so many important amendments thus far to this bill that probably it would agree to another amendment if offered by the gentleman from Illinois to get this thing straightened out.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to say to the gentleman from Texas and to the gentleman from Illinois that we have eliminated these gentlemen from the benefits of the bonus and invited all sorts of trouble on our shoulders in consequence of it. But we felt that it was necessary to do it in justice to other employees.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are now getting double salaries because they were placed in the same plane as the police of the District of Columbia, and if you did not exempt them they would get the bonus in addition to the pay of a policeman of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WASON. They get it for the current year and would have got it for 1921 if it were not for the provision in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This was discussed in the subcommittee, but it was this House that changed the salary of these men. We are subjected to criticism when we attempt to reduce expenses in these departments where the salaries have been fixed for a number of years and the number of employees for a number of years. In this particular case this very House, this body of men here now, increased the policemen's pay and transferred these park policemen and watchmen who sit around and watch the parks—transferred them into the force of the District of Columbia, giving them the same salaries. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois; I think it is wrong. Still, the committee in discussing this matter did no feel like coming back and asking the House to thrash it all over again.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I fully agree to that, and I think perhaps we are lucky that the District Committee did not report a bill to the House including in the police force all the watchmen in the various departments of the Government. Doubtless if they had thought of it and got it to a vote they would have increased the salary of all the watchmen in the departments.

Mr. SISSON. I thought the explanation was proper in view of the fact that the policemen and firemen seem to be in a class by themselves. But that is not the fault of the committee. We did this because we thought it just and fair.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Was it the judgment of the subcommittee that the legislation was wrong?

Mr. SISSON. I would not undertake to say that all of it was wrong.

Mr. GARRETT. I mean that authorizing this particular appropriation.

Mr. SISSON. No; nothing wrong in that, because the act came from the proper committee; they reclassified the watchmen into the police of the District.

Mr. GARRETT. I know that it is in accord with the law, but was it the opinion of the committee that the law was wrong?

Mr. SISSON. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois. I do not believe that all the park watchmen, the men that render service of that kind, ought to have been covered into the police force of the District of Columbia, with the salaries of the beat policemen. I do not undertake to say that in the reclassification the beat policemen have too much salary, but I do not think the park watchmen ought to have been put on the same basis, on the same plane, with the police who perform duties on the beats.

The Clerk read as follows:

Of the foregoing amounts apropriated under public buildings and grounds, the sum of $68,290 shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I assume that this amount, $68,200, is arithmetically one-half of the apropriation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The amount was put in and made necessary by reason of the watchman at Wakefield, Va.

The Clerk read as follows:

Walker-Johnson Building, 1734 New York Avenue: Engineer, $1,200; 4 firemen; 4 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 7 watchmen; general mechanic or skilled laborer, $840; 7 laborers; attendant, $480; in all, $17,940.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The chairman will notice that in this paragraph just read there are seven watchmen with no salaries fixed. Was that an omission?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; by section 2 of this bill, page 152, their pay is fixed at $720 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is a watchman provided for on the preceding page at Wakefield, Va., and his salary is fixed at $300.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. The reason that the watchman at Wakefield, Va.——

Mr. BLANTON. I am not making any comment on that, because we all know why men outside of the District get less than they do in Washington.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is not the only reason.

Mr. BLANTON. All through the bill elsewhere and in the Agricultural bill and other bills I notice that when we provide for a watchman his salary is provided for in a specified amount.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We thought we would save at least a little paper and printer's ink.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, if it is going to save paper, that is all that is necessary for me to know. We should do anything on earth to save print paper, for it is at a premium now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Potomac Park office buildings: For the following employees for the maintenance and protection of the buildings: Assistant superintendent, $2,000; clerks—1 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 4 of class 1, 4 at $1,000 each; 4 messengers, at $720 each; chief engineer, $1,800; assistant engineers—1 $1,600, 6 at $1,400 each; storekeeper, $1,200; chief electrician, $1,600; electricians—4 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each; foreman carpenter, $1,600; carpenters—3 at $1,400 each, 7 at $1,200 each; painters—3 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,000 each; plumbers—1 $1,400, 4 at $1,200 each; steam fitters—2 at $1,400 each, 2 at $1,200 each; machinist, $1,400; 4 switchboard operators, at $1,200 each; 6 general mechanics, at $1,000 each; guards—captain $1,600, 3 lieutenants at $1,080 each, 3 sergeants at $930 each, 30 at $780 each, 30 at $720 each; fire marshal, $1,080; foreman of laborers, $1,400; 2 assistant foremen of laborers, at $960 each; 7 foremen or forewomen, at $780 each; 140 laborers; laborers and charwomen, $130,000; 22 female laborers, at $480 each; in all, $385,330.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have gone over the various items of the temporary buildings with a little care. This particular one I think is not rated as entirely temporary in nature. It is rather more an addition to the Army and Navy general buildings, but from here on in the bill for the next three pages they are entirely temporary war buildings, and I find that the care of these buildings, including the Walker-Hughes Building, on page 83, amounts to the enormous sum of $1,547,000 a year.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that all told there are 5,000,000 square feet of office space.

Mr. TREADWAY. Are there not now about 9,000,000 square feet, according to the testimony of Col. Ridley—5,000,000 of new space and 4,000,000 formerly? It has increased from 2 buildings to 20, in other words.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am speaking now of these temporary buildings that the gentleman is talking about. The buildings under his control have increased until the space now amounts to 5,000,000 square feet.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; so he testified. I would like to comment on some statements made by Col. Ridley. I shall not call particular attention to his testimony because I know that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and his colleagues have gone into this matter very carefully, but I do wish to call attention to the fact that on page 871 of the hearings Mr. WOOD asked the question whether these tables showed any reduction in the amount of floor space, now estimated for, from that in use in 1919 and 1920. Col. Ridley replied:

I can answer that now by saying that the floor space is just the same.

And a little later reference was made to various activities moving out of some of these buildings, and inquiry was made as to what becomes of the space in these temporary buildings which are not fireproof and are vacated. He then replied that the Public Building Commission makes a survey at regular periods, and if it finds space that is vacant it assigns some bureau or office from a rented building to that space.

My point is this: Can not we by making very material cuts in this sum of $1,500,000 for care of these temporary buildings close them up? We are criticized continually upon the ground that we are not cutting down the number of employees. Of course, we will not cut down the number of employees if, to use a slang phrase, there is a continual passing of the buck from the Committee on Appropriations to Col. Ridley, and from Col. Ridley to the Public Building Commission. Can we not get at the source of the use of these buildings and concentrate in such a way as to close them up? For the life of me I can not see why the source of curtailment need not be right here in this appropriation for their care.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield for a moment, I will tell him how the committee has sought to accomplish the purpose that he is now seeking to accomplish. The Committee on Appropriations has nothing to do with rented buildings. It has only to do with the employees that work in those buildings. For the purpose of not only reducing the clerical force but reducing the necessity for space in which to house these clerks, we have so reduced this War Department that next year they will have to dispense with 17,500 employees now occupying these buildings. I expect that by that means we have made it possible to reduce the space.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman feel that as a result of a curtailment of 17,500 employees, to whom he refers, some of these buildings will be abandoned?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They will not be abandoned, then, if those in charge of those activities can hold them.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is exactly what I am getting at.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only way they can be abandoned is through this commission on allotment of space, whose business it is to make periodical surveys of these buildings for the purpose of consolidating the activities, so that there can be more vacant space. That is the only way whereby this can be ultimately solved. If there is only the head of the bureau and six clerks they will still be trying to occupy the buildings.

Mr. TREADWAY. I agree with the gentleman's statement absolutely. Does the gentleman consider, after due deliberation in the committee, that $1,547,000 is an economical appropriation for the care of these various 20 buildings during the ensuing year, beginning next July?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do, for the reason that if we did not make it available for those buildings it would have to be made in some degree and in a far larger degree for rented buildings, and, in addition to that, we would have to pay the rent.

Mr. TREADWAY. In reference to the rental of buildings, when these departments or bureaus move from one of the rented buildings, what arrangement is it then possible to make to curtail the use of that building or the payment of that rent? I understand that the committee has not anything to do with it, but how can we get at that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As far as the rented buildings are concerned, if the War Department has rented the building, and it can find space for the activity in a Government-owned building, the lease being made with the War Department, the War Department could sell or assign the lease.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman know whether any of those rented buildings has ceased to be a source of expense to the Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. We have taken it all away that we have jurisdiction over, as I said a while ago, except one, which is a long-term lease, and the rental of that is $22,500.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then, at the end of the fiscal year 1921, as I understand the gentleman, there will be but one rented building in the city of Washington in charge of the War Department. Is that correct?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. So far as the War Department is concerned, this is the only rented building provided for in the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Where else are they provided for?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Here is the trouble, and that is one of the things that I tried to point out the other day when I was speaking generally with reference to this bill. Because of our diversified way of making appropriations, because of the various sources from which moneys may be obtained, they can pay for rented buildings out of these various sums received from other committees.

For instance, out of the appropriation bill brought in by the Committee on Military Affairs they are renting a number of other buildings. We have no control over those at all.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are renting separate buildings.

Mr. TREADWAY. Can the gentleman tell me how many employees this $1,547,000 provides for? What number of employees for these 20 buildings are provided for in this bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, the number carried in this bill just offhand I could not tell. The gentleman will find in reference to every one of these buildings the exact number of people who are employed in them, but there are so many in them I could not carry the total in my mind.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then, when we come to criticize these various appropriations there is always some other source of leakage somewhere else where the actual blame may rest, and it does not apply at the very point where we are trying to criticize at the time—another argument in behalf of concentration through the budget system?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely, and it always will be until that is accomplished.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is until some system of a budget is provided?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have felt repeatedly it would be the greatest blessing that could ever befall the American Government if by some magic our machinery could be dropped out in one night and some business system adopted the next morning. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I can not do it myself, because I feel I have not the information to make an intelligent motion, but I am in favor of starting right here by cutting off some of this $1,547,000 and seeing if these buildings down there can not be handled with fewer employees than that large sum of the taxpayers' money will employ.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to concur in what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. The chairman of the committee, I note, is threatening to have economy after the expiration of another year from the 1st of July. It seems to me that the place to start is the 1st of July of this year instead——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield? That is exactly where we start.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman is appropriating in this bill for one year beginning the 1st of July.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Of this coming July; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. But in this bill the gentleman concedes he has not economized all he should.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; we do not concede that.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman threatens to do that the year following by making preparations in this bill——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; we do not do that. If the gentleman will read what we appropriated for the same things last year, he will find that we have made a very great reduction here.

Mr. DOWELL. Has the gentleman decreased the expenditure for the Potomac Park office building for this year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I do not know how many hundreds, but we have gone into the thousands in the reduction of those employed in this building. We have reduced the clerical force that are provided for now in the Potomac Building alone more than $100,000, approaching very nearly $125,000.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman is appropriating in this bill for a complete outfit of employees to take care of all the space which was occupied during any part of the war.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; we have not. Now, the gentleman understands we have no jurisdiction over the space.

Mr. DOWELL. But he is appropriating in this bill everything so far as taking care of this building is concerned and giving to the War Department the same space that they had during the war.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; but by reason of the fact of the diminished appropriation we are making it impossible for them to have the horde of men employed they now have in that building. Listen for a moment. When they are released from the pay roll it is going to make more space down there.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, why have the same number of clerks, messengers, and attendants to take care of this building?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, we are not. There is just the trouble with the gentleman. In that one building alone we have reduced the number of employees whose salaries would amount to practically $100,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman answer a further question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. This is the point I am getting at. I do not know how many clerks have been reduced in this building, but I am inquiring about the number of employees to care for the building.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. And the space that is going to be occupied——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have reduced——

Mr. DOWELL. Just a moment. If the gentleman has made the reduction in the clerical force he says has been made, the department will not occupy the same space it did and will not require the same number of employees to take care of the department that it did during the war.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, in our opinion, to the tune of $99,470.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman is making the same appropriation here for attendants for taking care of the department in that building?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; we are not. We are making an appropriation of $99,470 less.

Mr. DOWELL. And that is clerical force?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; that is not clerical force. That is watchmen, charwomen, and everybody that has to do with the taking care of the building.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is the Potomac Park office building now under consideration?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The total appropriation for the current year carried in the bill, unless there have been deficiency appropriations, was $290,420. This bill carries $385,330, nearly $100,000 more, instead of $100,000 less.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to call the gentleman's attention——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no doubt there is some explanation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Here is a deficiency appropriation of $196,000, and another of $19,308, and——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not for this building.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely for the Potomac Park Building.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, not for this one building.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; for this one building.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOWELL. One more question. Under this system of appropriation by the committee how is there to be a reduction if you appropriate for all the employees for taking care of all the space that the department desires to occupy? Have you not a remedy by refusing this appropriation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We would have no justification for refusing the entire appropriation.

Mr. DOWELL. But, when the gentleman states that he knows they are occupying more space than they should occupy, and when he states that he knows they are expending more money than they ought to expend, is it not possible for the committee then to see that this appropriation is reduced and stop some of this unnecessary appropriation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have said half a dozen times that we have reduced it for this one building alone $99,470, practically $100,000. We have reduced it with reference to every one of these buildings until, as I say, in the War Department, from first to last, we have cut out 17,500 employees.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 84, lines 5 and 6, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to tell the gentleman from Iowa what I believe to be the cause of all of this trouble. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who, we will all agree, has an intimate knowledge concerning the clerical force of this Government, the other day told us that we had 40,000 unnecessary, idle employees here in the city of Washington alone. He did not say he believed we had them; he said we had them, as a matter of fact. And there are at least 40,000 of them idle, but still drawing salaries. I will tell the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] why we have them, and why we are going to continue to have them, and why this committee still keeps them on the pay roll. It is because we can not get rid of them by reason of the fact that many departments are afraid to discharge them and the Civil Service Commission is taking on new ones faster than we can get rid of the old ones.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I want to give him some information that he may not have.

This morning I got hold of a printed appeal. It is about a foot wide and is about a foot and a half or two feet long, on great big, thick cardboard, just issued by the Civil Service Commission, appealing to the young men and the young women of this country to take the civil-service examinations in order to get them into the employ of the Government.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just one minute. I want to get this information before the committee. I am glad to see that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] has seemingly wakened up on this proposition, and I hope he will get the committees stirred up on it, because they need to be stirred up.

Here we have 40,000 useless, idle employees, clock-watching all the time, with nothing to do, yet on the pay roll, regularly drawing their salaries and bonuses, and we are trying to get rid of them by lip movement only, and here is the Civil Service Commission appealing to the country for thousands of new clerks to be examined in order to get on the roll on a civil-service status. The commission goes on to tell them what high salaries will be paid and tells them that they will get the $240 bonus, and that the bonus may be changed, and all that, in order to induce them to take the examination. If we have not any use for 40,000 idle ones already on the pay roll, let us transfer them where they may have something to do, and not take on any new ones and keep adding to the list all the time. The papers regularly tell us each month that last month we sent so many clerks home and that we took on so many new ones, and that the new ones equal almost the old ones that we sent home.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. The Republican whip is getting active again. He has the right idea, and his Republican colleagues ought to get in behind him and support him.

I want to show this to you. I have just had my secretary bring me this printed appeal I mentioned, having telephoned for it. Just look at this appeal to the country. That is what the Civil Service Commission is sending out. [Exhibiting circular.] Look at it. Look at the number of positions they are asking to be filled while there are already 40,000 useless, idle employees now on the pay rolls doing nothing. Why, when we built all these new war buildings down here in Potomac Park that run southwest from the Pan American Building, running nearly a half mile in length, on both sides of that avenue down to the Lincoln Monument, we understood when the war was over they would be taken away, yet they are still there, and we are still keeping them peopled with an army of useless, idle employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, now I yield to the gentleman, my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I want to make this observation: If the other members of the gentleman's party were as economically disposed as he is, there would not be any deficit in the Government's expenses this year.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman's own party, that is now in the majority, that has the whip hand or control of legislation, would just turn the matter over to the distinguished Republican whip and myself for solution, we would know what to do, and do it by dismissing all useless, unnecessary employees from the service, and we would send these 40,000 useless, idle clerks home to-morrow.

Mr. KNUTSON. But Congress has nothing to do with the hiring of these clerks, I will say to my friend.

Mr. BLANTON. I know Congress has nothing to do with it, because Mr. Gompers will not let you have anything to do with it. If you were to discharge one to-morrow he would make you take him back the next day or he would put you out of Congress.

Here in my own paper, the Daily Abilene Reporter, is a whole page advertisement, seven full columns of printed matter, that Mr. Gompers paid for last Sunday, attacking me and vilifying me in my home city. Look at it. That is what a Member gets for opposing Gompers. He said he was going to spend $100,000 to put me out of Congress, and it seems that he has begun. Look at that page advertisement. It probably cost him about $300. And already he is having sent from Washington articles to some of the other 67 papers in my district, and he is getting articles attacking me put in a number of Texas papers. That is why Congress can not get rid of them, I will say to my good friend, the ever-active whip on this side of the House. You Republicans in power have got to wake up and you have got to cut these fellows loose, whether their organizations want you to do it or not. You Republicans have got to quit keeping your ear to the ground when they come in and ask you to give them a bonus of $480 a year, instead of $240, for seven hours' service per day. Are you going to do it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, lights, repairs, motor cycle and truck repairs, supplies, and exchange of same, miscellaneous items, printing, and city directories, $200,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I notice in all the items for the maintenance of these various temporary structures we have been referring to there is an appropriation for city directories. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if we could not at least economize by buying fewer city directories for these 22 buildings that are in use around the city? I find that the telephone book makes a pretty good city directory, anyway, but here in this item we have "city directories," on page 84, and we have got "city directories" in many places elsewhere in the bill. Every single building, it seems, carries with it the item "fuel, light, repairs, ground rent, miscellaneous items, and city directories."

Mr. DOWELL. That is possibly for the amusement of some of the employees who have nothing to do.

Mr. TREADWAY. They probably want some of the employees to distribute the city directories. I can not see any other use for them.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It does not necessarily follow that each of these departments has a city directory.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then, why not strike them out?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Wait a moment. These can not be purchased without specific authority. They do not all have city directories. Without this specific authority none could be purchased. They could not buy a single city directory. I expect the gentleman would admit that there ought to be some.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does that refer to the local city directories, or does it refer to city directories throughout the country that they want to buy? How many city directories are there under this appropriation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is not to be supposed that these people are doing nothing but senseless things. It may be supposed that some of the things they do are sensible. Take the Bureau of Statistics in the Department of Labor. They probably need a city directory. None of these items mentioned here can be purchased without specific authority, so that, for the purpose of enabling those who of necessity require these items, they are provided for in this way.

Mr. TREADWAY. Do the hearings of the committee carry any reference to this one item? Does anybody testify as to what they are going to do with all these city directories for all these buildings?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think on investigation the gentleman will find that in this department they have spent very little for books and city directories. In this department I can inform the gentleman that they spent $40.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am glad to get the information. It relieves my feelings considerably.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Massachusetts has begun his serious campaign for reducing expenditures, I desire to ask him if, in striking out the appropriation for city directories, he intends to strike out any appropriation for blotters?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, they make blotting paper in my country, and I do not know that I will take that trouble. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Temporary office buildings: For employees for the maintenance and protection of the temporary office buildings known as War Trade Building, between B and C Streets and Twentieth and Twenty-first Streets NW.; Food Administration Building No. 1 between Eighteenth and Nineteenth Streets and C and D Streets NW.; Food Administration Building No. 2, between New York Avenue and D Street and Nineteenth and Twentieth Streets NW.; Council of National Defense Building, on Eighteenth Street between C and D Streets NW.; Fuel Administration Buildings Nos. 1 and 2, bounded by Virginia Avenue, Eighteenth, and C Streets NW.; Fuel Administration Building No. 3, on D Street, between Twentieth and Twenty-first Streets NW.; H. L. Pettus Building, on Nineteenth Street, between Virginia Avenue and D Street NW.; Archie Butt Building, 1725 New York Avenue NW.; and Corcoran Courts Building, on New York Avenue, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth Streets NW.: Assistant superintendent, $2,000; principal clerk, $2 000; clerks—1 of class 3, 1 of class 2, 3 of class 1; 2 messengers at $840 each; chief electrician, $1,600; electricians—1 $1,400, 4 at $1,200 each; foreman carpenter, $1,600; carpenters—1 $1,400, 5 at $1,200 each; plumbers—1, $1,400, 3 at $1,200 each; steamfitter, $1,400; painters—3 at $1,200 each; 1, $1,000; 8 general mechanics at $1,000 each; assistant engineers—1, $1,400; 3 at $1,200 each; 18 firemen at $840 each; 11 coal passers at $720 each; guards—captain, $1,600, 3 lieutenants at $1,080 each, 12 sergeants at $900 each, 120 privates, at $780 each; fire marshal, $1,200; foreman of laborers $1,000; 2 assistant foremen of laborers, at $840 each; 7 foremen or forewomen, at $720 each; 60 laborers; 6 female laborers, at $480 each; laborers and charwomen, $60,000; in all, $296,760.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to inquire for what purpose any buildings enumerated on page 86 are now used? Reference is made to the Food Administration, the Council for National Defense, and two or three buildings for the Fuel Administration, and other activities, war activities, some of which at least I had hoped had gone out of being before this time. I really think we ought to know for what purpose those buildings are used at present and whether or not there is any chance of closing them up before they themselves fall down, and in that way prevent further use.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would state in answer to the gentleman's question that in the item just passed are included the Commerce Department, the Compensation Commission, the Agricultural Department, the Council of National Defense, housing 380 people; the War Department, Wheat Director, 509 people; Labor Department, 156 people; Federal Trade Commission and Civil Service Commission, 303 people; War Department, 466 people; War Department again, 417 people; State and War Departments, 909 people; and War Department, 440 people.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am glad to get that information. From the gentleman's investigations does he consider that all these various departments to which he has referred need the number of employees he has read off?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say that we have given in this bill the best result of our judgment, and I would invite the gentleman's attention to the 2,858 pages of hearings which record the evidence upon which the judgment of this committee was based. It is wonderfully illuminating, and if the gentleman will read it he can draw conclusions of his own, based on facts rather than on conjecture.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to give the gentleman from Massachusetts a little light on one of these buildings that he has asked about. It is the Food Administration Building. I have a letter from Mr. Hoover that he wrote me while he was here in Washington as Food Administrator in answer to a letter I wrote him making inquiry as to whether it was true, as the rumor had it, that he had paid an enormous sum, running up into over a score of thousands of dollars, more for rental per year for his office building than the lady who had the building under rent was paying at the time he took it over, and furthermore allowing the owner of the building to move out all of the furniture rented by the lady with the building and refurnishing it from top to bottom with new furniture at Government expense. I would like to get that letter into the RECORD in connection with my remarks, showing the gentleman from Massachusetts just how many more thousands of dollars this great Food Administrator agreed to pay out of the Treasury than a private person was paying when he opened up his office here in Washington. I have his letter over his own signature admitting that he paid even more than the rumor charged him with. I want to say that just that one little act alone of the gentleman, who has the reputation of having made a very distinguished Food Administrator, but who has very little idea about proper American economy, would keep me from supporting him for President of the United States, even if he were a Democrat and had resided in this country long enough, because we need an economical President to be elected in the next election to help us pay this country out of debt.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with my remarks, pertinent to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the letter from Mr. Hoover concerning the matter I have just mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letter referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE. I object.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is very familiar with Government activities and offers a great many suggestions here. I should like to ask him if he can offer any suggestion in addition to that offered by the chairman of the subcommittee as to how we can dispense with the use of some of these buildings?

Mr. BLANTON. Close them up. Get PHIL CAMPBELL, the ever-ready chairman of the Rules Committee, to bring in a rule to-morrow morning, just like he brought in a rule this morning, and just like last month he had his hip pocket full of rules, which he brought out every time you fellows over there wanted one—have him bring in a rule here to pass proper legislation to either properly utilize or tear those war buildings down and send their idle occupants home and get rid of them and stop the expense.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will join the gentleman in asking the chairman of the Rules Committee——

Mr. BLANTON. Well, you would have a devilish hard time getting your steering committee to bring in a rule of that kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In regard to the use of these buildings, the Committee on Agriculture every year has to consider the matter of an appropriation for rent of buildings for the department, and during this current year the department has had space assigned to it and is occupying all the space so assigned, and in addition to such space—all available space in temporary buildings being occupied—it has found it necessary to rent about 40 buildings in the city and to pay approximately $270,000 in rents. If there were more of these so-called temporary buildings available and fit for occupancy, the rent to be paid by departments would be less than it is. A number of the activities of the Department of Agriculture are carried on in the buildings which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] would like to have torn down and destroyed. Such of the buildings as are fit for use are occupied and are being put to a good use. They are not all suitable. I have in mind some buildings used by a department that are not convenient or entirely suitable, but the department is putting up with them, very much embarrassed in carrying on its work. These temporary buildings are occupied because they are there and in order to save the Government the expense of renting other buildings.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman from Michigan tell us concerning the use of the great buildings down on Potomac Park, just below the Pan American Building, down toward the Lincoln Memorial? There are about half a mile of those buildings on each side of that avenue. Can the gentleman tell us for what purpose they are used now?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not know the particular purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish the gentleman would go down there and find out. The Agricultural Department does not use them.

Let us take some of those buildings that were built for war purposes and transfer the occupants of some of these rented buildings to them.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have been so busy with real work, taking care of committee work and giving attention to proceedings on the floor, not reading newspapers or preparing remarks like some I have listened to——

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not here any more than I am——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have been so busy doing real work that I have not had an opportunity lately to go down into that part of the city; but I understand those buildings are all occupied by assignments made by a commission appointed by the last Congress, the duty of that commission being to determine which of the buildings are suitable for use and to assign them to the departments which can best use them. I have no doubt that those buildings have been investigated and that they have been assigned to departments that need them and can use them. The committee of which I am a member has had considerable difficulty with the question of rents and of finding accommodations for the many offices of the department. The matter of rent is just now a serious proposition. Our committee has insisted that the department, when it must have space in addition to buildings owned by the Government, should occupy these temporary buildings or other property owned by the Government, as far as possible, and it is pursuing that course; but in spite of all that, as I say, the department is occupying 40 rented buildings and paying $270,000 a year rental for them.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a good deal of interest to about an hour's discussion of this question of surplus space in Government buildings, and I am no more enlightened than I was when the discussion began.

It is so easy upon the floor of this House to deal in generalities, without a specific statement of fact, that I fear it has become such a habit that reform is impossible. One would like to know definitely first as to whether any space is ever assigned except by specific authorization of law.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I appreciate what the gentleman has just stated about the difficulty of getting specific information. As the gentleman reads the hearings, which indicate an honest effort on the part of the committee to get the facts, is he satisfied with the facts that are stated to the committee? I am not. I think the committee are without information, although an honest effort was made to get it. And what I am concerned about is how are we to get the information in reference to these buildings? If a number of buildings erected to take care of the accessories of the war are still occupied, what are we to do? I am wondering whether it is not the purpose of those who are interested in occupying those buildings to conceal rather than to reveal the facts of the case.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have read a part of the hearings, and I confess that the committee seem to be without definite information that would justify them in making wholesale cuts in the appropriation.

Mr. FESS. That is the point exactly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Therefore, rather than cripple seriously any particular department of the Government, they must take what are said to be the necessities of the particular bureau or department.

If it be true that there can be no space occupied save by specific authorization, it would seem to be the function of the committee that authorizes that space to report to the House the conditions that obtain at this time. If there be discretion on the part of the department, I suppose a letter addressed to the department specifically requesting the amount of floor space at the time of the war, the amount now occupied, and the probable occupation for the future ought to bring that knowledge.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman will yield, if you sent out that kind of a letter, it would be very easy to tell the amount of floor space they originally had and the amount now occupied, and they would give you the number of square feet they originally occupied and say that it is all occupied.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. So we seem to be in a position where it is impossible to get the knowledge.

Mr. WASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Yes.

Mr. WASON. In relation to what the gentleman has said about the hearings and in line with what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said, I want to say that your committee, after examining these men closely, found ourselves without absolute definite knowledge except as to the floor space, rental, and so forth, and we took upon ourselves the duty of going and using our eyes and seeing for ourselves. But time did not permit us to make a survey of the whole situation. We got some information which we felt was beneficial, and that was a guide to our subsequent action which is reported to this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. For that reason, gentlemen, I am inclined to follow the committee upon matters in which they have recently striven to give an opinion; their time was limited. They have been compelled to go in the dark, perhaps blindly to some extent, and use their best judgment. Certainly they are better informed upon this complex matter than any other Member of the House can be by a cursory discussion of the question as it has been presented this afternoon. Pardon me for taking the extra time, but really this matter was discussed last year and has been discussed for more than an hour this year and we have gotten nowhere. I wonder if we can not proceed a little more rapidly on the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana who has just concluded says that in this discussion no light had been shed on this question. I shall not entertain the hope that I shall meet the gentleman's expectations in that regard. But I do want to point out one thing along the line suggested by the gentleman from Indiana. We had very little trouble in demobilizing our military Army, but it seems that we are having a great deal of trouble in demobilizing our peace-time army down in the departments. [Laughter and applause.]

I am not charging the responsibility for the demobilization of the Army on either the Democratic side alone or on the Republican side alone, because, while that side has been talking a great deal the last two years about the immense number of clerks in the departments that ought to be sent home, on that side the present discussion has disclosed that those gentlemen have not been able to solve the problem.

I am not making a partisan appeal, because we all know, whether Democrats or Republicans, the public service possesses an adhesiveness that is very hard to overcome. It has been found even to affect Members of Congress to the extent that when they get here they do not want to go back home to civil and private life. One reason the clerks have not been reduced is because every clerk in the departments of the Government solicits his Congressman to take care of his constituent, and when they are threatened with being turned out by the executive department of the Government they beat a trail to the office of their Member of Congress, and he immediately interests himself in trying to get that clerk, if he be discharged, put into another branch of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman said every Member of Congress, and I deny that is true as far as I am concerned.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know whether I used the word "every" in relation to a Member of Congress. I said every clerk trailed to the office of his Member of Congress. I will except the gentleman from Illinois from that. I do not mean to make the wholesale charge, but it is a charge we all know is well merited in some cases. I will not say that the gentleman from Illinois, or even his side of the House, is any more subject to that influence than our side; but it is a matter of common observation that that is true. The gentleman from Illinois is excepted in that respect, and in many other respects, from the common run of Congressmen. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I want to say on that point that the clerks should be transferred to other departments if there are any places in the other departments. If there were no places in the other departments, of course there would be no transference. So I suppose ultimately it rests on this body to determine how many places there are to be filled.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure. That is what I was coming to. I trust the membership will not take it that I meant that everybody undertook to do this, but I meant that it was the natural inclination to transfer his clerk to another department if there should be a place in the other department for him.

Mr. MADDEN. There is another statement which I think ought to be excepted. "Their clerk" presupposes that every Member has a clerk in the departments, and I deny that.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will again except the gentleman from Illinois from that classification and repeat my statement that he is to be excepted.

Mr. BEE. Why has not the gentleman made a general exception of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CONNALLY. I was going to say I would except him from all of the rules that apply to the common, ordinary Congressman and put him above the ordinary run on a pinnacle, where he belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] wanted to know how we are going to find out about these clerks. We hear on the floor of this House from day to day that there are literally thousands of clerks in the departments who are not needed. To-day the gentleman from Iowa said that there were thousands of them down there that ought to be turned out, and yet from day to day we have appropriation bills brought in here by the majority side of this House making appropriations for those very clerks. There may be thousands, and I do not doubt that there are many hundreds, if not thousands, of clerks in the departments who could be spared, and for the purpose of arriving at the needs of the service I commend to the majority of this House a joint resolution, introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], now pending before the Committee on Rules. This joint resolution provides for the appointment of a joint committee of the Members of the House and the Senate, whose duty it shall be to make a survey of this very matter and determine where in the various departments economies may be brought about by the reduction of their clerical forces and by a reduction of the activities of the departments.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CONNALLY. In a moment. Gentlemen on the Republican side of the House admit, as did the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], the chairman of the congressional committee, ignorance respecting these matters on the Republican side of the House, and if so diligent and so studious a Member of the House as is the gentleman from Ohio is ignorant about conditions, then it is not surprising that most Members are ignorant of the particular needs of the various departments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman has referred to a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] with reference to investigating the departments to ascertain whether or not they have more clerks than are necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Have we not now an investigating committee of both the House and Senate on expenditures in every department of the Government?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is the duty of those committees to make these investigations.

Mr. CONNALLY. We have some innocuous, colorless, idle committees on expenditures in the departments, with the exception of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and there we have a very active political organization.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. DALE. Does the gentleman include all of the other expenditure committees in this phrase "innocuous and useless committees"?

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not use the word "useless." I said innocuous in the sense that they are comatose; they are laboring under a certain lassitude and inactivity.

Mr. DALE. I know of one committee some members of which are spending at least half their time every day investigating this same subject.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure. They are not only spending time but they are spending a great deal of money. I understand from one source that there are now supposed to be functioning 93 inquisitorial committees and subcommittees, including those in both the Senate and the House, investigating the doings of the War Department and other departments of the Government. The point I am coming to is that we ought to go about this matter in some intelligent way. The Republicans are responsible, and we will share with them that responsibility if they go about it intelligently and get a commission to investigate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think I seldom have listened to a speech that had as many inaccuracies condensed in the same length of time as the one just made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and I might stop there. The gentleman assumes that the work of Members of Congress apparently is mainly looking after clerks in the departments, and I presume he speaks from his own personal experience or observation. I have been here a great many years, and I never have paid any attention whatever to the matter of clerks in the departments, so far as the individual clerk is concerned and his or her retention or otherwise. I have known few Members of Congress who gave it any time or attention at all. It may be that when a new Member comes here he is worked by some clerk, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] evidently has been; but after a Member has been here a little while he finds that he has something else to do besides running to the departments to have a clerk retained or appointed, and if he has anything at all to do he will have something better to do, because that will not have any effect, besides not being his duty.

The gentleman said there has been no effort to reduce the number of clerks in these departments. Evidently he was not in the Hall when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] stated on a number of occasions that his bill proposes to reduce the number of clerks in the departments by 21,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Navy, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,000; private secretary to Secretary, $2,500; clerk to Secretary, $2,250; private secretary to Assistant Secretary, $2,400; clerk to Assistant Secretary, $2,000; disbursing clerk, $2,250; appointment clerk, $2,250; printing clerk, $2,000; stenographers—1 $1,800, 1 $1,200; clerks—1 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 5 of class 2, 5 of class 1, 1 $1,100, 6 at $1,000 each, 1 $900; carpenter, $1,000; 4 messengers; 4 assistant messengers; 3 laborers; messenger boys—4 at $600 each, 2 at $480 each; in all, $78,830.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. I suppose it would now be proper for me to go off into the cloakroom and coil up on a sofa somewhere, after incurring the legislative wrath and displeasure of the nestor of the Republican side of the House. I should have known that, no matter how I framed my remarks, not because it was I, but because I happen to be not so old in the service——

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. WASON. I want to assist the gentleman and to assure him that when he makes the statement that our colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is the nestor of the House he is inaccurate.

Mr. BLANTON. He is a nestor in reference to information and general knowledge.

Mr. WASON. That is not what the gentleman stated.

Mr. CONNALLY. I might have known I should have incurred the gentleman's wrath, not from my personality but by reason of not having served in the House as long as the distinguished gentleman from Illinois and because of being a comparatively new Member. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I tried in my remarks simply to say that it was the natural and human thing for a Member of Congress to assist a constituent in being transferred from one department to another if there was a vacancy. I do not profess any virtue in that regard myself. I will state, however, to the gentleman from Illinois that I have turned down several applications of the very kind that he mentioned on the ground that the force of clerks had to be reduced.

Service in a great legislative body for a long number of years is something of which to be proud, but if that were the only reason by which a man could claim distinction I take it it would be one necessarily to be scorned. If I shall ever have the honor to remain in this House for a great many years, and during that time I shall acquire the distinction that the gentleman from Illinois possesses, if I shall acquire the skill which he possesses in legislative matters, it certainly shall be beneath my dignity to scorn any Member of this House, whether he is a new Member or any other, simply because he has not remained here until his whiskers drag the ground [applause], or else because he is simply a new man. Service here does not depend upon its length of time. Every constituency is entitled to its representation. In my statement a moment ago I did not attribute blame to the gentleman's side of the House more than to any other, and I did not make the charge that no reduction of clerks had been had in the departments, but I stated that the complaint had been made to-day by the gentleman from Iowa that no reduction of clerks had been made. I appealed to the House to adopt some intelligent method of appointing a commission to investigate so that the clerks could be reduced. I for one, with all respect to the gentleman from Illinois, take exception to his fling at myself or any other Member simply because we happen to be new Members. At one time the gentleman from Illinois was a new Member. At one time he was new to these legislative halls; and but for the experience that he got here, associating with other new Members, he would not be able now to stand in his place, with all of his honors clustering about him, with all the plaudits of the people hanging about his well-merited shoulders, he would not be able to stand here and fling at some Member who is less conspicuous than he, some Member who is trying to serve his constituents faithfully and diligently. I marvel not that the gentleman is not now occupying the station of the Speaker of this House. If the manners which he exhibited here to-day were employed in his conduct toward gentlemen on the Republican side of the House during the days of his ascendency, I marvel not that they resented such conduct and displaced him by electing another to that coveted honor, to which I doubt not during all of these 20 years he has looked, even though at a distance, with longing eye and watering mouth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the very large amount of money carried under the Navy Department for temporary employees in the various departments. It seems to me that here is one of the items that always gets us into trouble, these lump-sum appropriations for temporary employees. I notice, in the first place, that the Secretary of the Navy for his office has $56,600, and then naval operations has $56,700. It is surprising to see how near those two amounts are alike. I believe, unless there is some special reason that the chairman of the committee could give us, that here would be a good opportunity to begin to cut down the appropriations and be absolutely sure to rid ourselves of some of these unnecessary clerks that you hear so much talk about, for as far as I can find out it is temporary employees who fill up the offices and are engaged in work that is least essential. I would like to hear what the gentleman has to say upon that subject, and if it is not possible to cut some of these lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the gentleman, and also for the committee, I desire to state that the total estimate asked for by this department was $1,788,810. The total allowance by your committee was $1,422,920. The total appropriation for the last year was $3,268,922.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have made a reduction in the Navy Department of $1,846,002, as compared with last year. I desire to say in reference to lump-sum appropriations that I agree with the gentleman that lump-sum appropriations should be guarded very carefully. But here is the situation that confronted us: The Navy Department, the War Department, and all the other departments that had these extraordinary activities during the war came before the committee and asked to have transferred to the statutory roll the clerks who were carried upon the temporary roll whom they still desired to retain in governmental employment.

We were of the opinion, knowing by reason of past experience how hard it is to get a man off the permanent or statutory roll, that it would be better to carry in the next year or until we can see our way clear to provide such places for such additions as we may find to be necessary, that until this temporary work is entirely disposed of it would be the part of wisdom and the part of economy still to provide for temporary employment. As I have stated, we have reduced the amount of the expenditure this year $1,846,002.

Mr. MADDEN. How does that compare with the estimate?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As I have stated, we reduced the estimate from $1,788,810 to $1,422,920, or a reduction of some $366,000.

Mr. MADDEN. And if you reduced it about a million more it would not have been far off.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Then we would not have a Navy at all, and I think we still have use for a Navy.

Mr. SNELL. The chairman has struck on the point I had in mind. They are trying to carry a great many of these war-time activities in peace times. Now, I believe that the proportion for peace times for temporary employment of $1,422,000 as compared with the war-time expenditure for temporary employees is altogether too large.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNELL. The only way we will ever cut down the number of these employees is by refusing to appropriate. For instance, the Hydrographic Office is given $100,000 for temporary employees.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state in reference to the Hydrographic Office that we did not give them anywhere near the amount of the appropriation they desired, but that office is doing a wonderful work and must of necessity continue to do it. They furnish all the maps and charts for all the vessels, and they are constantly changing, too, by reason of the new activities in which we are engaging by reason of the change in world conditions, and there is a good deal more necessity for the Hydrographic Department than there ever has been before. In my opinion we cut that department as low as we could possibly cut it without absolutely crippling the present necessities.

Mr. SNELL. It seems that those activities might be cut still further for this immediate time.

Now, there is $10,000 for employees for the Naval Observatory. What more activities have they now than they previously had? I honestly believe, without crippling the departments of the Government, we could cut down these lump-sum appropriations some 50 per cent, and that would give them $750,000 for the present year for temporary employees. And I believe that would then give them a reasonable amount so that they could have all the extra employees absolutely necessary under present conditions, and that is all we ought to do at the present time. One thing the people insist upon, and that is that we must cut down the employees in Washington. It seems to me that this is the proper place to begin, and I do not think the $400,000 from what they ask for is enough of a cut. I fully appreciate the work the committee has done in this matter, only I want to go still further in this direction.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman will turn to page 98 he will see there is a provision for temporary employees in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts for $350,000.

Mr. SNELL. The chairman of the committee says there is practically a million and a half granted for temporary employees, and it does strike me that in justice to the departments and everything else we might cut these down at this time. I would like to see an amendment offered to cut each one of these appropriations for temporary employees 50 per cent.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Before we start any cutting here we ought to have some basis of action. In the first place, before any of these estimates were brought in the Secretary of the Navy reduced the estimates made by the heads of these bureaus to him very, very materially. They wanted, in some cases, twice the amount that the Secretary of the Navy requested that we give them. And I wish to say here, in all fairness to the Secretary of the Navy, he is the only head of any of these departments that was really trying to help the committee to reduce expenses. I think it is fair to say that of Secretary Daniels. However, I wish to say, in addition to that, that the Post Office Department did likewise. With these two exceptions, we received no help from any department in our efforts at reduction.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not the habit of the departments to make estimates a great deal larger than they expect, because they know the committees of the House will cut them down?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that may be true in some instances, but not in all.

Mr. SNELL. And you have only cut their estimates for employees 20 per cent, on your own statement. I believe they could be cut more than that and allow the department to do good work.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If you can give us the basis for that cut, well and good. But I will tell you where it would be absolutely fatal.

You asked with reference to the $10,000 for the Naval Observatory. You will remember that during the war we were absolutely without binoculars. We appealed to the Nation to furnish us with these much-needed instruments. They came from all parts of the country. This $10,000 is for gathering them up and sending them back to the owners, a duty, I think, which should be carried out, because the people supplied us with these instruments that we were absolutely in need of. The largest item in this appropriation is $404,140, for the Bureau of Navigation. That is by reason of a duty imposed upon that bureau similar to the one on The Adjutant General a few weeks ago for the purpose of gathering the statistics and gathering the history of each man who was engaged in naval service and marine service during the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. May I proceed for five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is recognized.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If we were to take and cut that 50 per cent, we would simply deprive them of the necessary clerical force to do the work that we have already imposed upon them, and so it is all down the list.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman if there are not some clerks there now who can do that work without adding these extra employees? The war is over. There should be some people down there who were employed before the war activities began who could give some of their attention to this peace-time business.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In our judgment, even with the estimate given by the Secretary of the Navy before us, we have made considerable cuts. As I say, we cut it even below the estimates submitted by Secretary Daniels himself, who had very materially cut the estimates submitted to him by the heads of the bureaus. We cut it below the estimates of the Secretary of the Navy, who was very conservative, to the amount of $366,000.

Mr. SNELL. What harm would it be to this country if some of this work were not done immediately, if we just cut down to rock-bottom and start it all over again?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish the gentleman would specify.

Mr. SNELL. Well, this information that the gentleman says must be compiled. If that was not done now, what harm would come?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It can be more easily furnished now, when these records are at hand, and when the information of these officers who were in charge of the work can be obtained, from temporary officers and men who have not yet been discharged, who can give the benefit of their information to those who are compiling these items. It can be more economically done now than later on. Years after the close of the Civil War information similar to this was furnished to the War Department and to the Navy Department, and it was almost impossible to gather it by reason of the fact that importance was not attached to the papers containing the information when the war closed, and in consequence the papers were not saved, and many of them were lost entirely and secondary information had to be taken instead. If this information is desired, it would be wise to have it furnished now.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have not injected myself much into this debate, because I am anxious for the early passage of this bill, but I think the criticism made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is an unjust one.

In the first place, the chairman of the committee is correctly stating that the Bureau of Navigation had placed upon it by Congress the duty of keeping the record of every sailor and marine on all our ships and in the navy yards. Now, we would be very derelict in our duty if we did not furnish to this department the amount of money necessary to keep the records of those boys, and I do not think that any man on either side of the House would deny the necessary amount of money. We were simply acting in accordance with the specific wish and will, not only of this body but of the Senate, because that was the law; and it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to carry out the manifest wish and will of the House, as expressed in prior legislation. It is a duty that we owe to the soldiers and sailors and marines. Nobody said anything in opposition to the performance of our duty with regard to the soldiers in the Army. These boys in the Navy are on the same footing. Their records should be kept, and it requires a great deal of work to do it, and we want the record of each of these sailors and marines to be absolutely correct.

Another thing, the number of ships controlled by the Navy has been doubled. The various kinds of craft have had to be cared for. The property purchased during the war has to be disposed of. There are millions and millions of dollars' worth of this property. Shall we abandon this property? Shall we let this property be wasted? Shall we abandon these ships? It would be the worst sort of mistaken economy.

I want again, as I did in the opening of this debate, to congratulate the House and the country in having a chairman who has the nerve and the courage that this chairman has, because he has fearlessly used the paring knife; and if he is to be criticized and if I am to be criticized, it may be that we have cut a little too deeply in some places.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. How many clerks and employees have you cut out of the Navy Department?

Mr. SISSON. I can not tell you the exact number. I do not carry those things in my head. But I think the gentleman's criticism is not founded upon facts or knowledge. It is a criticism made without having an iota of information. Yet we spent months in getting the facts upon which we based our action. In view of the fact that your chairman has acted with so much courage and patriotism, I do not think it is becoming on the part of gentlemen on that side of the House to criticize the chairman of your committee on your side of the House, who worked patiently and who remained here when others of you were taking holidays during the Christmas time while he was here doing his duty by the House, by the country, and by the Treasury.

And whatever else may be said, if any economy has been practiced in this bill he is entitled to infinitely more credit for it than any other Member on that side of the House, even including the subcommittee members with him. He has been patient, laborious, and courageous in doing his duty, and I want to congratulate the country again upon the kind of work that he has done, and upon the kind of public servant that it has in the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we are halfway through this bill. We have been discussing it for a week. I am wondering if it is so important to discuss these matters out of order that it is necessary to discuss them further now before we go on with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman, as usual, is accommodating.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Just before the gentleman came in we used the last two or three hours in discussing the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I should like to hear the bill read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, oil, grease, pipe, wire, and other materials needed for the maintenance and repair of boilers, engines, heating apparatus, electric lighting and power plant, and water-supply system; purchase and maintenance of teams; maintenance, repair, exchange, or operation of motor truck or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles; material for boxing nautical instruments for transportation; paints, telegraph and telephone service, and incidental labor, $12,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to consume time unduly and I do not want to be cautioned by the floor leader, because I have not taken a minute on this bill. I also want to be in unison with the spirit of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] in what he said about the efforts to reduce the expenditures. What I am about to say is no criticism of the committee. I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee. I think the effort to reduce expenditures is very creditable and that it merits the approval of the House. There is a situation, however, that is distressing everybody. I am sure that this committee have tried to cut at every place they can, because there are places where cuts have been made that many Members wish were not necessary, cuts of established institutions like the library. I think the committee in their effort to cut down to bedrock are jusified even in that.

Now, here is the thing to which I call the attention of the membership of this Committee of the Whole. This bill is just about four times the size of the bill before the war. I want that fact to have its full significance. I read Prof. Seligman's observations upon the estimates of the Treasury Department for next year. Without including in those estimates any provision for the railways, without including in the estimates anything in the way of a soldier bonus which might come, but including the sinking fund of $287,000,000, the estimates for next year are $4,889,000,000. That is over four times what the estimates were prior to the war. If you take this bill and compare it with the appropriations for 1914 it carries nearly four times what that bill carried. Now, here is the problem which I wish to present to this committee. I do not know how we are going to cure it. Is it true that two years after the war is over we have accepted a scale of expenditure that is four times the scale of expenditure before the war? Is that to be permanent? If it is there is positively no hope of any reduction of taxation and we are going to continue the war basis of taxation after the war is over. I appreciate the efforts of this committee to cut. As I said before, they have cut in places where it hurt, and I have wondered whether it could not be avoided. But, gentlemen, this increase of expenditures is bewildering. Is it true that there is no possibility of getting anywhere near to the normal basis prior to the war, or are we in these appropriations lifting the normal standard of cost level to a place where it will be permanent and not at all reduced? The committee will recognize that the lump-sum appropriation is the source of this danger.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Will my friend yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. The trouble that your committee is going to have is not in reducing the scale of wages. The trouble is going to be to prevent the scale of wages being raised, because the Reclassification Commission is going to ask for very radical increases in the general scale of wages paid to Government employees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FESS. I was aware of that statement, and if we read the editorial comment upon the dealings of Congress with the departments we find that we are criticized for our so-called niggardly policy. That is the way they put it—the niggardly policy of the Government toward the Navy Department and toward the War Department.

Now, gentlemen, if it means that, if we are to set the cost of the Government according to this war scale, we know that that war scale will be permanent. If that is to be made permanent, the cost to the Government to run these Government institutions is going to be four times what it was before the war opened. It is not fair to this Congress to be criticized as adopting a niggardly policy to our service when we are trying to prevent saddling on the Government four times the burden of taxation we had prior to the war. That came to us in this way: The War Department and the Navy Department and various governmental departments were given lump sums without any limitation as to salaries, and they shoved the salaries up abnormally.

I will state to my friend from Mississippi—what he will recall—that out of the Congressional Library was taken an assistant and put into the War Department and given a salary one-half greater than the chief in the library under whom he was serving while he was in the library. That was the order of shoving up the cost to the Government, and now we are told that we must make that standard permanent. If it be so there is no hope for any reduction of taxation. While I commend the committee for its effort to cut, and it has done it splendidly, the fact still remains that here is four times the expenditure in this bill of the last bill preceding the war.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, your committee has not sanctioned any salary of that kind.

Mr. FESS. I am aware of that, but I wanted to call the attention of the committee, not because the committee does not know it, but the country demands, on the one hand, that we reduce taxes and, on the other hand, that we deal with the Government service more generously. It is simply contradictory.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say in answer to the gentleman and for the benefit of the House that this committee in this bill has made a heroic effort to get back as near as possible to the amount carried in this bill before the war.

This bill in 1916, before we got into the war, carried $36,910,799. This bill carries $103,650,016, or an increase as compared with 1916 of $66,739,000.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there are three items in this bill that make up $52,000,000 of this extra amount that we did not have anything to do with before we got into the war, that have been imposed upon us by reason and in consequence of the war. It carries $36,000,000 more for the Internal Revenue Bureau than was carried before the war, made necessary by recent legislation passed by this Congress the enforcement of which is placed upon the Internal Revenue Department. For the War Risk Bureau we carry an item of $11,000,000 that was not carried before, because there was no such bureau before the war. For the Census Bureau we carry in this bill $5,000,000 that was not carried for a period of 10 years before this time, making a total of $52,000,000. The difference between the amount of the prewar bill and this is $14,000,000. We have decreased this bill as compared with the war bill passed for this same service $23,000,000. We have decreased the estimates submitted by the various departments to your committee $18,000,000. If all the committees will be as active in trying to get back to the normal basis when providing for these activities which came to us as necessities of the war and in consequence of the war, they will get back some time to something near our prewar normal.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will yield, there were $10,000,000 carried in the current appropriation for the census.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Fifteen million dollars.

Mr. SISSON. And $5,000,000 this year; so that, as the gentleman from Indiana states, we have got this bill down within $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 of what it was before the war, notwithstanding the fact of the enormous activities growing out of the war which we have not got rid of. I want to call my friend's attention to the fact that the bill did not carry the bonus of $240.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is not a definite appropriation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana refers to the legislative bill for 1916 as the last bill before the war. It should have been the fiscal year of 1917, because that was the last legislative law passed before the war, and it was $2,000,000 more than the act of 1916.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wanted to be conservative. I ask unanimous consent to insert this table as a part of my remarks, because it is very illuminating, showing where the increases are.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to insert the table referred to in his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The table referred to is as follows:

Recapitulation showing appropriations for 1916 and amounts recommended for 1921.

[3] Includes $47,010 for legislative expenses for Alaska and $30,000 legislative expenses for Hawaii, for which no provision was made in the fiscal year 1916.
[4] Includes $5,000,000 for the Fourteenth Decennial Census.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The estimate for next year is for $122,240,000; and the committee has cut that how much?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have reduced that to $103,000,000—a cut of $18,000,000.

Mr. FESS. I want to state that no criticism is made of the committee. It is simply the scale on which we are going and how the country has been criticizing the Congress for other things.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Observatory: Astronomers—1 $3,600, 1 $2,800; assistant astronomers—1 $2,700, 1 $2,400, 1 $2,000, 1 $1,800; assistants in department of nautical instruments—1 $2,500, 1 $1,600; clerks—1 of class 4, 1 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 2 of class 1; instrument maker, $1,500; electrician, $1,500; librarian, $1,800; assistants—3 at $1,600 each, 3 at $1,400 each; stenographer and typewriter, $900; foreman and captain of the watch, $1,000; carpenter, $1,000; engineer, $1,200; 4 firemen; 7 watchmen; mechanic, $900; 8 laborers; in all, $60,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the point of order on parts of the paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know how the gentleman can reserve the point of order when one has been made.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against parts of the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this creates three new positions for which there appears to be no authorization. We granted a new position last year, and there is nothing on the face of the paragraph to indicate that it is a reduction in expenditures, although it does omit a couple of positions provided for last year.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to state the point of order that I wish to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has made the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], the chairman of the subcommittee, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order not to the paragraph but against the following items: The position of one astronomer at $3,600 a year, it being a new position, unauthorized by law, the one at $2,700 a year, it being a new position, likewise unauthorized by law, and the one at $2,500, being an assistant in the department of nautical instruments, it being a new position and not authorized by law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make those three points of order because they are new positions created in this bill and unauthorized by law, and the committee had no right to put them in.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the House and of the gentleman to what the situation will be if the point of order is insisted upon and sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. There are three parties waiting who expect to get these soft berths.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is just the trouble. I wish it were possible to keep them in there. We would like to have done that, but this is the situation. Because of a law passed, as I understand, by the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, he has abolished the corps of professors there, and these positions now and for some time have been filled by these retired officers the gentleman is talking about. Under the law these gentlemen can no longer fill those positions, and unless we supply them, by reason of the provision for civilian employees, this department will be absolutely crippled beyond all measure.

Mr. BLANTON. It has gotten along without them in the past.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it has not. The two men who are now occupying these positions are these retired officers that the gentleman has talked about, put on the active list. They go finally upon the retired list, we are informed, at the close of this year, and then these two positions will be vacant.

Mr. BLANTON. I insist upon the point of order. They are new positions, are unauthorized by law, are unnecessary, and we should save this money.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will understand when doing that he is leaving the Naval Observatory in this attitude. Under the old law we sometimes had four of these naval officers whom they could use for that purpose, and I believe they have always had three who were competent to look after this business. If the gentleman will go out to the Naval Observatory and see the vast amount of work they do there in aid of navigation, in the way of adjusting compasses and timepieces on our ships, he will realize what sort of work they do there, and I do not think the gentleman would want to cripple that observatory.

I call attention also to this fact, that these naval officers cost a great deal more money because the salaries are very much higher than the salaries fixed here.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. I was arguing the question to see if I could not induce the gentleman from Texas to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana contend that this is authorized by law?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not contend it is authorized by law, but I wished to inform the House of the situation we will be in.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I insist on the point of order, because I do not believe it is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no other recourse but to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nautical Almanac Office: For assistants in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac—1 $2,500, 1 $2,000, 2 at $1,800 each, 2 at $1,600 each, 2 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each; assistant messenger; in all, $18,420.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order——

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order against the position of assistant in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanacs, one at $2,500, for the reason that this is a new position unauthorized by law. I reserve the point of order for a minute, as I want to get some information. I call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to this fact. I want to know whether or not his committee had this information before it. In publishing this American Ephemeris three-fourths of the information that goes into that document comes from abroad and has come from abroad since the Paris agreement of 1911. Only one-fourth of the total of that document is furnished by this American department, and notwithstanding that fact each year during the last two years this bill has been increasing the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman this is what the committee did. We dropped two places out at $1,000 each because of the fact it requires men of more than ordinary ability to do this work. We created one position at $2,500. That is the situation.

Mr. BLANTON. I call attention right here to this fact: The gentleman is probably aware of the fact, if his committee went into the matter, that during the last year, with four positions vacant, this magazine was gotten out on time. There was not any stoppage in the work at all and the work was well performed. Why should the committee come in now and create this new $2,500 position?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will tell the gentleman why. During the time the gentleman was speaking about with reference to the vacancies we had a number of reservists who were employed there, and they had a great deal larger force than they have now or can have under this appropriation, and I wish to say with reference to the importance of this work that——

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman speaking of the research work now?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I am speaking of the almanac. Every almanac that is gotten out by the State of Texas and every other State is founded upon this Nautical Almanac gotten out by the United States department. It is a very important work and should not be crippled, and it may be we have crippled it now a little, because of the fact we did not give them anywhere near the number of extra employees that they wanted. They did have a great amount of extra force during the war, because of the fact they had assigned several from the reservists corps which are now denied them.

Mr. BLANTON. But in the next paragraph you are allowing $3,000 for piecework.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have always had that.

Mr. BLANTON. Always had the sum of $3,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, they began with only $1,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That was a long while ago.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is aware of this fact, is he not, that not for 20 years has there been any research work published?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, I am not up on all the research work that has been done in the last 20 years.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, there has not been any published in 20 years.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman may be particularly informed about that. We do know they are cooperating, and of necessity there should be cooperation, for all the information this Nautical Almanac contains, between this Government and all civilized Governments.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman know for whom this position is fitted out especially?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I presume it is fitted out for the purposes for which this place is created. We have to have a Nautical Almanac.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not know the particular individual for whom this position is created?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this new position of $2,500, because I do know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The services of draftsmen and such other technical services as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary may be employed only in the Bureau of Steam Engineering and at rates of compensation not exceeding those paid hereunder prior to January 1, 1918, to carry into effect the various appropriations for "Increase of the Navy" and "Engineering," to be paid from the appropriation "Engineering": Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year 1921 shall not exceed $184,000. A statement of the persons employed hereunder, their duties, and the compensation paid to each shall be made to Congress each year in the annual estimates.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals for the items.

Mr. WASON. He has that authority now.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood the gentleman was going to rise after this paragraph.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Let us run until we get down to the Department of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a call of the House and a new shift. There have been about 25 or 30 or 40 of us working here all the afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not tell from what the gentleman says what his request is.

Mr. WALSH. Will not the gentleman permit the committee to complete the naval item? He will recall that another matter interrupted the progress on this bill to-day. There is quite a good-sized attendance. Perhaps we might run as far as the Interior Department to-night.

Mr. BLANTON. I can stay here as long as the gentleman from Massachusetts can.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman might withdraw it for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriations made for the naval service shall be expended for any of the purposes (including freight and expressage) herein provided for on account of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, except for personal services in certain bureaus, as herein expressly authorized.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'CONNELL, continued, on account of serious illness of his wife.

To Mr. MCDUFFIE (at the request of Mr. OLIVER), indefinitely, on account of sickness in family and official business.

To Mr. LUHRING, for 10 days, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. BELL, for three days, on account of illness.

To Mr. GALLIVAN, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. WELTY, for to-day, on account of illness.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Richmond, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 12351) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12351. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C.; and

H. R. 6863. An act to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE TO VICE PRESIDENT AND MRS. MARSHALL.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I suppose most of the membership of the House have learned of the death of the son of Vice President and Mrs. Marshall. Death is so common that we note it but little, save it comes close to us in our own home. The death of a child appeals to all of us, and this great sorrow having come upon them, I thought it perfectly proper to present some resolution expressing the feeling of this House upon this occasion. I therefore have prepared and offer the following resolutions and ask unanimous consent for their consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolutions expressing sympathy with the Vice President and Mrs. Marshall on the death of their son.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That its membership learn with deep sorrow of the death of the adopted son of the Vice President and Mrs. Marshall.

Resolved, That we express to them our deep sympathy in this hour of grief and assure them that their ministration and love has awakened in the American people renewed admiration for the beauty of their home life.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the Speaker to Vice President and Mrs. Marshall.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolutions? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, February 27, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, transmitting report of all gifts and donations offered and accepted unconditionally by the Federal Board for Vocational Education during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

By Mr. WILSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 12786) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to Spencer F. Griffin, of Catahoula Parish, La., certain lands; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1883. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the education commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, urging Congress to take action for the relief of the people of Europe and Asia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1884. By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of the International Iron Molders' Union, of Mansfield, Ohio, against the Sterling-Graham sedition bill, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1885. Also, petition of Eugene Laughlin, of Warsaw, Ohio, and 112 other citizens of Coshocton County, Ohio, favoring the so-called shoddy bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1886. By Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Rev. B. C. Witmore and members of his church, of Hanover, Pa., urging the passage of House bill 1112; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1887. By Mr. DENISON: Petition of William Madison Hicks, chairman, and C. H. James, secretary, and numerous other citizens of West Frankfort, Ill., urging favorable consideration of House bill 1112, providing for the parole of Federal prisoners; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1888. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of citizens of Rockford, Peru, Earlville, Mendota, and Garden Prairie, Ill., opposing the sale of the former German ships; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1889. Also, petition of Capt. Frank H. Billig, of Rockford, Ill., relative to the bonus for the soldiers of the late war; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1890. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of citizens of Dorchester and Boston, Mass., relative to the bonus for Government employees; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1891. By Mr. GOLDFOGLE: Petition of Frank Hollander and Rosie Hollander, Jake Sheriff and Minnie Sheriff, Arthur Hall and Sam Hall, M. Wasser, Joe Goldfinger, Tillie Hecht, Julius Myer, Mrs. Myer, Abe Meyer, Isadore Myer, and Mrs. I. Myer, all of New York City, protesting against the sale of the former German ships; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1892. By Mr. McARTHUR: Petition of the City Council of the city of Portland, Oreg., relative to the protection of the timber from fire, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1893. Also, petition of the City Council of the City of Portland, Oreg., relative to certain legislation regarding roads built to the national forests, etc.; to the Committee on Roads.

1894. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Victor B. Bridgman Post, No. 44, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, favoring the passage of House bill 5766; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1895. Also, petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, protesting against the passage of certain sections of House bill 12610; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1896. Also, petition of J. H. Williams & Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., urging the restoration of the commercial attachés service eliminated by the House Appropriation Committee; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1897. By Mr. SIEGEL: Petition of the New York County United States Spanish War Veterans, protesting against the postal rate from 2 cents to 1 cent; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1898. By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Petition of the board of county commissioners of Gooding County, Gooding, Idaho, and the Twentieth Century Club, of Twin Falls, Idaho, relative to Federal appropriations for the construction of roads; to the Committee on Roads.

1899. By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: Petition of the Sagebrush Post, No. 68, the American Legion, of Brush, Colo., relative to legislation regarding the bonus to the soldiers, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1900. Also, petition of sundry citizens of the cities of Akron and Flagler, of the State of Colorado, protesting against universal military training, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1901. Also, petition of citizens of the counties of Lincoln, Elbert, Kit Carson, and Cheyenne, of the State of Colorado, protesting against the Kahn military bill, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1902. By Mr. WATSON: Petition of citizens of Fairview Village, Montgomery County, Pa., in favor of the Sterling-Lehlbach bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

1903. By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Petition of William G. Carroll Post, American Legion, Minet, N. Dak., urging the passage of House bill 11553, providing for the soldiers' settlement in Imperial Valley, Calif., and means to irrigate such lands; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 27, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou dost know the secrets of all hearts. We can not dissemble from Thee and cloak our sins. We pray that the sanctifying influence of Thy Spirit may cleanse our hearts of everything that is evil in Thy sight, that we may present our lives spotless and blameless before Thee. Grant this day that the service we may render shall be all the service possible through us to our fellow men. May we be guided by Thy Holy Spirit, that our work begun, continued, and ended in Thee may be acceptable in Thy sight. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE ADRIATIC QUESTION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to have published as a Senate document the correspondence relating to the Adriatic question, and I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would the Senator object to having it printed in the RECORD also?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it would be very desirable to have that done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is not usual to have both courses taken, but I think in this instance, it being a state paper, it ought to be done.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I perfectly agree with that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The correspondence referred to is as follows:

JOINT MEMORANDUM OF DECEMBER 9, 1919.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
February 26, 1920.

The text of the joint memorandum signed on December 9 by Premier Clemenceau for France, Sir Eyre Crowe for England, and Undersecretary Frank L. Polk for the United States reads as follows:

PARIS, December 9, 1919.

The following memoranda were signed by Clemenceau, Crowe, and myself at the close of the meeting of the Supreme Council at Quai d'Orsay this morning:

"At the moment when the peace conference is entering what it is hoped may be the last stage of its labors for the conclusion of peace with Germany, Austria, and Hungary, the territorial settlement still remains incomplete in respect of regions which the (?) uncertainty is calculated to affect gravely the vital interests of the countries directly involved and might easily endanger the peace of Europe and of the world.

"Being persuaded that this danger could only grow in intensity if the peace conference were to terminate before an agreement had been reached among the principal allied and associated powers concerning the Adriatic question, the representatives of the conference of America, Great Britain, and France desire to call the attention of their Italian colleague to the urgent necessity of finding a solution. They realize fully the difficulties with which the Italian Government is confronted in dealing with this problem, but it is precisely for this reason that they believe that it would be unjust to all the parties concerned, and in the first place to Italy herself, were they any longer to delay putting frankly before the Italian Government a statement of the position such as they see it after many months of examination and reflection. The friends of Italy therefore feel impelled to make a further effort to reach a settlement which would be the fulfillment of her legitimate aims and aspirations with the equitable claims of the neighboring States as well as with the supreme interests of the peace of the world.

"The three representatives, accordingly, venture to invite the Italian Government to proceed to a fresh survey of the field in the light of the statement which they have now the honor to make.

"The British and French representatives have followed with earnest and sympathetic attention the negotiations which have passed between the Italian Government and the President of the United States. If they have hitherto refrained from tendering their direct advice to the Italian Government in the matter, it was because they had hoped the Italian Government would be able to reach an agreement with President Wilson to which the British and French Governments could readily subscribe. It will be remembered that the British and French Governments have already, more particularly by their note communicated to President Wilson on September 10th, used their best efforts to promote such an agreement which the President's answer to that note gave every reason to hope could be brought about. Though a complete agreement has not so far been arrived at, the points of difference still outstanding have been so much reduced as to justify an expectation that complete accord will now be reached.

"It is well, with this view, to place on record, in the first place, the chief points on which agreement has been reached. This is all the more desirable as it would appear from recent official Italian statements that some misapprehension may exist in regard to matters which can readily be cleared up, such, for instance, as the exact description of what is generally referred to as President's Wilson's line. The points of agreement are, in the main, embodied in the American memorandum communicated to the Italian delegation in Paris on October 27th.

"(1) With regard to Istria, President Wilson had from the first agreed to a frontier running from the Arsa River to the Karawanken Mountains, which widely overstepped the recognized ethnical line between Italy and Yugoslavia and which would have, as a result, to incorporate in Italy, more than three hundred thousand Yugoslavs. Italy's geographical position, as well as her economic requirements, was held to justify this serious infringement of the ethnic principle and President Wilson, anxious to give the fullest value to these important considerations, went still further in agreeing to an extension eastward in such a way as to give to Italy the region of Albona in spite of the considerable additional number of Yugoslavs thereby incorporated.

"Moreover, to strengthen the strategic security of Italy, President Wilson, in agreement with the Italian Government, has indorsed the creation of a buffer State between the Italian territory in Istria and the Serb-Croat-Slovene Kingdom in which some two hundred thousand Yugoslavs, as against less than forty thousand Italians, will be placed under the control of the League of Nations. Anxious to remove any conceivable strategetic menace that Italy might fear from the Serb-Croat-Slovene State, President Wilson has agreed, and the British and French Governments are glad to associate themselves with this agreement, that the so-called Assling region shall be permanently demilitarized. The three representatives would be happy to learn from the Italian Government whether slight modification of the demilitarized zone between the Arsa River and Cape Promotore are deemed necessary to safeguard the security of the defenses on Italian territory.

"(2) There is complete agreement concerning the creation, in the interest of Italy, of the buffer State to be known as the (free State of Fiume?) and its control by the League of Nations. Ethnic considerations would demand that this State, containing two hundred thousand Yugoslavs, should be afforded an opportunity by plebiscite to decide its own fate. In deference to Italy's objection that the incorporation of this region in the Serb-Croat-Slovene State by free act of the inhabitants might create a real menace, it is now agreed that the determination of the whole future of the State shall be left to the League of Nations, which, in conformity with Italian requirements, shall not fail to provide the full measure of autonomy which the city of Fiume enjoyed under Austro-Hungarian rule.

"(3) The three representatives are glad to record their appreciation of the wisdom and moderation which have marked the attitude of the Italian Government toward the difficult question of Dalmatia. They feel that the Italian Government has acted on an enlightened view of their higher interests in officially withdrawing territorial claims to an area where, to enforce them, would have meant permanent discord with the inhabitants of the Serb-Croat-Slovene State and prevented all possibility of friendly relations with them. In order, however, to safeguard every Italian racial and sentimental interest it has been agreed that the city of Zara shall enjoy a special régime. Its geographical position indicates Zara as a part of the Yugoslavs State, but, provided the town is left within the Yugoslavs customs union, it is to be given complete sovereignty under the League of Nations and freedom to control its own affairs.

"(4) The same wisdom and moderation as that which had marked the attitude of the Italian Government toward the Dalmatian question have characterized their attitude as regards the islands in the Adriatic. The Italian Government appears to be at one with President Wilson in realizing the necessary racial, geographic, and political connection of the Dalmatian coastal islands with the Yugoslav State. On the other hand, the possession of certain outlying islands, though ethnically Yugoslav and economically connected with Yugoslavia, are considered by the Italian Government necessary to Italy's strategic control of the Adriatic, and the reasonableness of this claim has been accepted, the following islands being accorded to Italy on a demilitarized status, namely: (a) The Pelagosa group, (b) Lissa and the small islands west of it, (c) Lussin and Unie. These islands are to pass in full sovereignty to Italy, who, on her part, is to make an agreement with the Slav population of Lissa providing for their complete local autonomy.

"(5) Italy is to receive a mandate for the administration of the independent State of Albania under the League of Nations. Attached to the present memorandum is an outline of the form which, in the opinion of the three representatives, such a mandate should take. The frontiers of Albania on the north and east at present will be those fixed by the London conference in 1913; the southern frontier is still a matter for negotiation. In order, however, not to delay a general settlement by such negotiations, the following provisional arrangement could be adopted: Greece shall occupy the territory west and south of a demarcation line, which shall run as follows (reference one million two hundred thousand Austrian staff map): From Mount Tumba, on the northern boundary of Greece, northwestward along the crest of the Nemercha Ridge to the Vojusa River; thence down that river to Teleleni, Mirica, to point 98; thence south, passing between the villages of Lopsi-Martolozit and Zemblan; thence through points 1840 and 1225 to a point about two miles south by east of 1225; thence westward, passing just north of Poljana; thence southeast to point 1669; thence west and northwest to point 2025; thence southwestward to the coast, just south of Asprhyonruga. The triangle of territory from point 98, on the Vojusa River, between Baba and Sinanaj, northeastward to Lake Malik and southward to the Greek frontier and the demarcation line mentioned above should be the subject of later negotiation between the three allied representatives, on the one hand, and Italy and Greece on the other, the three allied representatives acting for Albania.

"(6) The city of Valonia, together with such hinterland as may be strictly necessary to its defense and economic development, is to be granted to Italy in full sovereignty.

"The above six points in their general aspect are those on which, after many months' negotiation, the Italian Government have happily reached an agreement with the President of the United States. They afford to Italy full satisfaction of her historic national aspirations, based on the desire to unite the Italian race; they give her the absolute strategic control of the Adriatic; they offer her complete guard against constitutional guarantees against whatever aggressions she might fear in the future from her Yugoslav neighbors, an aggression which the three representatives on their part consider as most improbable if the lines of a just and lasting settlement are reached. They have even carried their concern for Italian security to the point of neutralizing the Dalmatian Islands and adjacent waters from the northern border of the Ragusa region to Fiume. The three representatives therefore venture very earnestly to urge on the Italian Government in the most friendly spirit that they should reflect on the great advantages which the above settlement, following on that which gave to Italy the frontiers of the Alps, would bring her and the great moral and material triumph with which its successful conclusions would now provide the Italian Government.

"Anxious, however, to give the most sympathetic consideration to every Italian interest or sentiment, the three representatives have carefully examined in all their bearings certain further demands, which the Italian Government have presented under the following four heads: A. Control by Italy of the diplomatic relations of Zara. B. An arrangement by which the city of Fiume the so-called (corpus separatum) should be dissociated from the free State of Fiume and made completely independent, though its port and railway should be left to the free State. C. Direct connection of the city of Fiume (with the ?), Italian Province of Istria, by the annexation to Italy of a long, narrow strip of territory running along the coast from Fiume to Volosca between the railway and the sea, the Italian frontier in Istria being pushed eastward so as to include the whole peninsula within Italy. D. Annexation to Italy of the island of Lagosta.

"With regard to the first point, the representation of Zara, there ought to be no difficulty in satisfying the national Italian demand that this small historic Italian town shall preserve its Italian character both in its internal administration and in its representation abroad. It is already conceded that (beyond such connection with Yugoslavia as Zara shall have by its incorporation in the Serb-Croat-Slovene customs union) the city shall be completely independent under the League of Nations. The city will therefore be entirely free to decide, subject to the approval of the League of Nations, how it shall be diplomatically represented abroad. If, as is contended, the city is completely Italian, its choice will naturally be made in accordance with the Italian claims, and it is hoped that in this way entire satisfaction will be given to the desire of the Italian Government. The Italian proposal to withdraw the city of Fiume, except its port, from the free State, is one which has been found seriously perplexing. The main object of the creation of a buffer State between Italy and Yugoslavia was precisely to guarantee on the one hand Italian strategic security, and on the other the prosperity and development of Fiume. It is not understood how it would be possible for the so-called buffer State to exist without Fiume, and still less, how it would be possible for Fiume to exist except within the buffer State. Fiume and the buffer State are absolutely dependent one on the other, and any arrangement which removed Fiume from the buffer State would put an end to the prosperity alike of the city and of its hinterland. Mindful of the sentimental feeling aroused in Italy by the question of Fiume, the three representatives have always believed that a practicable plan could be devised whereby the city of Fiume within the buffer State should enjoy a privileged position. With this object in view they propose for Fiume precisely the same degree of autonomy as the city had under Austro-Hungarian rule. It is believed that this provision and the watchful and sympathetic interest of the League of Nations will guarantee to Italy full protection for the Italian ethnic and cultural elements at Fiume. With absolute sovereignty vested in the League of Nations and with Italy represented in the council of the league, every Italian interest will be fully safeguarded. Moreover, to separate the city of Fiume from the buffer State could not fail to lead to a protest against the very establishment of such a buffer State, which under such conditions would be inhabited entirely by Yugoslavs. With respect to the new Italian proposal for the annexation to Italy of a long, narrow, strip of coast from Fisnona to the gates of the city of Amann there are difficulties of a practical nature. The reason for which the Italian Government have made this demand is stated to be a purely sentimental one, namely, the desire that the city of Fiume should not be separated from Italy by any intervening foreign country. No doubt such a sentimental reason may be of great importance in the eyes of the Italian Government, but it would appear to rest on a misapprehension of the real position of Fiume. The creation of the buffer State, which is to be completely independent of Yugoslavia, was, among other reasons, probably intended to safeguard the position of Fiume; and the free State of which Fiume must, as indicated in the preceding paragraph, form an essential part is already in direct contact with the Kingdom of Italy not only by sea but by a long land frontier of approximately a hundred miles. Full effect therefore is already given to the sentimental considerations to which the Italian Government attach so much value; in fact, the new Italian plan would not achieve this object so well, as in practice it is to be feared that it would be quite unworkable. The Italian Government does not propose to interfere with the railway connecting Fiume with the north, which they admit is to remain within the free State. This railway runs for a considerable distance along coast, and the Italian proposal amounts, so far as this region is concerned, to cutting off from the free State and incorporating with Italy the line of sandy and barren beach intervening between the railway and the sea. Whilst the injury to the free State, which would in this eccentric way be entirely cut off from its only seaboard, is obvious and unmeasurable, it is not easy to understand what would be the benefit to Italy, unless it be considered a benefit to her that the free State should be so crippled. Nor does it seem necessary to dwell on the extraordinary complexities that would arise as regards customs control, coast-guard services, and cognate matters in a territory of such unusual configuration.

"The plan appears to run counter to every consideration of geography, economics, and territorial convenience, and it may perhaps be assumed that if these considerations were overlooked by the Italian Government this was due to their having connected it in their mind with the question of annexing to Italy all that remains of the Yugo-Slav portion of the peninsula of Istria.

"This question of further annexation of Yugo-Slav territory is raised quite unambiguously, both by the demand for the whole of Istria and by the proposal to annex the island of Lagosta. In neither case do even considerations of strategy arise, for the strategical command of the Adriatic is already completely assured to Italy by the possession of Trieste, Pola, the islands facing Fiume, Pelagosa, and Valona. Additional security is afforded by the proposed demilitarization of the whole free State of Fiume, together with a large zone lying to the north of it, and of the small portion of Istria remaining to the free (?) of Fiume.

"Economic consideration being equally excluded, there remains nothing but a desire for further territory. Now, the territories coveted are admittedly inhabited by Yugo-Slavs. They contain practically no Italian elements. This being so, it is necessary to refer to the way in which President Wilson, with the cordial approval of Great Britain and France, has met every successive Italian demand for the absorption in Italy of territories inhabited by peoples not Italian and not in favor of being absorbed. On this point the following passage may be quoted from a telegram addressed to Signor Tittoni by the Secretary of State at Washington on November 12:

"'Your excellency can not fail to recognize that the attitude of the American Government throughout the negotiations has been one of sincere sympathy for Italy and of an earnest desire to meet her demands. Italy claimed a frontier on the Brenner

Pass, and the demand was granted in order to assure to Italy the greatest possible protection on her northern front, although it involved annexing to Italy a considerable region populated by alien inhabitants. Italy demanded further a strong geographic eastern frontier, and this likewise was granted in order to assure her abundant protection, although it involved incorporation with Italian boundaries of further territory populated by alien inhabitants. Italy demands the redemption of her brothers under foreign sovereignty, and every effort was made to meet this wish, even in certain cases where by so doing much greater numbers of foreign races were brought within Italian sovereignty. Italy demanded complete naval control of the Adriatic, and this was granted by according her the three keys of the Adriatic—Pola, Valona, and a central island base. When all this failed to satisfy Italian claims there was added concession to concession at Sextan Valley, at Tarvis, at Albona, in the Lussin Islands, in the terms of the Fiume free State, and elsewhere. In our desire to deal generously, even more than generously, we yielded Italy's demand for an Italian mandate over Albania, always hoping to meet from Italy's statesmen a generous response to our efforts at conciliation.'

"To the considerations thus urged by Mr. Lansing the three representatives desire to add another argument. In doing so they trust the Italian Government will not credit them with any desire to give advice on questions of Italian high policy, on which the Italian Government will rightly claim to be the best judge. But an appeal to an historical argument may be permitted to the representative of three countries to whom the liberation of Italian territories from foreign domination has been a matter of unwavering concern and sympathy through generations of noble and often terrible struggles. Modern Italy won the place in the hearts of all liberty loving peoples, which she has never since lost by the pure spirit of her patriotism, which set before her people the generous aim of uniting under the Italian flag those extensive Provinces formerly within the ancient Italian boundaries which were and have remained essentially Italian territories in virtue of their compact Italian population. The sympathies of the world have accompanied Italy's advance to the outer borders of Italia Irridenta in pursuit of the sacred principle, the self-determination of the peoples. This principle is now invoked by other nations. Not invariably is it possible, owing to the complicated interaction of racial, geographical, economic, and strategical factors, to do complete justice to the ethnic principle. Small isolated communities surrendered and outnumbered by populations of different race can not in most cases be attached to the territory of their own nation from which they are effectively separated. But the broad principle remains that it is neither just nor expedient to annex as the spoils of war territories inhabited by an alien race, anxious and capable to maintain a separate national State or irridentism exactly analogous in kind to that which justified the demand of Italia Irridenta for union with the Italian State.

"The three representatives venture with all deference to express the opinion that in declining to agree to the incorporation of more Yugo-Slav territory they are acting in the highest interest of the Italian Nation itself.

"From this point of view, the inclusion in Italy of purely Yugo-Slav territories, where neither security nor geographical or economical considerations compel annexation, is not in itself a commendable policy. It would be bound to create within the Italian borders a compact body.

"The three representatives would make an earnest appeal to the Italian Government to seize the present most favorable of opportunities for arriving at a friendly agreement with them for the immediate conclusion and permanent guaranty of the definite settlement on lines which they venture to think fully realize all the legitimate national aspirations of Italy and fully safeguard her preeminent position in the Adriatic. A settlement based on the foundations which Italy, in conjunction with her allies, could thereby lay would have given a means of reconciling interest at present divergent and of offering Italy an opportunity for rendering more cordial and solid her relations with the new nations who are her neighbors and to whom she could furnish such valuable assistance and economic support as her resources and experience entitle her to offer.

"The spirit of moderation which was characterized in the recent attitude of the Italian Government leads the three representatives to hope that this appeal from Italy's American, British, and French allies will not pass unheeded, and that the Italian Government will, by assuring definite agreement with their allies, place on firm foundations the great moral and material triumphs to which Italy's efforts and sacrifices throughout the war have so justly entitled her.

"The United States, British, and French Governments desire to recognize the independence of the Albanian State. They consider that the State of Albania will require, to the extent indicated in paragraph 4 of article 22 of the covenant of the League of Nations, 'the administrative advice and assistance' of one of the great powers. For this task Italy, by her great geographical situation and economic capacity, is primarily indicated.

"The United States, British, and French Governments are anxious therefore to intrust to Italy a mandate over the State of Albania under the conditions implied in the covenant of the League of Nations. They consider that these conditions should form the basis of Italy's acceptance of this mandate and should be in a convention to be concluded between the Italian Government and the Governments of the principal allied and associated powers. The headings of such a convention would be the following:

"One. Albania is recognized as an independent State within the frontiers indicated in the body of the covering memorandum.

"Nothing in these stipulations shall, however, prevent the Albanian State from negotiating with the Serb-Croat-Slovene State such region rectifications as may be in accord with local ethnographic and economic requirements.

"Two. The Serb-Croat-Slovene Government shall have the right to construct and operate railways through northern Albania north of parallel 41° 15′ and otherwise to enjoy full privileges of international purport across northern Albania.

"Three. The right to control the development of the Boyana River shall be vested in the council of the League of Nations, with power to delegate the work to either Italy or the Serb-Croat-Slovene State under proper restrictions. It is assumed for this purpose that Montenegro will form part of the Serb-Croat-Slovene State.

"Four. A commission shall forthwith be established, consisting of a representative of the Italian Government, a representative of the League of Nations, and a representative of the Albanian State, who shall be designated by the principal allied and associated powers, for the purpose of elaborating (a) the terms of the mandate to be intrusted to Italy over Albania and (b) the organization of the future State of Albania. This commission shall terminate its labors within five months from the signature of this convention and will address a report thereon, with the necessary recommendation, to the council of the League of Nations. The final decision as to the terms of the mandate and the organization shall be made by the council of the league acting by a majority vote.

"Five. The commission foreshadowed in the above paragraph shall base its deliberation not only on the considerations above outlined but also on the following principles:

"(a) The freedom of conscience and the free and outward exercise of all forms of worship, the complete liberty in education and linguistic matters of all the inhabitants of the State of Albania.

"(b) The organization, in so far as may be compatible with the tradition of the country and the exercise of efficient administration, of legislative and administrative bodies representing all sections of the population.

"(c) The prevention of the exploitation of the country or its colonization in a manner liable to militate against the interests of the native inhabitants. Under this heading would be included any recommendations which the commission might make as to improvements in the existing system of land tenure.

"(d) The eventual creation of gendarmerie, the senior officers of which may be nationals of the mandatory power. The mandatory power shall have the right for a period of two years from the date of which the mandate is conferred and pending the organization of the native gendarmerie the request for armed forces in the country. After that period the State of Albania shall be permanently demilitarized, and no power shall be allowed to maintain regular forces in the country without the sanction of the council of the League of Nations."

BRITISH-FRENCH REVISED PROPOSALS OF JANUARY 14, 1920.

The following is a paraphrase of the text of the British-French revised proposals, as accepted by Premier Nitti and handed to the Jugoslav delegation by Premier Clemenceau on January 14.

THE ADRIATIC QUESTION—REVISED PROPOSALS HANDED TO THE JUGOSLAV DELEGATES BY M. CLEMENCEAU ON THE AFTERNOON OF JANUARY 14, 1920.

"(1) There shall be an independent State, under the guarantee of the League of Nations, consisting of the corpus separatum of Fiume. The right of this independent State to choose its own diplomatic representation shall be accorded. The Serb-Croate-Slovene State shall be given the town of Susak, it being understood that the railways terminating there, together with all facilities for their development, and the whole port as well, are to be handed over and to belong to the League of Nations which will take into consideration the interests of the Serb-Croat-Slovene State, Hungary, Transylvania, as well as the city itself and will make arrangements accordingly.

"(2) The Free State (of the previous proposals) shall disappear and the boundary shall be so drawn between Italy and the Serb-Croat-Slovene State as to meet the following requirements:

"(A) To provide along the coast a connection by road within Italian territory. This, however, shall be done in such a manner as to leave within the Serb-Croat-Slovene State the whole of the railway from Fiume northward through Adelsberg. Where the railway from Fiume follows the coast, the boundary line shall lie between the railroad and the corridor joining Fiume with Italy.

"(B) A readjustment of the Wilson line in the region of Senosecchia in order to provide for the protection of Trieste.

"(C) The boundary line to be further drawn as marked by the blue line on the map attached. This will leave in the Serb-Croat-Slovene State purely Jugoslav districts.

"(3) There shall be an independent State, under the guarantee of the League of Nations, consisting of Zara, within the limits of the municipality. The right of this independent State to choose its own diplomatic representation shall be accorded.

"(4) Valona shall be retained by Italy, as provided for in the Treaty of London, and, in addition, the mandate over Albania shall be given to Italy. In northern Albania, the boundaries shall be readjusted as shown on the attached map. Those districts of Albania which will thus go to the Serb-Croat-Slovene State will enjoy a special régime as an autonomous province similar to that which the treaty with the Czechoslovak republic provides for its autonomous provinces. The southern boundary of Albania shall be the line which was proposed by the British and French delegations on the Commission on Creek Affairs. This leaves Greece Koritza and Argyrokastron.

"(5) There shall be assigned to Italy the following island groups: Lussin, Lissa, and Pelagosa. There shall be placed under the sovereignty of the Serb-Croat-Slovene State the remainder of the islands.

"(6) All Adriatic islands shall be demilitarized.

"(7) There shall be special provisions permitting Italians in Dalmatia to choose, without leaving the territory, Italian nationality.

"(8) Economic enterprises now existing in Dalmatia shall by an international convention have their security safeguarded."

The following is the text of the cable sent on January 19 by the Secretary of State asking the point of view of the British and French Governments in undertaking to dispose of the Adriatic and Russian questions before ascertaining the views of the American Government:

"WASHINGTON, January 19, 1920.

"Please take up with Mr. Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd-George the question of the way the Russian and the Italian problems have been handled and ascertain their point of view. The United States is being put in the position of having the matter disposed of before the American point of view can be expressed, as apparently Mr. Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd-George have sought only the views of the Italian and Yugo Slav Governments before ascertaining the views of the United States Government. Is it the intention of the British and French Governments in the future to dispose of the various questions pending in Europe and to communicate the results to the Government of the United States? There are features in connection with the proposed Fiume settlement which both Mr. Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd-George must realize would not be acceptable to the President.

"As it was pointed out by Mr. Polk before his departure, the Dalmatian and other questions should be taken up through regular diplomatic channels, and the fact that you are not charged with full powers could have no bearing on the question. As no American official could be sent to these gatherings that could have the same authority as the prime ministers of the three Governments in question, it is manifestly impossible for the United States Government to be represented at the meetings of the prime ministers.

STATEMENT OF THE FRENCH AND BRITISH PRIME MINISTERS OF JANUARY 23.

The text of the reply of the British and French prime ministers to the preceding cable reads as follows:

"PARIS.

"His Britannic Majesty's ambassador presents his compliments to his excellency the United States ambassador and has the honor to state that he has been charged by Mr. Lloyd-George and Mr. Clemenceau to hand to Mr. Wallace the inclosed telegram, drawn up by Mr. Lloyd-George and M. Clemenceau before their departure. In reply to the telegram from Mr. Lansing, which Mr. Wallace handed to Mr. Lloyd-George and M. Clemenceau on the 20th instant, Lord Derby would be grateful if the telegram now inclosed could be transmitted to Mr. Lansing at the earliest opportunity."

The telegram reads as follows:

"The French and British prime ministers have given their careful attention to the memorandum communicated to them by the American ambassador in regard to the Russian and Italian negotiations. As to the Russian question, they had previously sent a statement of their views for the consideration of the United States Government, inviting their consent and cooperation.

"As regards the Italian question, the absence of the United States has never been regarded by the French and British Governments as more than temporary, and they have never lost sight of the American point of view on this question, on the right solution of which the future of the world so largely depends. The French, British, and Japanese Governments have never had the intention of making a definite settlement of the questions raised without obtaining the views of the American Government. They therefore took up the Adriatic question at the point at which it was left on the departure of Mr. Polk for Washington. Signor Nitti transmitted certain proposals in modification of the joint memorandum handed to Signor Scialoja by the request from the United States, France, and Great Britain on December 9, 1919. On the assembly of the conference in Paris a fortnight ago M. Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd-George immediately resumed negotiations between the Italian Government and the representatives of Jugo-Slavia, and finally arrived at what they considered an arrangement which was the best available reconciliation of the Italian and Jugo-Slav points of view. The details of this settlement are appended. The French and British Governments are glad to think that practically every important point of the joint memorandum of December 9, 1919, remains untouched and has now been indorsed by the Prime Minister of Italy. Only two features undergo alterations, and both these alterations are to the positive advantage of Jugo-Slavia.

"1. The free State of Fiume, which would have separated 200,000 Jugo-Slavs from their fatherland, disappears. Three-quarters of these people are at once and forever united with Jugo-Slavia, a source of perpetual intrigue and dispute is done away with; and if in return Jugo-Slavia has to agree to the transfer of territory to Italy including some 18,000 Jugo-Slavs in addition to those already included under the Wilson proposals, the balance is clearly to the benefit of Jugo-Slavia. Fiume becomes an independent State under the guaranty of the League of Nations, and the authority of the League of Nations over the port becomes absolute and immediate in the interests of all concerned.

"2. As regards Albania, an attempt has been made to afford satisfaction to the necessary requirements of all parties concerned. The details of the administration of this country by Jugo-Slavia, Italy, and Greece have yet to be elaborated, but in working to this end sight will not be lost of the feelings and future interests of the Albanian people, and every endeavor will be made to carry out the arrangements in full consultation with them. The French and British Governments consider that the above is a fair settlement of a difficult and dangerous question, and have informed the Italian and Jugo-Slav Governments that in the event of its not being accepted they will be driven to support the enforcement of the treaty of London, which is satisfactory to nobody. Had a plenipotentiary representing the United States Government been in Paris, M. Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd-George would have cordially welcomed his full cooperation in this negotiation, but in the absence of anyone who could speak on behalf of the United States, and in view of the vital importance of arriving (*) the settlement of a question which has inflamed southeastern Europe for more than a year, and which if it is not promptly composed may not only impede the recuperation and reconstruction of two countries greatly exhausted by the war but may lead to war itself, the prime ministers of France and Great Britain felt that no other course was open to them but to proceed to dispose as quickly as possible of difficulties between two of their allies, in close and continuous consultation with both while they were all in Paris together. In doing this they have not intended to show the slightest discourtesy to the United States Government nor have they wished to conceal their action in any way from the latter. They are indeed sure that the President would not have desired them to make a settlement impossible during the necessarily short stay of the prime ministers in Paris by requiring every phase of the negotiations to be communicated to Washington in order to obtain his consent to the proposals when he had not heard the arguments and could not interview the principals concerned. In their judgment, the only plan was to proceed with the negotiations as rapidly as possible and to submit the results to the United States Government as soon as a definite conclusion had been reached.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S NOTE OF FEBRUARY 10.

On February 10 there was dispatched to the British and French representatives at Paris a note from President Wilson, the text of which is as follows:

"The President has carefully considered the joint telegram addressed to this Government by the French and British prime ministers and communicated by the American ambassador in Paris in regard to the negotiations on the Adriatic question. The President notes with satisfaction that the French, British, and Japanese Governments have never had the intention of proceeding to a definite settlement of this question except in consultation with the American Government. The President was particularly happy to receive this assurance, as he understood that Monsieur Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd-George, in agreement with Signor Nitti, had decided upon a solution of the Adriatic question which included provisions previously rejected by the American Government, and had called upon the Jugo-Slav representatives to accept this solution on pain of having the treaty of London enforced in case of rejection. The President is glad to feel that the associates of this Government would not consent to embarrass it by placing it in the necessity of refusing adhesion to a settlement which in form would be an agreement by both parties to the controversy, but which in fact would not have that great merit if one party was forced to submit to material injustice by threats of still greater calamities in default of submission.

"The President fully shares the view of the French and British Governments that the future of the world largely depends upon the right solution of this question, but he can not believe that a solution containing provisions which have already received the well-merited condemnation of the French and British Governments can in any sense be regarded as right. Neither can he share the opinion of the French and British Governments that the proposals contained in their memorandum delivered to the Jugo-Slav representatives on January 14 leave untouched practically every important point of the joint memorandum of the French, British, and American Governments of December 9, 1919, and that 'only two features undergo alterations, and both these alterations are to the positive advantage of Jugo-Slavia.' On the contrary, the President is of the opinion that the proposal of December 9 has been profoundly altered to the advantage of improper Italian objectives, to the serious injury of the Jugo-Slav people, and to the peril of world peace. The view that very positive advantages have been conceded to Italy would appear to be borne out by the fact that the Italian Government rejected the proposal of December 9 and accepted that of January 14.

"The memorandum of December 9 rejected the device of connecting Fiume with Italy by a narrow strip of coast territory as quite unworkable in practice, and as involving extraordinary complexities as regards customs control, coast-guard services, and cognate matters in a territory of such unusual configuration. The French and British Governments, in association with the American Government, expressed the opinion that 'the plan appears to run counter to every consideration of geography, economics, and territorial convenience.' The American Government notes that this annexation of Jugoslav territory by Italy is nevertheless agreed to by the memorandum of January 14.

"The memorandum of December 9 rejected Italy's demand for the annexation of all of Istria, on the solid ground that neither strategic nor economic considerations could justify such annexation, and that there remained nothing in defense of the proposition save Italy's desire for more territory admittedly inhabited by Jugo-Slavs. The French and British Governments then expressed their cordial approval of the way in which the President had met every successive Italian demand for the absorption in Italy of territories inhabited by peoples not Italian and not in favor of being absorbed, and joined in the opinion that 'it is neither just nor expedient to annex as the spoils of war territories inhabited by an alien race.' Yet this unjust and inexpedient annexation of all of Istria is provided for in the memorandum of January 14.

"The memorandum of December 9 carefully excluded every form of Italian sovereignty over Fiume. The American Government can not avoid the conclusion that the memorandum of January 14 opens the way for Italian control of Fiume's foreign affairs, thus introducing a measure of Italian sovereignty over, and Italian intervention in, the only practicable port of a neighboring people; and, taken in conjunction with the extension of Italian territory to the gates of Fiume, paves the way for possible future annexation of the port by Italy, in contradiction of compelling considerations of equity and right.

"The memorandum of December 9 afforded proper protection to the vital railway connecting Fiume northward with the interior. The memorandum of January 14 establishes Italy in dominating military positions close to the railway at a number of critical points.

"The memorandum of December 9 maintained in large measure the unity of the Albanian State. That of January 14 partitions the Albanian people, against their vehement protests, among three different alien powers.

"These and other provisions of the memorandum of January 14, negotiated without the knowledge or approval of the American Government, change the whole face of the Adriatic settlement, and, in the eyes of this Government, render it unworkable and rob it of that measure of justice which is essential if this Government is to cooperate in maintaining its terms. The fact that the Jugo-Slav representatives might feel forced to accept, in face of the alternative treaty of London, a solution which appears to this Government so unfair in principle and so unworkable in practice would not in any degree alter the conviction of this Government that it can not give its assent to a settlement which, both in the terms of its provisions and in the methods of its enforcement, constitutes a positive denial of the principles for which America entered the war.

"The matter would wear a very different aspect if there were any real divergence of opinion as to what constitutes a just settlement of the Adriatic issue. Happily no such divergence exists. The opinions of the French, British, and Americans as to a just and equitable territorial arrangement at the head of the Adriatic Sea were strikingly harmonious. Italy's unjust demands had been condemned by the French and British Governments in terms no less severe than those employed by the American Government. Certainly the French and British Governments will yield nothing to their American associate as regards the earnestness with which they have sought to convince the Italian Government that fulfillment of its demands would be contrary to Italy's own best interests, opposed to the spirit of justice in international dealings, and fraught with danger to the peace of Europe. In particular, the French and British Governments have opposed Italy's demands for specific advantages which it is now proposed to yield to her by the memorandum of January 14, and have joined in informing the Italian Government that the concessions previously made 'afford to Italy full satisfaction of her historic national aspirations based on the desire to unite the Italian race, give her the absolute strategic control of the Adriatic, and offer her complete guarantees against whatever aggressions she might fear in the future from her Jugo-Slav neighbors.'

"While there is thus substantial agreement as to the injustice and inexpediency of Italy's claims, there is a difference of opinion as to how firmly Italy's friends should resist her importunate demands for alien territories to which she can present no valid title. It has seemed to the President that French and British associates of the American Government, in order to prevent the development of possibly dangerous complications in the Adriatic region, have felt constrained to go very far in yielding to demands which they have long opposed as unjust. The American Government, while no less generous in its desire to accord to Italy every advantage to which she could offer any proper claims, feels that it can not sacrifice the principles for which it entered the war to gratify the improper ambitions of one of its associates or to purchase a temporary appearance of calm in the Adriatic at the price of a future world conflagration. It is unwilling to recognize either an unjust settlement based on a secret treaty the terms of which are inconsistent with the new world conditions or an unjust settlement arrived at by employing that secret treaty as an instrument of coercion. It would welcome any solution of the problem based on a free and unprejudiced consideration of the merits of the controversy or on terms of which the disinterested great powers agreed to be just and equitable; Italy, however, has repeatedly rejected such solutions. This Government can not accept a settlement the terms of which have been admitted to be unwise and unjust, but which it is proposed to grant to Italy in view of her persistent refusal to accept any wise and just solution.

"It is a time to speak with the utmost frankness. The Adriatic issue as it now presents itself raises the fundamental question as to whether the American Government can on any terms cooperate with its European associates in the great work of maintaining the peace of the world by removing the primary causes of war. This Government does not doubt its ability to reach amicable understandings with the associated Governments as to what constitutes equity and justice in international dealings, for differences of opinion as to the best methods of applying just principles have never obscured the vital fact that in the main the several Governments have entertained the same fundamental conception of what those principles are. But if substantial agreement on what is just and reasonable is not to determine international issues; if the country possessing the most endurance in pressing its demands rather than the country armed with a just cause is to gain the support of the powers; if forcible seizure of coveted areas is to be permitted and condoned and is to receive ultimate justification by creating a situation so difficult that decision favorable to the aggressor is deemed a practical necessity; if deliberately incited ambition is, under the name of national sentiment, to be rewarded at the expense of the small and the weak; if, in a word, the old order of things which brought so many evils on the world is still to prevail, then the time is not yet come when this Government can enter a concert of powers the very existence of which must depend upon a new spirit and a new order. The American people are willing to share in such high enterprise, but many among them are fearful lest they become entangled in international policies and committed to international obligations foreign alike to their ideals and their traditions. To commit them to such a policy as that embodied in the latest Adriatic proposals and to obligate them to maintain injustice as against the claims of justice would be to provide the most solid ground for such fears. This Government can undertake no such grave responsibility.

"The President desires to say that if it does not appear feasible to secure acceptance of the just and generous concessions offered by the British, French, and American Governments to Italy in the joint memorandum of those powers of December 9, 1919, which the President has already clearly stated to be the maximum concession that the Government of the United States can offer, the President desires to say that he must take under serious consideration the withdrawal of the treaty with Germany and the agreement between the United States and France of June 28, 1919, which are now before the Senate, and permitting the terms of the European settlement to be independently established and enforced by the associated Governments."

REPLY OF THE FRENCH AND BRITISH PRIME MINISTERS OF FEBRUARY 17.

The text of the memorandum signed by the prime ministers of France and Great Britain in reply to President Wilson's communication of February 10 reads as follows:

"LONDON, February 17, 1920.

"The prime ministers of France and Great Britain have given their earnest attention to the communication made to them in regard to the Adriatic settlement on behalf of President Wilson. They are glad that the Government of the United States has set forth its views so fully and with such complete frankness; they do not, however, find it altogether easy to understand the steps by which the Government of the United States has arrived at its present attitude.

"In the first place, they believe that there is no foundation for the assumption which underlies the American communication that the proposed settlement outlined in their telegram of January 20 involves a capitulation to the Italian point of view, as opposed to the Yugo-Slav, and therefore constitutes a settlement with which the Government of the United States can have nothing to do. The memorandum from the United States Government criticizes the proposed settlement on four grounds.

"Firstly, that it cedes to Italy the narrow strip of territory running along the coast as far as the Corpus Separatum of Fiume;

"Secondly, that this strip of territory, coupled with the constitution of Fiume as a free city, under the guarantee the League of Nations clearly paves the way for its annexation to Italy;

"Thirdly, that the modification of the Yugo-Slav-Italian frontier operates to the detriment of Yugo-Slavia in its control of the northern railway from Fiume; and

"Fourthly, that it provides for the partition of Albania. The memorandum of the Government of the United States would appear to have entirely ignored the great advantage conferred on Yugo-Slavia at the same time.

"The origin of the proposal of January 20 lies in the fact that when the prime ministers of Great Britain and France came to deal directly, both with the representatives of Italy and Yugo-Slavia in Paris, they found that nobody desired protect Free State of Fiume, which had always been an essential part of the American proposals for settlement. They discovered that Yugo-Slavia would prove settlement which did away with the "Free State, including, as it does, a population of 200,000 Slavs, and included as much as possible of its territory and population within its own borders. Accordingly the Governments of France and Great Britain, continuing the negotiations from the point at which they had been left on December 7, made the proposal under discussion, including the rectification of the Wilson line and the cession to Italy of a strip of territory running along the shore so as to connect it with the free city of Fiume, the net upshot of which was that Yugo-Slavia was to gain, as compared with the American proposal, an additional 150,000 Yugo-Slavs, while agreeing to the inclusion within the Italian frontier of a further 50,000 Yugo-Slavs in addition to the 400,000 which President Wilson had already agreed to allot to that country.

"As regards the suggestion that the proposal of January 20 clearly paved the way for the annexation of the town of Fiume to Italy, the French and British Governments can not possibly accept the implication that the guarantee of the League of Nations is worthless and that the Italian Government has no intention of abiding by a treaty which it enters into. As regards the railway, the proposal of January 20 gives to the Yugo-Slav State the control of the whole line from the point where it leaves the port of Fiume, which is under the control of the League of Nations. This railway is a commercial and not a strategic railway. Under President Wilson's proposals it is commanded by Italian guns. According to either plan nothing could be easier than for Italy to cut it in the event of war. They do not, therefore, see that there is substance in this criticism, a proposal whose real effect is to transfer the whole railway to Yugo-Slavia instead of leaving it in the hands of the free city of Fiume, which no one desires.

"There remains the question of Albania. They are glad to receive the criticism of the American Government on this part of their proposal. They would point out, however, that their telegram of January 20 states that 'The details of the administration of this country by Yugo-Slavia, Italy, and Greece have yet to be elaborated, and in working to this end sight will not be lost of the feelings and future interest of the Albanian people, and every endeavor will be made to carry out the arrangements in full consultation with them. Further, they would point out that so far from this proposal being made in the interests of Italy it was made in the interests of Jugoslavia. The Jugoslavs pointed out that though, under the proposal of January 20, the northern part of their territory was guaranteed adequate access to the sea through the port of Fiume, the southern part of Yugo-Slavia had no such access, and that the national outlet was to build a line down the Drin River to the mouth of the Boyana River. The French and British Governments thought that there was force in this contention, and their proposal in regard to Albania was designed to enable Yugo-Slavia, inasmuch as Albania was unable to undertake the work for itself, to develop, under international guarantee, a railway, have never been able to establish a settled government for themselves, and as the northern part of the population is overwhelmingly Christian and the southern part similarly Mohammedan, they thought it best to entrust the responsibility for government and development of these two parts to Yugo-Slavia and Italy, respectively. They have, however, agreed that the whole of Albania should be brought under the mandatory system, and they believe that this will make it possible eventually to satisfy aspirations of the Albanian people for unity and self-government.

"The Governments of Great Britain and France therefore must repeat that they find difficulty in understanding the present attitude of the United States Government toward the proposals, and they hope that in view of these explanations that Government will see its way to reconsider its attitude. In their view, these proposals are the natural outcome of the policy of the joint memorandum of December 9, once, with the consent of both parties concerned, the idea of the free State of Fiume was abandoned in view of the absence of the American representatives they had no option but to attempt to settle this question by themselves. It is not, however, the desire of the two Governments to force a settlement which is unacceptable to the President of the United States, and they will therefore not attempt to insist upon its acceptance until they have heard the view of the United States Government on this dispatch. They have confined themselves, therefore, to asking the Yugo-Slav Government to give a definite answer to their memorandum of January 20, since they must know what the attitude of that Government is.

"They feel bound, however, to ask the United States Government to consider the effect of their action. The proposal of December 9 has fallen to the ground because nobody now wants to set up the artifical free State of Fiume. The proposal of January twentieth is objected to by the United States, which had no representative at the deliberations and which can not therefore be in close touch with the changes of opinion and circumstances which have taken place since its plenipotentiaries returned to America. They can not help feeling that a large part of the misunderstanding is attributable to the difficulty of reaching a common understanding. In such circumstances how does the United States Government, which, to the regret of the Allies, still has no plenipotentiaries at the conference, propose that this dispute, which prevents the reconstruction and threatens the peace of southeastern Europe and whose settlement is urgently required, should ever be closed?

"Further, the British and French Governments must point out that the fears to secure an agreed settlement between Italy and Jugoslavia must leave them no choice but to acknowledge the validity of the treaty of London, they would recall to the United States Government that the treaty of London was entered into in the spring of 1915, at a most critical and dangerous moment of the war. In thus entering the war on the side of human freedom Italy made a condition that the Allies should secure for her, as against Austria-Hungary, strategic frontiers which would guarantee her (?) retention by the Central Powers of the strategic command of the northern plains of Italy; had the Austro-Hungarian Empire remained in existence as the ally of Germany the provisions of the treaty of London would have been sound. Relying upon the word of her allies, Italy endured the war to the end. She suffered a loss in killed of over 500,000 men and in wounded of three times that number while her people are burdened by crushing debt. It was clearly impossible for her allies to declare at the end of the war that their signature to the treaty meant nothing but a scrap of paper and that they did not intend to apply the time their bond. They agreed with President Wilson that these circumstances under which the treaty of London were concluded had been transformed by the war itself, the Austro-Hungarian Empire had disappeared, and the menace to Italy against which the terms of the treaty were intended to provide had largely diminished. They therefore entirely associated themselves with the efforts of President Wilson to negotiate a settlement between Italy and Yugo-Slavia, which would be consonant with the new conditions and which was acceptable to both sides. But throughout these proposals they never concealed from him the fact that they regarded themselves as bound by the treaty of London, in the event of a voluntary agreement not being arrived at. The fact, therefore, that when they made their proposals of January 20 they informed both the Italian and the Jugo-Slav Governments that, in the event of their not being accepted, they would have no option but to allow the treaty of London to come into force, can have come as no surprise, and was indeed the obvious method of bringing this long controversy to a close. They would point out that this declaration is not, as the American Government would appear to think, an ultimatum to Yugo-Slav on behalf of Italy. Under the treaty of London, Italy has had to abandon Fiume altogether and hand it over to Yugo-Slav. This part of the treaty is as unacceptable to Italians as is the transfer of Dalmatia and the islands to Yugo-Slav. The declaration, therefore, in regard to the enforcement of the treaty was an attempt to promote a prompt settlement of this dangerous controversy by pointing out to both sides that if they could not agree upon a settlement, which after long negotiation seemed to be a fair compromise between their conflicting views, the only alternative was an arrangement which was less palatable to both.

"Finally, the Governments of France and Great Britain feel bound to reply to the general observations contained in the latter part of the United States' memorandum. They know well the sincerity of President Wilson's desire for the establishment order providing real guarantees against a repetition of the terrible events of the last five years. They are reluctant to believe that the President can consider that the modifications which they have made in the memorandum of December 9 can constitute in themselves a justification for a withdrawal from all further cooperation with them in the attempt to adjust peaceably the world's affairs. They feel confident that the explanations contained in this reply will remove any misunderstandings as to the nature of the Adriatic proposals. At the same time they are deeply concerned that the United States should even contemplate the action to which they refer. One of the principal difficulties encountered by the heads of Governments during the negotiations of peace was that of reconciling treaty obligations with national aspirations which had changed or come into being since the date on which the treaties were signed. It was obviously impossible to ignore these latter aspirations, many of them born during the war, and formulated with unexampled clarity and elevation by the President of the United States himself. It was equally clearly impossible to ignore treaties, in fact the war began in order to enforce upon Germany respect for the solemn treaty she had made nearly 80 years before in regard to the neutrality of Belgium. It is the task of the statesmen of the world to endeavor to adjust national aspirations and ideals, many of which are only transitory and ephemeral with one another and with international treaties. The difficulty of the task, the patience required in order to effect it successfully, the uselessness of endeavoring to enforce preconceived ideas on refractory material has been recognized by the one more clearly than the other, and in his address at the opening session of the peace conference he pointed out how impossible it was to expect imperfect human beings and imperfect nations to agree at once upon ideal solutions. He made it clear that in his judgment the only course before the peace conference was to do the best it could in the circumstances and to create machinery whereby improvements and rectifications could be effected by reason and common sense under the authority of the League of Nations instead of by resort to war.

"Accordingly, not only was the League of Nations established but article 9 was specially inserted in the covenant providing that the assembly may from time to time advise us of reconsideration by members of the league of treaties which become inapplicable and the consideration of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world, thus an essential part of the treaties of peace has been the constitution of machinery for modifying and correcting those treaties themselves where experience shows it to be necessary. The Governments of France and Great Britain, therefore, view with consternation the threat of the United States Government to withdraw from the comity of nations because it does not agree with the precise terms of the Adriatic settlement. The difficulty of reconciling ethnographic with other considerations is certainly not greater in the Adriatic case and does not produce more anomalous results than in the case of other parts of the general treaties of peace difficulties which were recognized by President Wilson and his colleagues where they agreed to the best settlement practicable at the time because their machinery for peaceful readjustment had come into being; also ethnologic reasons can not be the only ones to be taken into account is clearly shown by the inclusion of three million Germans in Czecho-Slovakia and the proposals so actively supported by the United States delegation for the inclusion within Poland of great Ruthenian majorities, exceeding three million five hundred thousand in number, to Polish rule. Though the British representatives saw serious objections to this arrangement, the British Government have not thought themselves justified in reconsidering on that account their membership in the League of Nations. The Governments of France and Great Britain, therefore, earnestly trust that whatever the final view of the United States Government as to the Adriatic settlement may be, they will not wreck the whole machinery for dealing with international disputes by withdrawing from the treaties of 1919 because their view is not adopted in this particular case. That would be to destroy the hopes now entertained by countless millions of people all over the world that the most enduring and most beneficent part of the treaty of peace was the constitution of machinery whereby the defects of treaties could be remedied, and that changing conditions and requirements of mankind could be adjusted by processes of reason and justice instead of by the balancing of armaments and resort to war. The Governments of France and Great Britain can not believe that it is the purpose of the American people to take a step so far-reaching and terrible in its effects on a ground which has the appearance of being so inadequate.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S NOTE OF FEBRUARY 24.

The following is the text of the President's note of February 24 sent in reply to the joint memorandum of February 17 of the prime ministers of France and Great Britain:

"WASHINGTON, February 24, 1920.

"The joint memorandum of February 17 of the prime ministers of France and Great Britain has received the careful and earnest consideration of the President. He has no desire whatever to criticize the attitude of the Governments of France and Great Britain concerning the Adriatic settlement, but feels that in the present circumstances he has no choice but to maintain the position he has all along taken as regards that settlement. He believes it to be the central principle fought for in the war that no government or group of governments has the right to dispose of the territory or to determine the political allegiance of any free people. The five great powers, though the Government of the United States constitutes one of them, have in his conviction no more right than had the Austrian Government to dispose of the free Jugoslavic peoples without the free consent and cooperation of those peoples. The President's position is that the powers associated against Germany gave final and irrefutable proof of their sincerity in the war by writing into the treaty of Versailles article 10 of the covenant of the League of Nations, which constitutes an assurance that all the great powers have done what they have compelled Germany to do—have foregone all territorial aggression and all interference with the free political self-determination of the peoples of the world. With this principle lived up to, permanent peace is secured and the supreme object of the recent conflict has been achieved. Justice and self-determination have been substituted for aggression and political dictation. Without it, there is no security for any nation that conscientiously adheres to a nonmilitaristic policy. The object of the war, as the Government of the United States understands it, was to free Europe from that cloud of anxiety which had hung over it for generations because of the constant threat of the use of military force by one of the most powerful governments of the Continent, and the President feels it important to say again that in the opinion of the American Government the terms of the peace settlement must continue to be formulated upon the basis of the principles for which America entered the war. It is in a spirit of cooperation, therefore, and of desire for mutual understanding that the President reviews the various considerations which the French and British prime ministers have emphasized in their memorandum of February 17. He is confident that they will not mistake his motives in undertaking to make plain what he feels to be the necessary conclusions from their statements.

"The President notes that the objections of the Italians and Jugoslavs were made the basis for discarding the project of the Free State of Fiume. It would seem to follow, therefore, that the joint consent of these two powers should have been required for the substitute project. The consent of Italy has been obtained. He does not find, however, that the Jugoslavs have also expressed a willingness to accept the substitute plan. Are they to be required now to accept a proposal which is more unsatisfactory because they have raised objections to the solution proposed by the British, French, and American Governments in the memorandum of December 9? The President would, of course, make no objection to a settlement mutually agreeable to Italy and Jugoslavia regarding their common frontier in the Fiume region provided that such an agreement is not made on the basis of compensations elsewhere at the expense of nationals of a third power. His willingness to accept such proposed joint agreement of Italy and Jugoslavia is based on the fact that only their own nationals are involved. In consequence, the results of direct negotiations of the two interested powers would fall within the scope of the principle of self-determination. Failing in this, both parties should be willing to accept a decision of the Governments of Great Britain, France, and the United States.

"The British and French Governments appear to find in the President's suggestion that the latest proposals would pave the way for the annexation of the city of Fiume an implication that the guarantee of the League of Nations is worthless and that the Italian Government does not intend to abide by a treaty into which it has entered. The President cannot but regard this implication as without basis and as contrary to his thought. In his view the proposal to connect Fiume with Italy by a narrow strip of coast territory is quite impracticable. As he has already said, it involves extraordinary complexities in customs control, coast guard services, and other related matters, and he is unable to detach himself from the previous views of the British and French Governments, as expressed jointly with the American Government in the memorandum of December 9, that 'the plan appears to run counter to every consideration of geography, economics, and territorial convenience.' He further believes that to have Italian territory join Fiume would be to invite strife out of which annexation might issue. Therefore, in undertaking to shape the solution so as to prevent this he is acting on the principle that each part of the final settlement should be based upon the essential justice of that particular case. This was one of the principles adopted by the allied and associated powers as a basis for treaty making. To it has been added the provisions of the League of Nations, but it has never been the policy of either this Government or its associates to invoke the League of Nations as a guarantee that a bad settlement shall not become worse. The sum of such actions would of necessity destroy faith in the league and eventually the league itself.

"The President notes with satisfaction that the Governments of Great Britain and France will not lose sight of the future interests and well-being of the Albanian peoples. The American Government quite understands that the threefold division of Albania in the British-French agreement might be most acceptable to the Jugoslav Government, but it is just as vigorously opposed to injuring the Albanian people for the benefit of Jugoslavia as it is opposed to injuring the Jugloslav people for the benefit of Italy. It believes that the differences between the Christian and Mohammedan populations will be increased by putting the two sections under the control of nations of unlike language, government, and economic strength. Moreover, one part would be administered by the Italian Government, which is represented on the council of the league, the other part by the Jugloslav Government, which has no such representation. Therefore, to alter or withdraw the mandate at some future time would be well-nigh impossible.

"Regarding the treaty of London, the French and British prime ministers will appreciate that the American Government must hesitate to speak with assurance, since it is a matter in which the French and British Governments can alone judge their obligations and determine their policies. But the President feels that it is not improper to recall a few of the arguments which have already been advanced against this treaty, namely, the dissolution of Austria-Hungary, the secret character of the treaty, and its opposition to the principles unanimously accepted as the basis for making peace. In addition, he desires to submit certain further considerations. In the northern Italian frontiers agreements have already been reached which depart from the treaty of London line and which were made with the understanding that negotiations were proceeding on quite a new basis. It has been no secret that the parties to the treaty did not themselves now desire it, and that they have thus far refrained from putting its provisions into effect. In mutually disregarding their secret treaty commitments the parties to the treaty have recognized the change in circumstances that has taken place in the interval between the signing of the secret treaty and its proposed execution at the present time. For nearly eight months discussion of the Adriatic problem has proceeded on the assumption that a better basis for an understanding could be found than those provided by the treaty of London. The greater part of the resulting proposals have already received Italy's assent. These proposals in some cases affected territory beyond the treaty of London line, as in the Tarvis and Sexton Valleys; in others, the territory fell short of the treaty of London line, as in the case of the islands of Lussin, Unie, Lissa, and Pelagosa—to mention only a few of the many proposals upon which tentative agreements have long been reached and which would be upset by an application of the treaty at this late day.

"The coupling of the treaty of London as an obligatory alternative to the Adriatic settlement proposed on January 14 came as a surprise to the American Government, because this Government had already by the agreement of December 9 entered into a distinct understanding with the British and French Governments regarding the basis of a settlement of the question. By their action of January 14, the Government of the United States was confronted with a definitive solution, to which was added on January 20 a threat to fall back upon the terms of the treaty of London. This course was followed without any attempt to seek the views of this Government or to provide such opportunity of discussion as was easily arranged in many other matters dealt with in the same period.

"The President notes that the memorandum of February 17 refers to the difficulty of reconciling ethnographic with other considerations in making territorial adjustments, and cites the inclusion of three million Germans in Czechoslovakia and more than three million Ruthenes in Poland as examples of necessary modifications of ethnographic frontiers. He feels compelled to observe that this is a line of reasoning which the Italian representatives have advanced during the course of negotiations, but which the British and French have hitherto found themselves unable to accept. There were cases where, for sufficient geographical and economic reasons, slight deflections of the ethnographical frontier were sanctioned by the conference, and the American Government believes that if Italy would consent to apply the same principles in Istria and Dalmatia, the Adriatic question would not exist.

"The American Government heartily subscribes to the sentiments expressed by the Governments of Great Britain and France regarding Italy's participation in the war. It fully appreciates the vital consequences of her participation, and is profoundly grateful for her heroic sacrifices. These sentiments have been repeatedly expressed by the American Government. But such considerations can not be made the reason for unjust settlements which will be provocative of future wars. A course thus determined would be shortsighted and not in accord with the terrible sacrifices of the entire world, which can be justified and ennobled only by leading finally to settlements in keeping with the principles for which the war was fought. The President asks that the prime ministers of France, Great Britain, and Italy will read his determination in the Adriatic matters in the light of these principles and settlements and will realize that standing upon such a foundation of principle he must of necessity maintain the position which he arrived at after months of earnest consideration. He confidently counts upon their cooperation in this effort on his part to maintain for the allied and associated powers that direction of affairs which was initiated by the victory over Germany and the peace conference at Paris."

"POLK, Acting."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Evening Star yesterday contained a brief reference to an address which I had the honor to deliver the night before to the Society of the Order of George Washington. In that account I am reported as having assailed the Volstead Act. That act was not only not referred to in what I said on the occasion mentioned, but it did not even occur to me during the progress of my address. With that exception the article in the Star is otherwise correct.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the National Academy of Sciences for the year ended December 31, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 6863. An act to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12351. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHIPPS. I send to the desk a telegram from citizens interested in stock raising in the State of Colorado, which I desire to have read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Denver, Colo., February 24, 1920.

Hon. L. C. PHIPPS,
Senate, Washington:

We learn the new Kendrick-Kenyon bill is before the Senate and Senator Kendrick pushing strong the passage of this bill. We attended the American National Live Stock Association convention at Spokane during January of this year and the principal subject under discussion there was packer legislation. Senator Kendrick publicly stated his future action at Washington would be governed largely by the action of the convention. The resolution calling for "prompt Federal legislation" was defeated and it was clearly the sense of the convention that no further agitation of the question be had until the Palmer agreement be given a fair trial. We returned to our people with this news. Again we learn the agitation is up and causing cattle feeders and producers untold losses. Twenty-five to $50 per head on cattle. Use your efforts to stop this bureau legislation and let our industry return to a sound and fair basis, thereby encouraging production. We know that further agitation of this question will drive many people out of the live stock business and we seriously protest against this bill with its bureau registration rules and regulations.

Mr. LODGE. I present a memorial from the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Order relative to the establishment by the United States Department of Agriculture of a forest experiment station in the White Mountain National Forest.

Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States a bill (S. 3822 and H. R. 12188) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain a forest experiment station in the White Mountain National Forest for the purpose of conducting in New England and the Northeastern States silvicultural, dendrological, and other forestry experiments and investigations to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands; and

Whereas New England is now dependent upon outside sources for 70 per cent of its lumber and 30 per cent of its pulpwood, involving freight charges alone amounting to over two and one-half million dollars, which are added to the cost of production, while not more than 30 per cent of its own timberland is producing what it might, and at least 20 per cent, or over 3,000,000 acres, are waste land producing nothing; and

Whereas the wood-using industries of New England represent invested capital of nearly $300,000,000, producing products worth $240,000,000 each year, and employ 90,000 wage earners; and

Whereas for the best interests of our people it is essential that New England should become self-supporting in timber production; and

Whereas such a forest experiment station would study forest problems throughout New England, in cooperation with States, schools, and individuals, and thus benefit the entire people of New England: Therefore be it

Ordered, That the House of Representatives of Massachusetts hereby respectfully requests the Congress of the United States to pass said pending bill, which will provide for the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station in the White Mountain National Forest: And be it further Ordered, That copies of this order be sent by the secretary of the commonwealth to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to the Members of the Senate and House in Congress from this Commonwealth.

In house of representatives, adopted February 12, 1920.

A true copy. Attest:

ALBERT T. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. MYERS presented resolutions in the nature of a petition adopted by the State Convention of the Clerks of the District Courts of the State of Montana, favoring the adoption of certain proposed amendments to the law relating to the naturalization of aliens, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Portland, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called Lehlbach-Sterling bill providing for the retirement of superannuated Government employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Karl Ross Post, No. 16, American Legion, of Stockton, Calif., praying that an additional bonus be granted to ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LENROOT. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 12467) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 456) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1457) for the relief of Joseph W. Skill (Rept. No. 454); and

A bill (S. 3119) for the relief of Con Murphy (Rept. No. 455).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3978) granting an increase of pension to Harriet V. M. Cavenaugh (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 3979) to reimburse Lieut. George D. Graham, dental surgeon, United States Army, for rent of quarters at Honolulu, Hawaii; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3980) granting a pension to Walter A. Fleming (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3981) granting an increase of pension to James W. Ellis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3982) to appropriate additional sums for Federal aid in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. WOLCOTT:

A bill (S. 3983) granting an increase of pension to William A. Reilly; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3984) for the relief of Hans Weideman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 3985) for the relief of Mary Frances Landry (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 3986) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Henryetta, Okla.; and

A bill (S. 3987) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the repairing and enlargement of a Federal building thereon at Okmulgee, Okla.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 3988) for the relief of the estate of I. G. Wickersham; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3989) granting a pension to Anna Honeycutt; to the Committee on Pensions.

RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA.

Mr. FRANCE. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 164) providing for the establishment of more friendly relations with Russia, for the lifting of the embargo against shipments to that country, for the extension of trade and commerce with the Russian people, for the arrangement of credits, for the withdrawal of all troops of this country which may still be on Russian soil, for any needed explanations and reparations which may be due from this country for our invasion of Russian territory, for the expression of our gratitude to the Russian people for their heroic part in the defense of civilization, our felicitations to them for having overthrown a despotic government and assurances of the desire of the American people to cooperate with them and to assist them in every proper and possible way in their efforts to establish institutions which will insure to them an ordered liberty, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 164) providing for the establishment of more friendly relations with Russia, for the lifting of the embargo against shipments to that country, for the extension of trade and commerce with the Russian people, for the arrangement of credits, for the withdrawal of all troops of this country which may still be on Russian soil, for any needed explanations and reparations which may be due from this country for our invasion of Russian territory, for the expression of our gratitude to the Russian people for their heroic part in the defense of civilization, our felicitations to them for having overthrown a despotic government, and assurance of the desire of the American people to cooperate with them and to assist them in every proper and possible way in their efforts to establish institutions which will insure to them an ordered liberty.

Whereas from time immemorial there have existed, with few misunderstandings, most cordial relationships between the Governments of the United States and Russia; and

Whereas because of the devotion of the American people to free institutions the citizens of the United States had long looked forward to the time when the people of Russia would see fit to establish such free institutions for themselves; and

Whereas during the European war the noble Russian people made heroic sacrifices, cooperating with the allied nations in the war against Germany, without which cooperation Germany might have been victorious; and

Whereas it was not because of any lack of devotion to freedom and to the cause of the Allies, but rather on account of the incompetence and corruption of their autocratic government, which failed to supply the munitions of war, that the Russian people made a separate peace with Germany; and

Whereas no unfriendly act against the United States has been committed by the Russian people, but, on the contrary, the Russian people have borne with patience our unlawful invasion of their territory and intermeddling with their internal affairs; and

Whereas the people of the United States desire the continuance of friendly relations and the reestablishment of trade and commerce with the Russian people, and wish by every proper means to assist in the rehabilitation of the industrial and agricultural activities and agencies of Russia for the sake of the Russian people, as well as for the general welfare of the world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, advised to communicate at once, through the Department of State, with the Government of Russia, assuring the people of Russia of our friendship, sympathy, and desire to cooperate with them and to reestablish with them full and cordial relationships of friendly intercourse, trade, and commerce; and further, that the President be, and he is hereby, advised—

(1) To instruct the Department of State to raise the embargo against the shipment of goods to Russia;

(2) To consider and advise as to the best method of arranging credits which will make possible the shipment of such American goods as may be needed and desired by the people of Russia for the rehabilitation of their country;

(3) To immediately withdraw from Russia any and all American troops which may still be on Russian soil;

(4) To enter upon negotiations, through the Department of State, concerning any explanations or reparations which may be due from this country because of our invasion of Russian territory;

(5) To convey to the people of Russia expressions of our appreciation and gratitude for their heroic part in the war and our felicitations to them for having overthrown a despotic government and assurances of the desire of the American people to cooperate with them and to assist them in every proper and possible way in their efforts to establish institutions which will insure to them an ordered liberty.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the eradication of the pink bollworm from $288,560 to $588,560 intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

ACQUISITION OF BERMUDA ISLANDS.

Mr. KENYON. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 315) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is requested to undertake negotiations with the British Government looking to the acquisition by the United States of the Bermuda Islands.

THE PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, during my absence from the Chamber this morning the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] had read into the RECORD a telegram referring to certain legislation in which I have been interested during the past few months. The message was so wide of the facts and conveys so erroneous an impression, not only of what transpired at the recent convention of the American National Live Stock Association with respect to proposed legislation for the regulation of the live-stock industry, but also of the general attitude of live-stock producers throughout the country, that I wish to ask to have inserted in the RECORD several resolutions that have directly to do with this question.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I have received innumerable telegrams recommending the enactment of a measure similar to that which was recently reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture, but I am in entire accord with those who are opposed to encumbering the RECORD with such communications, and therefore I have hitherto withheld them. The substance of the telegram which was read this morning and ordered to be printed in the RECORD is so entirely unwarranted by the facts, as I shall hope to show in a minute's discussion, that I venture to depart from my practice in this instance.

At least two of the men who signed the telegram presented by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] are lifelong friends of mine. They attended the convention of the American National Live Stock Association at Spokane, to which they refer in their message, and they have been usually so reliable that I was at a loss to understand why they should make these assertions until I was reminded of a rumor that was current among the stockmen at the convention that "booze" was being brought from Canada by airship. I did not give the report any credence at that time, but my worst suspicions are now confirmed.

It was my privilege, as president of the convention, to preside over it, to appoint the committee on resolutions, to listen to the reading of the resolutions, and to bring away a copy of them with me. I am not going to ask the Senate, therefore, to take my word with regard to what happened at Spokane. I shall be content to invite attention to the official text of the resolutions adopted by the convention indorsing legislation. The telegram which was presented to the Senate this morning in substance declares that a resolution calling for prompt Federal legislation was defeated by the stockmen assembled at Spokane, and that it was clearly the sense of the convention that no further agitation of the question should be had. The statement is altogether at variance with the facts. Far from opposing the enactment of legislation, the convention went on record in clear and unmistakable language in favor of legislation. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit, I shall take the liberty of reading this resolution:

FEDERAL LEGISLATION RECOMMENDED.

"Whereas it is necessary that confidence should be established in the operation of marketing agencies, that competition may be developed, that an improved understanding may be created between producer, packer, and consumer, and distribution of meat and meat products guaranteed on a fair and economical basis and along practical lines, so as to cause the least disturbance of existing conditions: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the American National Live Stock Association in annual convention assembled in the city of Spokane, this 28th day of January, 1920, That we recommend the enactment of legislation by Congress providing governmental regulation of all marketing, manufacturing, and distributing agencies engaged in handling live stock and its products. And we believe that such regulatory laws should be so specific and plainly expressed as to prevent misunderstanding or the exercise of any arbitrary power, and further recommend that the supervision of such market agencies provided for by the proposed legislation be made a matter of law such as to occasion the least possible disturbance or interference with existing business conditions."

I now present a copy of a resolution passed by the Kansas Live Stock Association at its annual meeting in Wichita, January 31, 1920, and a resolution passed by the executive board of the New Mexico Cattle and Horse Growers' Association on February 4, 1920, indorsing the resolution of the American National Live Stock Association, which I have already read. In addition, I desire to present resolutions passed by the League of Women Voters at the convention of that organization held at Chicago February 16, 1920, and I request that these resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

RESOLUTION UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED BY THE KANSAS LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION AT ANNUAL MEETING HELD IN WICHITA, KANS., JANUARY 31, 1920.

"That we indorse the action of the Kansas Legislature in the passage of the Burdick bill, creating the live-stock bureau, and we also commend the action of our governor in promptly signing the same, making it effective. We favor the passage of Federal legislation pending in Congress, known as the combined Kendrick-Kenyon bills, similar to the Kansas law known as the Burdick bill."

INDORSING RESOLUTIONS OF THE AMERICAN NATIONAL LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION.

"Whereas the American National Live Stock Association at its convention at Spokane, Wash., January 29, 1920, adopted resolutions approving the action of the Attorney General in respect to the packers; indorsing the action of its president, Senator KENDRICK, and of the market committee; and recommending the enactment of Federal legislation regulating all marketing agencies; and

"Whereas copies of said resolution have been filed with the secretary of the association: Now be it

"Resolved by the executive board of the New Mexico Cattle and Horse Growers' Association in session at Carlsbad, N. Mex., the 4th day of February, 1920, That we indorse and approve said resolutions and adopt the policy therein declared.

"EXECUTIVE BOARD THE NEW MEXICO CATTLE AND HORSE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION."

LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS—RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOOD SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

"Whereas in addition to the results of inflated currency due to the war the high cost of living in the United States is increased and the production of necessary food supplies diminished by unduly restrictive private control of the channels of commerce, or markets and other distributing facilities, by large food organizations and combinations; and

"Whereas if our civilization is to fulfill its promise it is vital that nourishing food be brought and kept within the reach of every home, and especially of all the growing children of the Nation:

"Resolved by the League of Women Voters, First. That the principles and purposes of the Kenyon-Kendrick-Anderson bills now pending in Congress for the regulation of the meat-packing industry be indorsed for prompt and effective enactment into law; and that this declaration be brought to the attention of the leading political parties, both in advance and at the time of their respective national conventions, with an urgent request for corresponding and unqualified platform pledges.

"Second. That the food supply and demand committee be authorized to keep in touch with the progress of the proposed legislation and to cooperate with the National Consumers' League, the American Live Stock Association, the Farmers' National Council, and other organizations of like policy in an effort to promote through legislation the realization of such principles and purposes. Furthermore, that the committee on food supply and demand be authorized to confer with the Department of Agriculture in regard to the extension of its service, with a view to establishing long-distance information to enable shippers and producers to know daily the supplies and demands of the food market.

"Third. That the early enactment of improved State and Federal laws to prevent food profiteering, waste, and improper hoarding is urged, and the strict enforcement of all such present laws is demanded.

"Fourth. That the various State leagues of women voters are requested to consider the advisability of establishing public markets, abattoirs, milk depots, and other terminal facilities.

"Fifth. That aid be extended to all branches of the League of Women Voters in spreading knowledge of the methods and benefits of legitimate cooperative associations, and that indorsement be given to suitable national and State legislation favoring their organization and use."

Mr. KENDRICK. I ask that a telegram which I received this morning from the Buyers' and Sellers' Live Stock Association at Amarillo, Tex., may be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

AMARILLO, TEX., February 26, 1920.

Senator JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Washington, D. C.:

The Buyers' and Sellers' Live Stock Association in session at Amarillo, several hundred cattlemen being present, voted unanimously for the following resolution:

"Whereas there is now pending in the National Congress what is known as the Anderson redrafted Kendrick-Kenyon bill, having for its object the regulation and supervision of the meat-packing industry of the United States, such embodying clauses providing for the creating of a commission to supervise the operations of packing houses and the marketing of live stock and the finished products therefrom, the functions of the said commission to be along a line similar to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission in its regulatory control over the national railways, and other such features as will safeguard the best interests of the producers, the consumers, and the packers: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Buyers' and Sellers' Live Stock Association, of Amarillo, Tex., embracing as it does many men foremost in the Nation's beef production, go on record as favoring and indorsing the Anderson redrafted Kendrick-Kenyon bill and pledge its faithful and earnest efforts in the final passage and enactment into law of the aforesaid bill."

ADDRESS BY SENATOR ROBERT L. OWEN.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD a copy of an address delivered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], February 5, 1920, at Muskogee, Okla., before the Democratic State convention.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BY HON. ROBERT L. OWEN BEFORE THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION OF OKLAHOMA ON FEBRUARY 5, 1920, IN THE CITY OF MUSKOGEE, OKLA.

"Mr. Chairman and fellow citizens, it gives me great pleasure to pay my respects to you, and, through you, to pay my respects to the Democracy of Oklahoma and to the Democracy of the United States.

"True Democracy is a religion. It is not completely monopolized by the members of the Democratic Party. Many of its loyal disciples find themselves affiliated with other parties. Democracy truly believes in the rule of the people, in their wisdom, in their common sense, in their common honesty, in their justice, in their patience and steadfastness, in their right and ability to govern themselves. It thinks in terms of the greatest good to the greatest number. Its disciples should be 'Soldiers of the Common Good.' Its great patron saint was Thomas Jefferson, who stood for freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, the education of the people by free schools, the right of every citizen to vote.

"On these principles Jeffersonian Democracy took control of the Government in 1801 and held it for many decades. When the party organization became weakened by selfishness and fell under the control of those who believed in human slavery, it passed from power by a revolt of Jeffersonian Democrats, who would not stand for human slavery. They organized a new party and took the name which the followers of Jefferson had employed in 1800, calling themselves Republicans.

"When the wise and kind Lincoln, on the field of Gettysburg, prayed that the Government of the people, for the people, and by the people should not perish from the earth, he voiced the spirit of true democracy throughout the world.

"When the Republican Party got control of the Government during the Civil War, 1861–1865, every selfish interest that wished to use the powers of government for private advantage gradually attached itself to the Republican Party, courted its leaders, became busy in its organization, contributed to its elections, promoted its nominations, and steadily obtained an increasing influence in its management. Unhappily it seems to be the history of all parties.

"When in 1912, after many years, it became obvious that an invisible government of organized commercial and financial selfishness had gained control of the organization of the Republican Party and of the governing powers of the people of the United States, the spirit of democracy, that sleeps but never dies, arose in the hearts of the Progressive Republicans, under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt, and by this revolt there was given to the Democratic Party its first real opportunity since the Civil War to demonstrate that it had, through tribulation, come back to the true principles of Democracy of Jefferson, of Jackson, and of Lincoln, and magnificently the Democratic Party has responded. It was assisted on many occasions by patriotic Progressive Republicans.

"We have thousands of new voters who will seek to know what the party did when it got the power to act. They will ask and our unmindful opponents will ask:

"'What did the Democratic Party do?'

"Let us answer that:

"Immediately it revised the 'robber' tariff. It cut down the prohibitive schedules that selfishly sheltered monopoly in the United States. It put the necessaries of life on the free list—the free-list importations have increased a billion dollars a year under Democratic management; it removed unjust tariff discriminations, and by lowering the tariff stimulated our imports and our exports. (38 Stats., 114, Oct. 3, 1913.) Our foreign commerce has increased from four billions in 1913 to ten billions in 1919. Let Democrats always keep in mind that, by logical necessity, ultimately imports measure exports and exports measure imports.

"It established the Tariff Commission (39 Stats., 795), to take the tariff out of politics and deal with it strictly as a business matter. The old rallying cry of the Republican Party of the Protective Tariff League, which promoted laws to tax the consumers for the benefit of the selfish members of the league, is gone, because of the necessity now of admitting the commodities of Europe, as the only available means by which the people of Europe can repay the many billions of loans made them by our Government and by our people. It has been demonstrated that a revenue tariff, fairly drawn, is abundantly sufficient to honestly protect American industries against foreign competition.

"The overwhelming majority of American industries, because of the enormous production and productive power of American machinery, can now compete on the most favorable terms with any nation in the world.

"What did the Democratic Party do?

"It placed the taxes on those best able to pay the taxes and from whom taxes were more justly due. It took the tax from the backs of the consumers and placed it upon incomes, by the progressive-income tax, so that those who could pay the cost of the Government without distress should do so. (39 U. S. Stats., 756, Sept. 8, 1916.)

"It passed a progressive-inheritance tax, so that the wealth of the country should pay for its own protection. (39 Stats., 1091, Mar. 3, 1917.)

"Do the American people want these statutes repealed?

"It passed the excess-profits tax, to compel those profiting by war conditions to meet the larger part of the cost of war. (39 Stats., 1000, Mar. 3, 1917.)

"It passed the war-profits tax for the same reason. (40 Stats., 1088, Feb. 24, 1919.)

"What did the Democratic Party do?

"It made a resolute effort to benefit the farmers of the country and to improve our agricultural output. For instance:

"It passed the farm-loan act, enabling the farmers of the country to obtain cheap money on long time from the investing public, through nontaxable farm-loan bonds. Over $300,000,000 have been loaned to farmers, and under this system ultimately the farmers of the country will get nearly all the money they require at the cheapest rates. (39 Stats., 360, July 17, 1916.)

"The farm-loan act had the effect of compelling land-mortgage banks to lower their interest rates, and thus has been of great value to the farmers.

"The Republican Senate, without a hearing, reported a bill recently to repeal the tax-exemption features of the bonds based on joint-stock bank mortgages authorized under this bill, but withdrew it when protests were filed.

"The Democratic Party passed the Smith-Lever agricultural extension act, under which the vast knowledge acquired by the Agricultural Department in agriculture, horticulture, animal industry, bee culture, farm economics, canning and preserving foods, raising poultry, etc., has been put at the service of every farmer in every agricultural county in America by trained men and demonstration farms. (38 Stats., 1086, Mar. 4, 1915.)

"The Democratic Party passed the good roads act and appropriated millions to build, by cooperation with the States, hard-surfaced roads connecting the farms with the cities, to the advantage of both. (39 Stat., 355, July 11, 1916.)

"The Democratic Party has vigorously expanded the rural-route system—delivering mail to the farms.

"It has built up the Parcel Post System, carrying parcels to and from the farm and to and from the cities. Do the American people or the farmers want these acts repealed?

"What has the Democratic Party done?

"It has shown its deep desire to serve those who labor.

"It established a Department of Labor; has developed it; has made it useful in steadily improving the conditions of life for those who labor. (37 Stats., 736, Mar. 4, 1913.) It has established employment bureaus, to bring the man and the job together. It helps to settle disputes between labor and capital. It has developed the Bureau of Mines and the Bureau of Standards.

"It passed the child-labor act, to prevent employers from denying children their right to be educated, and to have some of the freedom of youth. (39 Stats., 675, Sept. 1, 1916.)

"It passed the eight-hour law—one of the great accomplishments desired by organized labor. (39 Stats., 721, Sept. 3, 1916.)

"It passed laws providing for the minimum wage.

"It passed the workmen's compensation act, for accidents and death in industry. (40 Stats., 961, Sept. 13, 1918.)

"It exempted combinations of laborers and of farmers from the inhibitions of the antitrust act.

"It passed a great act declaring that 'labor is not a commodity.' This act is regarded as a magna charta for labor, and forbids labor, consisting of human flesh and blood, to be handed about as a chattel. (38 Stats., 731, Oct. 15, 1915.)

"It passed an act providing for vocational instruction and is engaged now in giving vocational instruction to many of our young soldiers returning from abroad who have sought this advantage. I heartily wish a larger number were being given these advantages of instruction. (39 Stats., 929, Feb. 23, 1917.)

"Do they who labor desire to rebuke the Democracy for these acts and have these laws repealed?

"It passed the seamen's act to give liberty to those who labor on the high seas, to put an end to the slavery practiced on sailors, to provide better conditions of life at sea, and safety at sea for the sailors. This legislation has been of very great value in raising the wages of sailors and making the profession more attractive to young men. It was a necessary step in order to provide men who would be needed for the great merchant marine which the Democratic Party desired. (38 Stats., 1164, Mar. 4, 1915.)

MERCHANT MARINE.

"The Democratic Party has now built up a gigantic merchant marine, with 10,000,000 tons of shipping, big enough and strong enough to take our commerce and our flag to every port in the world. This alone is a monumental service to the American people.

MONOPOLIES.

"What did the Democratic Party do?

"It did many things to abate the evils of monopoly.

"It passed the Clayton Antitrust Act, providing various means with which to check the practice of monopoly. (38 Stats., 730, Oct. 15, 1914.)

"It established the Federal Trade Commission, with authority to suppress unfair practices in commerce. The Federal Trade Commission is destined, by its example, by its policies, and by its work, finally to teach the American people how to control the abuses of monopoly and of profiteering. (38 Stats., 717, Sept. 26, 1914.)

"The greatest of all monopolies in America was the monopoly of money and credit, known as the Money Trust.

"The Democratic Party passed the Federal reserve act, established 12 credit centers, with 12 great Federal reserve banks under the control of the Government of the United States through the Federal Reserve Board, so that any citizen having sound credit, based on commodities or on actual commercial transactions, could have his note underwritten by his local bank and get money from the Federal reserve bank. This act took from the Money Trust the monopoly of credits. (38 Stats., 251, Dec. 23, 1913.)

"This act has enabled the 25,000 banks in the United States to accommodate our national commerce without asking permission of any private monopoly. This act has made panics impossible. It has given great stability to the banks and to credits. Under this act in six years the resources of the national banks have increased from ten billions in 1913 to twenty-two billions in 1919. All the banks included have had their resources increased from twenty-five billions to forty-eight billions under Democratic management in six years. Not a single national bank failed in 1919.

"This act enabled the United States to finance Europe, to organize and conduct and to win the greatest war in history. Those who fought this act are now asking the people of the United States to put them in control.

"Do the business men of America want this act interfered with or to rebuke those who passed the act over persistent Republican opposition?

"The Democratic Party has developed the postal savings banks for the accommodation of those timid people who do not deal with the banks but are willing to trust their deposits with the Government, and their deposits are thus made available for the banks. Under these acts the banks of the United States have had the greatest prosperity in their history and at the same time have substantially lowered the rates of interest to American business men.

"What did the Democratic Party do?

"It has passed many acts improving the Public Health Service for the conservation of human life.

"It has done many things to promote popular government. It was due to the Democratic Party and the Progressives that the direct election of United States Senators was put into the Constitution. This amendment has made the Senate of the United States more responsive to the opinions of the people, and will make it still more responsive than it is now.

"Do the people want to vacate or abandon this right or rebuke the Democracy for demanding greater power for the people?

"The Democratic Party democratized the committees of the United States Senate by giving the committees control of the chairmen and of conferees.

"The Democratic Party established modified cloture in the Senate so that a few men could not by unlimited debate permanently defeat the will of the Senate itself. (1917, vol. 55, p. 19.)

"It passed an act forbidding bribery in elections.

"It negotiated peace treaties with all the important nations of the world except Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey, who wanted war—and got it.

"It kept this Nation out of war until it became clear that the liberties of America and of the world were in jeopardy from the aggressive conduct of the Teutonic allies. When war became necessary for the protection of the honor, the dignity, the liberties of the American people, the Democratic administration organized the Council of National Defense; organized the Nation for war, down to the very crossroads; passed the declaration of war and the great war measures; established the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, and the food and fuel control; financed the entente allies; passed the war marine insurance act; set up the War Risk Insurance Bureau; organized over 30,000 four-minute men; called to the colors 10,000,000 Americans; raised an army of over 4,000,000 men; expanded the Navy and merchant marine; provided the munitions of war; trained and transported the required forces to Europe; protected them from disease and vice as far as humanly possible; broke up the German submarine campaign; crumpled the lines of the German troops in France; crushed the morale of the Teutonic forces and compelled their military leaders to beg for an armistice, in effect an unconditional surrender, thus saving the civilization of the world from the greatest military menace in the history of mankind. (39 Stats., 649; 38 Stats., 711.)

"Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my warm and heartfelt respect for the patriotic Republicans and citizens of other parties who loyally cooperated from the Atlantic to the Pacific in winning this Great War. And I wish to express my deep gratitude to those progressive Republicans who cooperated with the Democrats in the great legislative program of the six years of Democratic control.

"What did the Democratic Party do?

"Why, it passed the 'selective-draft act,' by which rich man and poor man, educated man and ignorant man, Protestant and Catholic, Jew and Gentile, black and white, took their position side by side on the battle line or in the service of the country where each was best fitted to protect the liberties of their common country. Never was a more democratic act passed. No man was permitted by law to buy a substitute with money, but every man's life and service was put upon a basis of equality in the defense of his country. (40 Stats., 76, May 18, 1917.)

"What man had the impudence to question the 'Americanism' of the Democratic Party in all these great accomplishments? What is 'Americanism' if it be not the great policies which the Democratic Party has put into execution when it stamped out sedition at home, whipped the Hun abroad, and made America the commercial, financial, and moral leader of all the world, so that all great nations do homage to the United States, and small nations, when they bend their heads in prayer, pray God to bless the American people. America has become the beacon light to all mankind, and no narrow partisan can hide this light under a bushel or question the glorious Americanism of the Democratic Party.

"Under the War Risk Insurance Bureau was written insurance for our soldiers abroad of $40,000,000,000, and under our war marine insurance act American commerce was protected without loss to the Government.

"The Democratic Party passed the War Finance Corporation act for the protection of our business men under the extraordinary interruption and stress of war.

"It passed the capital-issues act in order to safeguard all credits of the country and make them available for war. (40 Stats., 512, Apr. 5, 1918.)

"It organized the Red Cross movement down to the crossroads, and in this Great War enterprise the Democratic Party gladly availed itself of the patriotism of citizens of all parties.

"By the combined efforts of the progressive men in both parties two great amendments to the Constitution of profound social and moral significance have been passed—woman's suffrage and prohibition. Of still greater importance is the fact that these great reforms were due to the progressive men and women in the homes of America.

THE ELECTION OF 1918.

"Before the Great War had terminated successfully there came on the election of 1918, in which the party lost many votes because men who were aggrieved by the conduct of the war, by the selective-draft act, by the operation of the Army and naval forces; many men injured by the priority orders and the conduct of the railroads where the administration had to give the right of way for war purposes; many men injured by the Government commandeering materials and men; many men hurt by the sudden raise in prices, due to the Government competing for men in the shipbuilding yards and in munition plants; many offended by high taxes and by the extravagance and waste of war, visited their displeasure on the Democratic Party.

"Many men of German blood or of German sympathy resented the United States going into war.

"Many men who opposed war as a principle were either turned against the Democratic Party or their devotion to the party was weakened.

"There was a general disposition to blame somebody, and the administration was the victim.

"The Democratic Party, with its leading men intensely occupied with the winning of the war, were in no position to present the accomplishments of the Democratic Party to the people of the country.

"Moreover, in 1918 the United States had the extraordinary affliction of 'Spanish influenza,' which killed in that year 447,000 of our people and over 380,000 of them died in the fall of 1918. Under the advice of physicians political meetings were forbidden.

"Was it any wonder the Democrats lost both Houses? Moreover, the result of the war was still unknown. It is now generally conceded that the President's famous preelection letter alienated many liberal or progressive Republicans and vitalized those who were partisans to strenuous activity in resentment of what they construed to be an affront and lack of appreciation of their loyalty in supporting the war activities of the administration.

"Mr. Chairman, I wish it might be truly said that none of our people during the Great War, either Democrat or Republican, had made any mistakes in the management of the war in the Army or Navy, or of the railroads, or of the telegraphs or telephones, or of any of the Government's affairs [Republican and Democratic citizens were almost equally divided in these activities, but the percentage of errors and wrongs was very small considering the magnitude of our operations in the war]; but I can truly say that the record of accomplishments in the last six years of complete executive and legislative control by the Democratic Party is the most magnificent ever made by any party in any country.

"The Democratic Party found the United States in depression in 1913, threatened with a panic. The New York banks declared in the summer of 1913 that they did not expect to be able to furnish the money to move the crops in the fall, and the country banks were advised not to expect the customary rediscount privileges. The Democratic administration thereupon furnished the money out of the United States Treasury to move the crops and repeated the same operation in 1914, and now, after six years of Democratic management, the country has been brought up to a condition of the greatest prosperity in its history. The banks are crowded with money, the people are living better than ever, business is prosperous, everyone desiring to labor can find the opportunity, the trains are crowded, and the hotels are overflowing.

"Is it possible that the alleged delinquencies of a few individuals, great or small, shall blot out the legislative and executive accomplihments of the Democratic Party?

"Is it possible that the human fability of a few citizens in office will be urged as a just reason for reversing and condemning at the polls the ideals and the progressive, constructive policies of the Democratic Party and rebuking the spirit of loyalty and service by which it has been inspired?

"Mr. Chairman, such a judgment would be as thoughtless and as unjust as the condemnation of our sons who won the battles of the Argonne because some of them blundered and lost their way in the excitement of battle or came out of the carnage with muddy shoes and bloody uniforms.

"The Democratic Party was wounded in the Great War. It was wounded in many ways, but it came nobly through every trial and brought to the American people the most glorious victory ever recorded in all the annals of time. It made America the leader of the world.

"No party in history ever deserved better of the people than the Democratic Party now deserves of the people of the United States.

THE PEACE TREATY.

"Our President, whose leadership and whose sympathies were behind the record of the last six years, went to Paris and brought back a glorious peace treaty, establishing peace among all the nations of the world, by which all the nations of the world pledged themselves to respect and preserve the territorial integrity and political independence of other nations; to settle all international disputes by conciliation, arbitration, and peaceful adjustment; to end competitive armament; to coerce any outlaw nation again attempting to deluge the world in blood by a world-wide economic boycott and by such pressure as should be necessary to restore order.

"After many months of study and acrimonious debate the treaty of peace at last has four-fifths of the Senate in favor of it without amendment or with reservations that, after all, do not seriously change its meaning.

"The covenant of the League of Nations ushers in a new democratic era in which all the great nations have agreed that all just government is based on the consent of the governed.

"The monarchies and autocracies are crushed. The democracies of earth are completely and overwhelmingly triumphant throughout the whole world.

"But to accomplish this magnificent result our people lost a hundred thousand of our best young men, twenty-six billions of money, and dislocated all of our internal affairs.

"Shall we now lose the reward of these sacrifices—the greatest opportunity of service in our history—by refusing to ratify the treaty and thus fail to assume the moral leadership of mankind which is tendered our Republic by the unanimous sentiment of all the free nations? Shall Senators take a small revenge on the President for his alleged neglect of the Senate, reject the treaty, wound all the friendly nations of earth, who fought to the death in the cause of liberty side by side with us, and lose our preeminent position with them purchased at such a sacrifice? Shall the beloved youth of the world, our own best beloved, have died in vain?

"If the treaty be not perfect its errors can be corrected without tearing down the entire structure. Justice and reason will prevail in the assembly of the world's best representatives. The treaty should be ratified without delay, with such reasonable reservations as shall put the American people whole-heartedly behind it.

THE FUTURE.

"And now, Mr. Chairman, we are face to face with the immediate future. It is not enough to say what we have done; it is of the greatest importance to say what we shall do. The spirit and purpose, the vision and constructive genius which the Democratic Party has exhibited in the last six years, justifies the faith that this great party can be better relied on than any other party to solve the reconstruction problems following the war.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

"The greatest problem confronting the country is the high cost of living, which deeply concerns those of fixed salaries, fixed wages, fixed small incomes.

"Many causes have combined to bring about the high cost of living and cut down the purchasing power of the dollar. The principal causes are:

"1. Credit expansion in the form of United States bonds and certificates of indebtedness, short-time Treasury notes, exceeding $26,000,000,000.

"Expansion in bank deposits, amounting to nearly $20,000,000,000 from 1913 to 1920.

"Expansion of Federal reserve notes, made necessary to meet rising prices and the consequent increased demand for actual currency.

"Expansion of gold sent to America to balance our excess commodity shipments abroad, amounting to eleven hundred million dollars.

"These expansions of credits make dollars much easier to get and make the exchange or purchasing value of the dollars less because dollars are easier to get.

"Similar foreign credit expansion in foreign bonds, bank deposits, and currency has in like manner reacted on prices abroad and raised the prices of foreign commodities imported into the United States.

"2. Diminished production. European labor for five years, and American labor for two years, has been largely withdrawn from the production of goods and raw materials required for normal peace times. In the United States we withdrew from the factories, fields, mines, forests, and fisheries over 4,000,000 men and put them under arms and in training for war, and we withdrew probably 10,000,000 laboring people from the activities of peace to the activities of war, causing a diminished production of goods.

"3. Increased consumption. The increased consumption by war in the destruction of property on land and sea, by the waste and extravagance of war, emphasized diminished production.

"4. High cost of labor: Because of the urgency of war and strenuous competition, extraordinarily high prices were paid for labor in our factories, in munition plants, in shipbuilding yards, and other Government and private works engaged in war purposes. The withdrawal of millions of men for war added to the scarcity of labor and doubled the prices paid.

"The extraordinarily high pay led many men to work half time—lowering production. They satisfied their wants with half-time labor.

"5. The extraordinary European demand for the necessaries of life added greatly to the demand for American goods and raised prices in America on all the necessaries of life.

"6. Impairment of transportation: Transportation on land and sea was subjected to ruinous losses. Millions of tons of ships were sunk. There was no time to repair or rebuild cars or locomotives, or to keep the railways in good condition, and now transportation is lacking efficiency even where production is available, thus adding to the cost of living.

"7. The excess-profits tax and certain war taxes have been shifted to the price of commodities, and thereby upon the consumer, raising the cost of living.

"High taxes of all kinds are in some degree put on the cost of goods wherever possible.

"8. Interstate monopolies, restricting production, restraining trade, hoarding necessaries of life and raw materials, and exacting unfair profits and high prices has added immensely to the high cost of living.

"9. Profiteering: Many people are taking advantage of unsettled prices and conditions and the absence of a suitable mechanism to control it, to profiteer on those who are compelled to buy.

"10. The unequal distribution of wealth, exaggerated by war, has led to extravagance and waste by thousands who have profited and set a false standard of prices in many lines by the reckless expenditure of those who need not measure the cost, compelling people who can not afford it to pay fictitious and false prices.

"11. Wholesale speculation in stocks, commodities, real estate, and business has led to excessive interest rates—going up on the stock exchange to 20 and 30 per cent; a 6 and 7 per cent rate by the Federal reserve banks, and 7, 8, and 9 per cent for commercial loans. This is one of the most serious factors in the high cost of living, because as goods pass through various hands each adds a merchant's profit to the original high cost. It has also resulted in depreciating United States Liberty bonds, because they bear a reasonable and moderate rate of interest, and seem a poor investment beside current rates much higher.

"Speculation in stocks alone was employing on the New York Stock Exchange within the last few months $1,900,000,000 loaned by banks on call or short terms for speculation. Such credits should be preferably used by the commercial banks for industry and commerce at legal rates.

"Some of the causes of the high cost of living can be almost immediately corrected, and steps should be taken of a concrete character by which to reduce the cost of living. Among the remedies which are obvious is to stop the expansion of credit for unproductive purposes, such as pure speculation in stocks, commodities, and real estate.

"The productive power of the people of the United States amounts to approximately seventy billions per annum, and will supply all the credits required for the most vigorous development.

"2. To stabilize the Federal reserve note issue and keep the currency at a relatively stable figure.

"The per capita circulation in the United States in 1890 was $22.82; in 1900, $26.93; in 1910, $34.33; in 1914, $34.35; in 1919, $54. The expansion in 1919 included $11 gold per capita sent from abroad in exchange for goods.

"3. The taxes should be reduced and the cost of the war should be extended over 50 years, so that the cost of the war will be distributed over the future and not fall too heavily upon the present generation or compel high taxes in paying the principal at this time.

"5. The Federal Reserve Board should lower the normal rate of interest for discounting for member banks to not exceeding 3 or 4 per cent as a normal rate, increasing the rate if banks seek discounts in excess of a fair proportion of the reserves to which such bank is entitled.

"6. The United States Government should be conducted on a strict budget system, limiting expenditures to a moderate income by reasonable taxation. Extravagance and waste in government should be prevented and treated as a serious wrong. Very great economies are possible in governmental administration and should be vigorously worked out under the most improved modern methods.

"7. The people of the United States should demand reasonable interest charges, and usury should be checked. The artificial usurious rates charged on call loans in the Stock Exchange in New York should be forbidden by law, and restrained by the powers of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Reserve Board and by act of Congress if necessary.

"Call loans on stock exchange collaterals should be converted into time loans for the benefit of the stock exchange as a true market place and as a sound public policy. Time loans can not command very high usurious rates.

"It will be impossible for the railroads of the country to get money on their bonds at decent rates unless the normal interest rates are brought down. Unless the railroads can be financed on a fair interest rate for their bonds the public will pay the bill in higher freight rates and passenger fares. If the interest rates are brought down to a reasonable basis, the United States Government bonds will come back to par.

"The excess-profits tax should be repealed, and the Government should go out of partnership with those who are charging the American people excess profits. The Federal Trade Commission should have its powers expanded as an agency by which to reduce the high cost of living by restraining unfair practices in interstate commerce.

"During the war it was exceedingly difficult to entirely prevent waste and extravagance, but now the Government should enter upon a policy of rigid economy in the management of its affairs. Economy is as essential in Government as it is in private affairs, and if we are to lower taxes it is essential that every expense should be avoided consistent with the efficient conduct of government.

MONOPOLIES.

"The practices of interstate monopolies in limiting production in order to limit supply and charge extortionate prices should be stopped by the Government as an unfair practice. Unfair price fixing and hoarding for speculation should be forbidden. It will be far better for monopolies to turn out five times as much at 20 per cent profit than charge 100 per cent profit on one-fifth of the output. Even those who profit by monopoly should remember that they themselves are the victims of other monopolies, and that their profits would be more valuable if their dollars had a larger purchasing power.

The Sherman antitrust law has failed, because the Supreme Court declared that 'reasonable restraint of trade is not obnoxious to the statute,' and no man knows what a 'reasonable restraint of trade' signifies.

"The Federal Trade Commission should have power to limit interstate monopolies to a reasonable percentage of profit on their turnover, so that the public interest is preserved while not denying an abundant reward to those who transact the business of the country. This has been fairly well accomplished by the Cartel system.

PROFITEERING.

"Profiteering should be dealt with in the same manner by National, State, and local authorities, and public opinion should be aroused so as to make those guilty of profiteering feel the disapproval of the public, and so that suitable remedies may be provided to abate this evil without denying the just rewards for initiative and industry in commerce.

PRODUCTION—LABOR AND CAPITAL.

"It is of extreme importance that production should be stimulated, and this involves many factors. It involves reasonable, stable, low interest rates. It involves equally the rights of labor, of management, of capital, and of the public. Labor is both manual and mental and is entitled to the fullest consideration. The efficiency of labor for several reasons has been seriously impaired. Labor is estimated in many lines to be from 30 to 40 per cent below its productive capacity prior to the war, notwithstanding the high prices paid for labor due to the unrest of labor and the dislocation of labor under war conditions; to the extraordinary prices paid during war times; to extraordinary profits during war by the employers of labor; due to trained men being taken away from the stations in which they were expert to other more profitable lines in making war material. Readjustment is needed. This can be promoted by encouraging frank and free discussion and arranging peaceful methods by which labor will participate in what it produces above a bare living wage. The employee should not be regarded merely as a money-making machine, but altogether as a human being, entitled of right under the Constitution to life, liberty, happiness, and a reasonable participation in the profits arising from labor. This policy is advisable both for the sake of the employer and the employee. When the workman knows that he is working both for himself and his employer he will not indulge in or permit the killing of time, the waste of material, of energy. Labor management and capital should work together on the principle of service to all mankind along lines of cooperation in a spirit of fellowship, sympathy, and mutual support. It will not do in a democracy to rely solely on the physical powers of the Government and brute force to control human unrest. That remedy is a two-edged sword, dangerous alike to capital and to labor, and to the stability and peace of the Government itself. The doctrine of mere arbitrary force should not be seriously entertained by thinking men who love liberty after the lessons of this war.

"Neither labor nor capital can be expected to render willing service unless it receives a just and satisfactory compensation.

"To prevent strikes and lockouts, the causes should be found and removed.

"Increased productivity should be for the service of all, and not exclusively or unduly for profit.

DISTRIBUTION.

"Much can be done in promoting improved methods of distribution through improved organization, through terminal warehouses and distributing centers and a central board of information through which sound advice can be given to those engaged in the process of distribution.

"The improved use of warehouse receipts as a basis of credit through the expansion of the acceptance system in furnishing credit for goods in process of actual distribution.

GOOD ROADS.

"The building of hard-surfaced roads and the use of motor trucks and automobiles is a very important part of cheapening the process of distribution and lowering the cost of living. The United States should vigorously promote this development in conjunction with the States.

LAW AND ORDER.

"The powers of the Government should not be subjected to the dictation of organized minorities, whether representing capital or representing labor or any special group, but the right of men to organize and petition the Government should not be denied. The right of men to organize for collective bargaining is a just and reasonable right which should not be interfered with, but conflicts arising between organizations of men representing capital and representing labor should be adjusted by means provided for conciliation, mutual accommodation, and by public opinion. In such controversies the public is entitled to a substantial representation, so that the interests of the public shall not be disregarded by those who are merely seeking their own interests. A just settlement of such disputes can be arrived at and is one of the great problems remaining to be solved in a manner just to the public and to those who serve the public alike.

SEDITION LAWS.

"The existing statutes are sufficient to punish those guilty of overt acts against the dignity of the national statutes, and there is no need for the passage of extreme laws based on excitement and fear of bolshevism in the United States. The punishment of the advocacy and organization of actual conspiracy to change the forms of our Government by assassination should be vigorously inflicted, and additional law should be provided to cover such conspiracies, if it actually prove to be necessary. The people of the United States are overwhelmingly honest, loyal, patriotic, and can be relied upon at all times to protect the country against sedition and treason.

"We saw during the war the best evidence of this. The only danger was that the people themselves might go too far and act on suspicion in dealing with the ignorant and thoughtless who exercised the American privilege of occasionally indulging in foolish speech.

"It has taken a long time to build up our great Government, based on its ideals of liberty, justice, and humanity, and the people of the United States will not permit any man or set of men by violence and force to tear down constitutional Government in America. Law and order must be and will be rigidly enforced. It can be and should be enforced without extreme sedition laws which might destroy liberty and break down freedom of speech and freedom of the press. Ignorance should be controlled by education where possible, and force should only be used where milder remedies fail.

"Our Constitution provides a peaceful, reasonable way for its amendment, and those who by organized societies are secretly engaged in advocating the overthrow of our Government and social institutions by fire and sword should be treated as guilty of criminal conspiracy and sedition.

"It is my opinion that political prisoners guilty of no overt criminal act should be released immediately and all others brought to summary trial and not subjected to indeterminate imprisonment awaiting trial.

CONSERVATION.

"The great policy of the conservation of our natural resources is another means by which the high cost of living can be abated by increasing production through the use of these great natural resources. It should be vigorously maintained and extended to bring into use these values.

UNITED STATES BONDS.

"The United States bonds which were sold to the people under the Liberty loan and Victory loan campaigns ought to be brought back to par, and this can be done by insisting upon lower rates of legal interest through the Federal reserve banks and through the member banks and forbidding the high usurious rates on the stock exchanges—which run up to 30 per cent on call loans—which have the effect of raising the commercial rates throughout the United States. Even the reserve banks under this influence raised rates to 6 and 7 per cent. It logically follows that United States bonds bearing moderate rates are discredited and brought below par, when contrasted with very high commercial rates, and when banks and citizens borrowing on 4½ per cent Government bonds are charged 6 per cent for credits. If Government bonds plus the credit of a citizen or bank are not entitled to credit at the rate of interest the Government bond bears, it need not surprise the country if the bonds sell for a 10 per cent discount.

"For 50 years before the war the normal rate of interest in France and Belgium was 3 per cent. In Great Britain the acceptance rate during the war was only 3½ per cent. United States bonds bearing 2 per cent, with the circulation privilege, have been selling at par for years.

POPULAR GOVERNMENT.

"The policy of the Democratic Party in promoting popular government should be steadily adhered to in order that the sovereignty vested in the people of the United States may have a concrete mechanism through which it may exercise the governing power. The popular-government process is of the greatest importance to accomplish this and to enable the people to so control the Government that it may function in their interest and be comparatively free from the organized selfishness that is continually exerting itself to lay its hands upon the governing powers of the people in a thousand crafty ways.

"Even now a majority of the people's representatives in the United States Senate can not control the Senate because of its minority serving rules that permits a minority to control its acts. Unqualified cloture or 'the right to move the previous question' is a reform absolutely necessary to deprive the special interests of undue power in the people's Senate. It ought to be demanded by the people.

"You have seen in Oklahoma the value of the initiative and referendum, which has now been adopted by more than 20 States, including such Commonwealths as Massachusetts, Ohio, California, Mississippi, and Missouri. This law puts the powers of government into the hands of the people and enables them to initiate any law they do want and veto any law they do not want.

"The primary law, the short ballot, the preferential ballot, the corrupt practices prevention acts are essential in preventing organized minorities and plutocratic influences, through machine-rule methods, getting control of the governing power.

"The publicity pamphlet issued by the Government to each citizen giving the argument for and against candidates and public measures is necessary for the information of the citizen that he may vote intelligently and escape the undue influence of the press columns too largely controlled by selfish interests.

"When these processes of popular government shall have been perfected and the people are in complete control of their own Government, the powers of monopoly and of profiteering can be effectively controlled and the high cost of living reduced. When this is accomplished we shall have had an answer to Lincoln's great prayer that 'A Government of the people, for the people, and by the people should not perish from the earth.'

"To accomplish these great ends the liberal elements of America should unite.

"It will surely be conceded by thoughtful and just men that the Democratic Party is very substantially controlled by the progressive and liberal elements of the country, and that the Republican Party can not hope to make itself the liberal party of America. We, therefore, have a just right to appeal to Progressive Republicans and liberal men of other parties to cooperate with the Democratic Party. We have a right to invite them to join us on terms of equality in order that the progressive elements of the Nation through the Democratic Party may control the laws of the country along progressive and liberal lines. If this cooperation can be accomplished, the liberal elements of America will be able to control the Government in the election of 1920, and the prosperity which has been brought about under the liberal and progressive statutes of the last six years will be continued and improved upon.

"Those who love democratic and progressive ideals, who love the common good, who love liberty, justice, and humanity, should do so 'in spirit and in truth,' and not be diverted by partisan pride, far less by sordid or selfish motives, from faithful service to the great cause.

"Hundreds of thousands of progressive men affiliated with the Republican Party in former elections believe in our ideals, and reluctantly follow the reactionary leaders who are continually protecting or favoring monopoly. These progressive citizens belong with us. They can be made to know that their ideals can best be obtained through the Democratic Party.

"The just solution of our vital domestic problems require progressive citizens to unite. I appeal to you to lay aside all partisan bitterness and invite to your support forward-looking citizens of other parties. Let us work harmoniously together in promoting social and industrial justice and human happiness."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 3202) granting leave of absence to officers of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes.

CANADIAN WOOD PULP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to ask for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 152, in reference to wood pulp, which we had before the Senate on Wednesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick relative to the claims of the American interests now holding leases of Crown lands acquired prior to the passage of restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Dillingham	Hitchcock	Lenroot
Beckham	Elkins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Lodge
Brandegee	Fernald	Jones, N. Mex.	McKellar
Calder	Gay	Jones, Wash.	McLean
Capper	Glass	Kellogg	McNary
Chamberlain	Gronna	Kendrick	Moses
Colt	Hale	Kenyon	Myers
Culberson	Harding	Keyes	Nelson
Cummins	Harris	King	New
Curtis	Harrison	Kirby	Norris
Dial	Henderson	Knox	Nugent

Overman	Ransdell	Smoot	Underwood
Page	Sheppard	Spencer	Wadsworth
Phipps	Sherman	Sterling	Warren
Pittman	Simmons	Sutherland	Watson
Poindexter	Smith, Ga.	Thomas	Williams
Pomerene	Smith, Md.	Trammell	Wolcott

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained by the illness of a member of his family.

The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is detained at home by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know what the RECORD shows, but I reported the joint resolution from the Committee on Rules with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I desire to have the amendment adopted. If it has not been read, I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute has been read and it appears in the RECORD. The question is upon agreeing to the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that the object which he seeks to accomplish by the joint resolution may not be brought about through the interposition of the State Department? It occurred to me that the State Department could take up this matter with the other countries.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the very purpose of the joint resolution is to avoid that complication. My understanding is that this question has been attempted to be worked out in that way, but when the State Department takes up the matter it must of necessity take it up at the Court of St. James and then indirectly with the Dominion of Canada. Of course, the home British Government is not likely to insist on a question of this kind, and the treatment of it can not be as direct through the State Department as it could by this method. It is purely an industrial matter, and the purpose of the joint resolution is really to avoid the diplomatic channel. The people who are interested are hopeful that by way of a direct contact some result may be accomplished.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will still pardon me, I would not interpose any objection to the speedy determination of this matter. I made the suggestion because I thought perhaps, through the State Department, the matter would be much more quickly accomplished than by the appointment of a commission. I understand, furthermore, if the Senator will pardon me, that in matters relating to Canada and other possessions of Great Britain arrangements have been made by which we could deal directly with their representatives rather than through the home Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To some extent that is true, but in the ultimate analysis it must go through the other channel.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 6, line 10, where the word "newsprint" occurs, does the Senator think that is broad enough to cover other print paper?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it does.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 5 the second whereas reads:

> The whole content of newsprint and other printing paper is composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp wood.

Ought not the same expression to be used in the joint resolution that is used in the whereas on page 5?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the joint resolution as it stands is broad enough. It was drawn with the idea of making it broader, and I think it is broad enough; but if the Senator does not agree with me, I have no desire not to broaden it, and I am willing to accept an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it is broad enough to cover all paper made in Canada.

Mr. McKELLAR. There has been some question raised about that, and I should like to offer an amendment, if it is not seriously objected to.

Mr. SMOOT. The only other kind of paper would be parchment paper and paper which is made from rags, and such paper is not made in Canada. Indeed, there is very little of it made anywhere in the world to-day, and it cuts no figure in the paper market at all. Of course, if the Senator wants to use those words, well and good; but the resolution itself covers all the paper that is made in Canada.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am satisfied in my own mind that it does; but I do not care to raise any question about a matter of that kind, for I have no objection to the viewpoint the Senator from Tennessee is taking.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I move to amend the substitute by inserting after the word "newsprint," on page 6, line 10, the words, "and other printing paper composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp and pulp wood."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the substitute reported by the committee.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the proposed substitute of the committee, on page 6, line 10, after the word "newsprint," it is proposed to insert "and other printing paper composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp and pulp wood."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Tennessee, if he desires those words to go in, to strike out the word "printing." I understand he desires to include all classes of paper.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to include all classes of printing paper.

Mr. SMOOT. But does not the Senator want to include all classes of paper in the manufacture of which wood pulp is used?

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, if the Senator has no objection to the amendment, let it be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the amendment, but it is a limitation; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to suggest an amendment in section 2, on page 7, line 2, after the word "action," to insert the words "in its opinion," so that it will read:

> SEC. 2. That in the event the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council can not be agreed to by mutual arrangement of the Governments of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, that said commission shall invstigate, consider, and report to the Congress what action, in its opinion, should be taken by the Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that amendment is proper, and I accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. There is only one other question which I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama. Does the Senator really think that it will take $50,000 to do this work?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it will take $50,000, or any large part of it, if the commission is able to work out a conclusion with the Dominion of Canada; but if they fail in reaching such a conclusion and it shall become necessary for them to make a report as to their conclusion, it will probably take all of the $50,000. It is a matter of such grave importance to the country I think it is the part of wisdom to give them sufficient funds at this time with which to operate.

Mr. SMOOT. I want them to have sufficient funds, I will say to the Senator; but the Senator is fully aware that whenever an appropriation is made for a commission they base their estimates for clerks and expenses of all kinds upon the appropriation which is made, with the idea of expending it during the time within which they may decide they can make their report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think, unfortunately, that is very often true; but the Senator can see that it will take no large portion of this appropriation if we can work the matter out through a conference with the Dominion Government. If, however, it shall become necessary for the commission to report back to Congress, I think it will require the sum named in the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I should like to have the substitute as amended read. I have not been able to be present in the Chamber, and I should like to know what the joint resolution as it now stands contains.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute as amended will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to appoint a commission of five persons and, by appropriate authority, to confer on this commission the power, on behalf of the administration and the Congress, to negotiate with said Dominion Government, or with said Provincial Governments, in respect to the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council, and as well any other restrictions on the exportation of pulp wood and newsprint and other printing paper composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp and pulp wood from the Dominion of Canada to the United States.

SEC. 2. That in the event the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council can not be agreed to by mutual arrangement of the Governments of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, that said commission shall investigate, consider, and report to the Congress what action, in its opinion, should be taken by the Congress that will aid in securing the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council, or their modification so that they may not continue to militate against the interests of the people of the United States.

SEC. 3. That for the necessary expenses of said commission the sum of $50,000 be, and it is hereby, appropriated from the moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I had hoped the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] would, to some extent, explain the necessity for this new commission. It does not seem to me to be necessary to appoint a commission to negotiate with another government. Recently the chief newspaper in Arkansas wired me that because of an embargo in Canada on newsprint paper 60 per cent of their supply of paper would be cut off, which would put that paper out of business. I immediately took the matter up with the State Department that afternoon and by next day the embargo had been raised. If the State Department was effective in that instance, why could it not be effective in all these matters? If we are going to deal with the Canadian Government, why could not our department of the Government which is organized for that purpose do the dealing? It did it, and did it most effectively, the other day in the particular instance which I have cited, and it did it within 24 hours. I do not see the necessity for a $50,000 commission, under the circumstances, and I wish the matter might be explained.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, my attention was temporarily diverted while the Senator from Arkansas was making his statement, and I desire to ask him what was the instance to which he referred?

Mr. KIRBY. A leading newspaper in my State had a contract for newsprint paper which had to come from Canada through Fort Frances, and the Canadians had notified that newspaper that because of an embargo 60 per cent of their print paper could not be delivered under the contract. The newspaper called my attention to the fact; I took the matter up with the State Department in the afternoon; within less than 24 hours the embargo had been removed; and the paper was continued to be delivered under the contract as previously. If the State Department could be so effective in reference to that one particular matter, and could secure the raising of the embargo on print paper at that place, why could it not do so at all other places? Why could not our State Department, which is organized for that purpose, deal with the Canadian Government in reference to the subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think there is some misapprehension regarding that feature of the situation. In the matter of temporary orders issued by one of the officials of the Canadian Government, my understanding is the State Department has secured an abatement by appealing to the British Embassy in this city, which, through their Canadian connections, have brought about a change, there being some question as to the validity of such orders in the first place. As I understand, however, the joint resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama involves a radical change of the policy which the Canadian Government has adopted; and for us to approach the Canadian Government through the British Government is rather a roundabout way, particularly as at this time Canada is desirous of taking to a larger extent the control of her foreign relations and foreign affairs, and is even contemplating, as I understand, at the present time establishing in the United States her own diplomatic representative. I believe, inasmuch as this is a matter of policy which is fixed now in Canada and which involves possibly some legislative changes, it would be wiser to take it up directly with the Canadian Government. I believe that will be the shortest way to do it and the one most likely to result favorably.

Mr. KIRBY. The matter to which I referred was taken up directly with the provincial government through our consul general there, and the result was as I have stated. I have no objection to the joint resolution, if there is any good reason for it, but it looks to me like a proposal to provide for the appointment of a commission for which there is no great necessity.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Alabama if he thinks it is necessary to appropriate $50,000 for this purpose? I presume he does, or he would not ask for it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I stated to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a few moments ago that if this matter can be worked out through the commission treating with the Dominion Government of Canada, I do not think that $50,000, or any considerable part of that sum, will be necessary to be used; but there are two clauses in the resolution. It is provided that the commission shall endeavor to work out the problem with the Dominion Government, but if they can not do so that they shall report to Congress their conclusions as to what should be done to relieve the situation. That will require somewhat of an investigation and somewhat of an extended report, and if it is necessary for them to spend money for that purpose I think it will require at least the $50,000 provided for in the joint resolution.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, of course I shall not take up any time of the Senate to oppose the joint resolution. I think it is wholly unnecessary. I believe, as has been stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], that this whole matter could be straightened out if it were taken up through the Department of State.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that this is not a new matter with me. The first time that I myself came in contact with it was in 1913, when the present tariff law was written. We attempted at that time to pass legislation that would relieve this situation. Some years prior to that time Representative MANN of Illinois, of the House of Representatives, was the chairman of a committee that worked on this question for months, and tried to solve it. The situation was somewhat relieved by the present tariff law, which put newsprint paper below 5 cents a pound on the free list; but it has become very acute since that time.

It has been attempted to work this matter out through diplomatic channels and in the ordinary course. It is hardly worth while to call attention to the fact that, with the great influence the newspapers of the United States have in relation to the Government, they have not neglected any reasonable opportunity to solve this problem along existing lines. The question has become so acute with many of the newspapers of the country that it is really difficult for them to obtain paper with which to publish their editions, and unless there is some relief afforded it will be a serious calamity to the newspaper companies of the United States. It is not a question that has been pending for days or weeks but it has been pending for years, and the newspapers of the United States would not request this relief unless the matters had reached such a point that something along this line should be done.

As I have already stated—the Senator from North Dakota may not have been in his seat at the time—when we appeal through diplomatic sources we have got to go through the channel of the British Government and the British Embassy. As this is a business question, those who are interested in it are of the opinion that direct contact with the Canadian Government will be more successful than efforts directed through the ordinary diplomatic channels. I will say to the Senator, from the information I gather, that the newspapers of the United States are almost, if not entirely, unanimous in their desire for the passage of this joint resolution, and for some relief to be granted along these lines.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, I believe what the Senator has stated to be true; but I want to call his attention to one instance which I have in mind. We have very few large newspapers in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, but I received a protest from the managers of a number of papers there in regard to the print-paper situation. They appointed a man and sent him to International Falls, which seems to be the place where they secured their paper. I took the matter up with the Department of State here—all I did was to write a letter and give the information—and in the course of a very few days the whole matter was settled satisfactorily to those interested in North Dakota, and I have had a number of letters from them stating that they are now securing all the paper they need.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that I think there is a misapprehension about that matter. I know that there was an embargo placed on the shipment of certain paper into this country, but I understand that it grew out of the claim of the Canadian Government that some particular newspaper in this country had been violating the regulations. It was for that reason that the embargo, so called, was placed; but really when you come down to the last analysis there has not been any embargo placed at all. There was about to be an embargo, but, after an explanation, the situation was relieved. That situation, however, was not one to which the main body of the joint resolution was directed, but was in relation to some particular newsprint paper manufactured in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. The situation to which the Senator from North Dakota refers, and which was acute, was in connection with what transpired at Fort Frances and International Falls in respect to a company there that was manufacturing paper. They utilize water power extending across the international stream and operate on both sides of the stream; and the grievance of the Canadians was that they shipped all of the paper to this side of the line and refused to supply the Canadian papers at Winnipeg. That was the whole matter in controversy there, and the situation was instantly cured, as the Senator from North Dakota has stated; but that is not involved in this question at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I think not.

Mr. NELSON. It is not involved in this joint resolution. That situation simply grew out of the fact that the company, in disregard of the Canadian papers, sent all their print paper to this side of the line and left Winnipeg papers without any supply for the time being. I think the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] knows that is the situation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator from Minnesota is entirely correct so far as he goes, but I believe the grievance was even a little deeper than would be inferred from his remarks. The regulations in Canada, as I recall, require the mills of Canada to reserve 15 per cent of their product for home consumption; they are not permitted to export to the United States more than 85 per cent of their product, although the prices are higher in the United States. The mill to which the Senator refers, part of which, I believe, is in his State, although I am not sure about that, violated, as was claimed, contracts which it had with Canadian papers.

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Being tempted by the higher prices in the United States, and, as a matter of penalty, was estopped from shipping paper to the United States until the inequality had been removed. I am inclined to think that, as some papers were in distress, the man who was temporary regulator of the matter in Canada went so far as to order other paper mills to come to the relief of the Winnipeg publishers, and that resulted in those mills being unable to comply with their contracts in the United States. But the short and long of it was that it was a temporary matter, merely intended to bring relief to the Canadian papers, and did not involve any matter of permanent policy of Canada, as involved in the pulp-wood proposition which the Senator from Alabama desires to cure by negotiation.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Nebraska has stated the matter more fully than I have. It is exactly as the Senator from Nebraska stated.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to the passage of any joint resolution which will correct mistakes; but I think I realize, and of course every other Senator realizes, that the mere appointment of this commission is not going to relieve the situation. I take it that the Senator from Alabama does not insist that this commission, regardless of who the commission may be, can adjust matters without legislation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I think they can. I do not think that there is any doubt that if this commission can convince the Government of Canada of the necessity for relief in this matter, it will not require further legislation, because all that is required is that an embargo by certain of the Provinces of Canada be raised. Of course, if these Provinces insist on this embargo, and will not raise it, then it may necessitate legislation on the part of this Government that will probably reach the situation, and the joint resolution provides for this commission reporting along what lines the Congress had best act if we can not work it out through agreement with the Canadian Government. As the first step, however, when our case is properly presented to the Government of Canada and the Provinces, we may, and I hope that we will, accomplish the relief desired, because all that is necessary is to raise an embargo that has been placed on the shipment of wood pulp to this country, and that can be accomplished by an order in council. It does not require legislation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that pulp wood is not the only question which has affected the American people. The question of grain has been much agitated, and it is a much larger question, of course, than that of pulp wood. If the Senator will permit me further, if the men who have been appointed to deal with this question are performing their duty, they have been able to do so with respect to cereals of all kinds, and, of course, our laws are such that they may, if necessary, resort to retaliatory measures, and that applies to pulp wood as well as it does to cereals.

So far as the grain question is concerned, it has been regulated by one man. There was no necessity for the appointment of a commission and for the further expenditure of $50,000. If the law is such that a commission may adjust the matter by insisting to the authorities of the Canadian Government that they are making a mistake, and that their action is burdensome to the Government of the United States, it seems to me it would be possible for the present officials of our Government to bring about that result.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will call the Senator's attention to this fact: Of course I am not as well informed about matters relating to the grains of the Northwest as he is, and do not pretend to be, but the present tariff law, in putting certain grains on the free list, made provision for a reciprocal treaty that is already provided for by law. That is in the law. There is no law at present with reference to this question. A law may be necessary in the end, but until we have a treaty——

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator if it is not true, then, that if a law is necessary, this commission would not be able to adjust the matter without further legislation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; they can adjust it without further legislation if the Canadian Government will yield on this embargo, and that is what the commission are going to ask them to do. If they can persuade the Canadian Government to yield, or can persuade the Province of Quebec to yield on the present embargo, no further action will be necessary; but if that can not be accomplished the commission are asked to report to the Congress what action should be taken in the matter, and then legislation will have to follow.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, my objection to the creation of these commissions is this: We are asked to reduce expenditures, and I believe it is absolutely necessary that we should keep down appropriations to the lowest possible amount. We are asked to cut appropriations for agricultural purposes to the very lowest possible amount; and yet every once in a while we get an idea that some other commission ought to be appointed, and instead of asking for a reasonable amount we ask for a large amount.

I consider that $50,000 is a tremendously large amount. I remember that when a commission was appointed to go to Europe and investigate rural credit conditions we allowed them only $25,000 for the purpose. Here we are providing $50,000 for a commission to go across the line between the United States and Canada. One-half of that, in my judgment, is a large amount, and regardless of whether it is voted down or voted up, I offer an amendment reducing the amount of $50,000 to $25,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "$50,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$25,000."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota why $25,000 is necessary. Is not that a very large sum for the commission to spend?

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator that it is a very large amount.

Mr. KENYON. I will ask the Senator from Alabama why such a large appropriation should be made?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from Iowa, I am sure, was not in the Chamber a moment ago when I made the statement. I stated then, in answer to a question, that if the commission that is sought to be appointed under this joint resolution can work out the problem with the Dominion Government of Canada, I am satisfied that it will not take the $50,000, or that it will not take a large part of it; but there are two clauses in this joint resolution. The second clause is that if it can not be worked out amicably with the Government of Canada, then this commission shall report to Congress what in their judgment is the best thing to do. I have no doubt that that will require an investigation; it will require clerk hire; it will require a more or less voluminous report, and considerable printing, probably; and I do not think $50,000 is a large sum if that contingency arises.

The Senator must remember that not only is one of the great industries of this country involved, but to a certain extent its very existence is threatened by the fact of the limitation of newsprint paper. The newspapers of this country can not proceed with their business unless they have an adequate and a reasonable supply. The vastness of the industry I can not say offhand, but the Senator knows that aside from the newspaper feature of the matter, this is one of the very large industries of the United States, and here is an order in council of the Dominion Government of Canada that is absolutely preparing to throttle its life, or force the manufacturers of all newsprint paper across the Canadian line; and if they go across the Canadian line our Government will lose control of the industry absolutely. The newspapers of this country will be absolutely in the hands of the manufacturers of newsprint paper in Canada.

With this great question confronting one of the great industries of this country, I can not conceive how the Congress can hesitate to allow a commission to use $50,000 when we consider the vast expenditures that are made here every day about minor matters. I sincerely hope that the Senate will not agree to the amendment, but will allow the appropriation to stand as it is proposed in the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, proposed by the committee, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood therefrom to the United States."

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee also recommends a complete substitute for the preamble of the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas newsprint and other printing papers are commodities of universal use and are indispensable in the educational process of modern civilization, and the paramount importance of a sufficient production of such newsprint and other paper to supply the needs of the people of the United States is a self-evident proposition; and

Whereas practically the whole content of newsprint and other printing paper is composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp wood, the supply of which in the eastern part of the United States is being rapidly exhausted by the growing demand and the price of which is being advanced to unprecedented levels; and

Whereas the existing scarcity of pulp wood and its threatened total exhaustion in the United States has become a matter of such grave concern to the paper industry, the users and manufacturers of forest products, the Federal Government, and the general public that the Forest Service, the lumber and pulp and paper associations, and the forestry authorities of the country are now formulating a broad and comprehensive national forest conservation and reforestation plan for early adoption; and

Whereas the lieutenant governors of certain of the Provinces of Canada, in council, did issue orders prohibiting the exportation of pulp wood cut from Crown lands, the chief source of supply of pulp wood, unless manufactured into lumber, pulp, or paper, thereby tending to create a monoply beyond our borders in the manufacture of paper, to the great detriment of the people of the United States:

The amended preamble was agreed to.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate in open executive session proceed to the consideration of the German treaty.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany in open executive session.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the discussion of the treaty of peace with Germany to-day I shall confine my remarks almost entirely to that part of the treaty referring to Egypt. In order that what I may say may be the better understood, I desire to refer briefly to some Egyptian history.

For a great many years Egypt was a part of the Turkish Empire. Some time about 1840 Egypt waged a war against Turkey for her independence. Her armies were successful. She was on the verge of establishing her independence, and Constantinople would soon have fallen, when Great Britain and France interfered in order to preserve the so-called balance of power. In 1840 or 1841 a treaty was negotiated which, while it gave to Egypt practical independence, nevertheless left a nominal suzerainty by Turkey, by virtue of which Egypt was compelled to pay Turkey about $3,500,000 annually. With this exception and with the other exceptions provided for in the treaty, that the victories which her armies had achieved were not given her by way of territory, Egypt became an independent nation.

Now, Senators, I want you to bear with me while I read some of the pledges made by the British representatives in the name of that Government and extracts from some of the treaties that Great Britain made, in order that I may lay the foundation for my claim that Great Britain has not only violated every pledge made by her and her allies during the war for a new and a free, regenerated world, but she violated the most sacred pledges that can possibly be given by one nation to another in regard to the independence of Egypt.

Before I read those I ought to say that in 1880, or somewhere thereabouts, the English fleet attacked Alexandria and English soldiers were landed on Egyptian soil. The ostensible reason for this course by Great Britain was to protect the Egyptian Government and also to safeguard some financial transactions and debts accruing in the construction of the Suez Canal, but England announced then, and, as I shall show, has announced a great many times since, that the object of this occupation of the Egyptian territory by her forces was only temporary; that she had no ambition upon Egyptian territory; and that she desired at all times to preserve the independence and the integrity of the Egyptian nation.

I desire to read to the Senate some, but not all, of the pledges made by British statesmen in the name of the English Government, and extracts from some of the treaties that England made with other countries, by which she pledged herself to the absolute integrity of the Egyptian nation and that she had no ambitions of her own in any way or at any time to interfere with that independence.

November 4, 1881, Lord Granville, speaking for the British Government, announced the policy of that Government toward Egypt as follows:

The policy of His Majesty's Government toward Egypt has no other aim than the prosperity of the country and its full enjoyment of that liberty which it has obtained under successive firmans of the Sultan. * * * It can not be too clearly understood that England desires no partisan ministry in Egypt. In the opinion of His Majesty's Government a partisan ministry founded on the support of a foreign power or upon the personal influence of a foreign diplomatic agent is neither calculated to be of service to the country it administers nor to that in whose interest it is supposed to be maintained.

Later, on June 25, 1882, England, together with the representatives of five other great European powers, entered into an agreement in regard to Egypt, from which I quote the following:

The Governments represented by the undersigned engage themselves, in any arrangement which may be made in consequence of their concerted action for the regulation of the affairs of Egypt, not to seek any territorial advantage nor any concession of any exclusive privilege, nor any commercial advantage for their subjects other than those which any other nation can equally obtain.

In the very next month after that treaty was made, on July 26, 1882, the British admiral, Sir Beaucamp Seymour, in an official communication to the Khedive of Egypt, used the following language:

I, admiral commanding the British fleet, think it opportune to confirm without delay once more to your highness that the Government of Great Britain has no intention of making the conquest of Egypt, nor of injuring in any way the religion and liberties of the Egyptians. It has for its sole object to protect your highness and the Egyptian people against rebels.

On August 10, 1882, Mr. W. E. Gladstone spoke as follows in the House of Commons:

I can go so far as to answer the honorable gentleman when he asks me whether we contemplate an indefinite occupation of Egypt. Undoubtedly of all things in the world that is a thing which we are not going to do. It would be absolutely at variance with all the principles and views of Her Majesty's Government, and the pledges they have given to Europe and with the views, I may say, of Europe itself.

On February 6, 1883, Lord Dufferin used the following language in an official dispatch:

The territory of the Khedive has been recognized as lying outside the sphere of European warfare and international jealousies. * * *

The Valley of the Nile could not be administered from London. An attempt upon our part to engage in such an undertaking would at once render us objects of hatred and suspicion to its inhabitants. Cairo would become a focus of foreign intrigue and conspiracy against us, and we should soon find ourselves forced either to abandon our pretensions under discreditable conditions or embark upon the experiment of a complete acquisition of the country.

On August 9, 1883, Mr. Gladstone, speaking in the House of Commons, again referred to the Egyptian question and used the following language:

The uncertainty there may be in some portion of the public mind has reference to those desires which tend toward the permanent occupation of Egypt and its incorporation in this Empire. This is a consummation to which we are resolutely opposed and which we will have nothing to do with bringing about. We are against this doctrine of annexation, we are against everything that resembles or approaches it, and we are against all language that tends to bring about its expectation. We are against it on the ground of the interests of England; we are against it on the ground of our duty to Egypt; we are against it on the ground of the specific and solemn pledges given to the world in the most solemn manner and under the most critical circumstances, pledges which have earned for us the confidence of Europe at large during the course of difficult and delicate operations, and which, if one pledge can be more solemn and sacred than another, special sacredness in this case binds us to observe. We are also sensible that occupation prolonged beyond a certain point may tend to annexation, and, consequently, it is our object to take the greatest care that the occupation does not gradually take a permanent character.

Lord Derby, in the House of Lords on February 26, 1885, said:

From the first we have steadily kept in view the fact that our occupation was temporary and provisional only. * * * We do not propose to keep Egypt permanently. * * * On that point we are pledged to this country and to Europe, and if a contrary policy is adopted it will not be by us.

On the 10th day of June, 1887, Lord Salisbury, speaking for the British Government in the House of Lords, said:

It was not open to us to assume the protectorate of Egypt, because Her Majesty's Government have again and again pledged themselves that they would not do so.

Again, Lord Salisbury, in the House of Lords on August 12, 1889, said:

When my noble friend * * * asks us to convert ourselves from guardians into proprietors * * * and to declare our stay in Egypt permanent, * * * I must say I think my noble friend pays an insufficient regard to the sanctity of the obligations which the Government of the Queen have undertaken and by which they are bound to abide. In such a matter we have not to consider what is the most convenient or what is the more profitable course; we have to consider the course to which we are bound by our own obligations and by European law.

On the 8th of April, 1904, the British Government entered into another treaty known as the Anglo-French agreement, and in that agreement Great Britain declared as follows:

The Government of His Majesty declares that it has no intention of altering the political status of Egypt.

On the 3d day of March, 1907, in Lord Cromer's report, he referred to this Anglo-French agreement as follows:

There are insuperable objections to the assumption of a British protectorate over Egypt. It would involve a change in the political status of the country. Now, in article 1 of the Anglo-French agreement of the 8th of April, 1904, the British Government have explicitly declared that they have no intention of altering the political status of Egypt.

On October 24, 1908, Sir Eldon Gorst, in a public interview, speaking of a rumor that Great Britain proposed to proclaim a protectorate over Egypt, made the following denial:

The rumor has no foundation, and you may contradict it categorically. Great Britain has engaged herself by official agreements with Turkey and the European powers to respect the suzerainty of the Sultan in Egypt. She will keep her engagements, which, moreover, she reiterated in 1904 at the time of the conclusion of the Anglo-French agreement. England stipulated in that agreement that she has no intention to change the political situation in Egypt. Neither the people nor the Government wish to rid themselves of these engagements.

In August, 1914, Sir Edward Grey, speaking in the House of Commons, said:

England stretches out her hand to any nation whose safety or independence may be threatened or compromised by any aggressor.

Premier Asquith, in a public speech at Guildhall, in November, 1915, after the war had commenced, asserted:

We shall not pause or falter until we have secured for the smaller States their charter of independence and for the world at large its final emancipation from the reign of force.

Premier Asquith again, on November 9, 1916, while the war was in progress, declared:

This is a war, among other things—perhaps I may say primarily—a war for the emancipation of the smaller States. * * * Peace, when it comes, must be such as will build upon a sure and stable foundation the security of the weak, the liberties of Europe, and a free future for the world.

Again, on December 20, 1917, Premier Asquith, speaking in the House of Commons, said:

We ought to make it increasingly clear by every possible means that the only ends we are fighting for are liberty and justice for the whole world, through a confederation of great and small States, all to possess equal rights.

You will notice that some of these protestations in regard to Egypt and the rights of small nations were made during the war; they were made, Mr. President, at a time when Egypt was fighting on the side of the Allies. It must be remembered that many of these pledges were made years before; that they were continually made; that England entered into at least two treaty obligations by which she solemnly and specifically pledged herself as to the integrity of the Egyptian nation. During the war, when the war was on, the protestations of her leaders and her statesmen in the House of Commons and House of Lords, before the world, in public addresses, applied generally to all weak nations.

When war commenced, in August, 1914, in less than 30 days—yes, in less than 20 days—Egypt went into the war on the side of the Allies. She declared war against Germany on the 6th day of August, 1914. She fought that war through from the beginning to the very end. No one has questioned her loyalty; no one has questioned the sacrifice that she has made. She did it in part because she was opposed to the methods of the German Empire, because she wanted freedom from Turkey; and she knew that Turkey was closely allied with Germany, although at the time she went into the war Turkey was still neutral. She did it, in the third place, because she relied upon the pledges, upon the promises made by England not only before the war but later on. After she got into the war she renewed her energies, because she relied on the pledges that were made during the war that it was being fought for the rights of the small nations. She believed when the war was over she would be entitled to her independence from Turkey, never dreaming at that time, at the beginning, at least, that she would have to compete with one of her allies rather than with one of her enemies in order to gain and to establish her independence amongst the other nations of the world. More than a million—about 1,200,000—Egyptians took part in the war on the side of the Allies. Egypt turned her standing army over to the Allies. Not all her men were engaged in the trenches—many of them were laborers—but they were on all of the fronts and in some cases bore the brunt of the major part of the fighting in the trenches.

Later on, in 1914, Turkey entered the war. When Turkey entered the war England declared a protectorate over Egypt, the thing she had always said she would not do and that she had no right to do; but, as I shall show, she did it partially with the consent of the Egyptian Government, the Egyptian Government relying upon the English pledges then that the protectorate was only a war measure; that it was only temporary. Egypt continued in the war, as loyal as ever, clear to its close, fighting upon practically all the battle fronts in behalf of the allied cause.

When Turkey went into the war the most natural thing would be for her to attack Egypt, to attempt to capture the Suez Canal. It will be remembered that the first attempt to capture the Suez Canal was very nearly successful. It was Egyptian soldiers, in the main, who prevented the capture of the Suez Canal. It was at the sacrifice of Egyptian blood and Egyptian lives that Turkey was driven off and defeated. Later on the Egyptians fought on the other eastern fronts. A great many Egyptian soldiers were under Allenby in Palestine, and in Mesopotamia, Bulgaria, and Greece; others, mostly as laborers, were in France and in Belgium. A writer in a London magazine, who was personally present, said that during the fighting on the Gallipoli Peninsula, which proved so disastrous for the Allies, the Egyptian soldiers died like flies. Gen. Allenby has officially stated that he was very materially assisted in his capture of the Turks by the Egyptian Army. Thousands and tens of thousands, and, indeed, hundreds of thousands of Egyptians died on the battle field.

That was not all, Mr. President. On all those eastern fronts Egypt furnished a great portion of the food that kept the armies on the battle front. It is doubtful if the Suez Canal could have been kept from being captured by the Turks had it not been for the Egyptians, and God only knows what kind of a catastrophe might have been the result of that. Egypt furnished food, as I have stated, to all the armies; she furnished wheat; she also furnished cotton, which was so much needed by the Allies.

As I have said, when Turkey went into the war, which was, I believe, in December, 1914, England proclaimed a protectorate over Egypt. She did so under the guise of protecting the Egyptian people from capture by the Turks. She announced to the world that Turkey had attacked Egypt, and to convince the Egyptian people that her protectorate was only a war measure and was intended only for temporary purposes, the King of England at the time of proclaiming the protectorate sent the following message to the new Khedive of Egypt:

On the occasion when Your Highness enters upon your high office I desire to convey to Your Highness the expression of my most sincere friendship and the assurance of my unfailing support in safeguarding the integrity of Egypt and in securing her future well-being and prosperity.

Your Highness has been called upon to undertake the responsibilities of your high office at a grave crisis in the national life of Egypt, and I feel convinced that you will be able, with the cooperation of your ministers and the protection of Great Britain, to successfully overcome all the influences which are seeking to destroy the independence of Egypt and the wealth, liberty, and happiness of the people.

That official message is signed by the King. It seems to me that no man can read it without being impressed with the thought that England at least pretended to Egypt that she was taking this step in the interest of Egypt, for it will be noted that in the letter of the King it is stated:

I feel convinced that you will be able, with the cooperation of your ministers and the protection of Great Britain, to successfully overcome all the influences which are seeking to destroy the independence of Egypt.

There is nothing there to indicate that the independence of Egypt would be destroyed by the same hand that was offering this beautiful bouquet; but if there be any doubt as to the sense in which it was received by the Egyptian officials and the Egyptian people, let me read the response to that beautiful message that was sent to the King by the Khedive of Egypt. To the King of England he replied:

I present to Your Majesty the expression of my deepest gratitude for the feelings of friendship with which you see fit to honor me, and for the assurance of your valuable support in safeguarding the integrity and independence of Egypt. * * *

If England had had any other design except the independence and the protection of Egypt—independence as well as protection; in fact, protection involved independence, because, with the exception of the suzerainty which Turkey held over Egypt, Egypt was then independent—if there could be any other possible construction placed upon the letter from the King of England to the Khedive of Egypt, then the answer of the Egyptian officials to that King must have shown him, as it showed to the world, that Egypt was relying upon England's word; that she construed it to mean the independence of Egypt. If the British Government had had any other design, if they had any covert purpose that was not shown to the public, and they were honorable and fair, they would at once have replied to this message, "We do not intend to preserve the independence of Egypt; we are going to destroy it ourselves; when we get to the peace table we are going to deny to you that independence for which you think you are now fighting."

Great Britain gave notice to the world of her protectorate over Egypt, and I desire to let the Senate and the country understand what view we took of it at the time officially. She gave notice to the United States, among other nations, of this move on her part to protect Egypt from the assaults of Turkey. The official notice from the British Government to our State Department reads as follows:

BRITISH EMBASSY,
Washington, December 18, 1914.

SIR: I have the honor under instructions from my Government to communicate to you, sir, for your information, the accompanying copy of a telegram stating that His Majesty's Government consider that the suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt is terminated—

That is what Egypt claimed also—and that they have advised the King to place Egypt under his protection.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,

CECIL SPRING RICE.

The Hon. W. J. BRYAN,
Secretary of State, etc.

The telegram which this official message says was inclosed with it reads as follows:

You should communicate the following to the Government to which you are accredited—

And I assume that this was sent to all Governments as well as ours—

In view of the state of war initiated by Turkey against Egypt His Majesty's Government consider that the suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt is terminated, and they have advised His Majesty to place Egypt under his protection and to order the adoption of all measures necessary for the safety of the inhabitants, the defense of the country, and the protection of the many and various important interests existing there. Official notifications to this effect have been issued in London and Cairo. The unprovoked nature of the Turkish aggression has prevented any discussion of this matter with the powers beforehand, but His Majesty's Government have no intentions of impairing foreign interests and wish to act in harmony with the powers in making those changes affecting their interests which are rendered unavoidable by the aggression of Turkey.

Meanwhile the Egyptian Government will arrange for the issue of a khedivial decree providing that the consular and other foreign courts shall continue to exercise in Egypt their accustomed jurisdiction to the extent to which the arrangements which will have to be made by the military authorities for the maintenance of public order are not inconsistent therewith. You should add that His Majesty's Government have appointed a high commissioner for Egypt who will also be the minister of foreign affairs in the Egyptian Government, and His Majesty's Government would therefore ask that the Government to which you are accredited will be as good as to instruct their representative in Cairo to address all his official communications in future to the high commissioner as minister for foreign affairs.

After our Government had received this official notice it acted on the suggestion that its representative in Egypt should be notified. This is the notice contained in the letter written by our consul general at Cairo after he had received the official notice:

AMERICAN DIPLOMATIC AGENCY AND CONSULATE GENERAL,
Cairo, Egypt, April 22, 1919.

I have the honor to state that I have been directed by my Government to acquaint you with the fact that the President recognizes the British protectorate over Egypt, which was proclaimed by His Majesty's Government on December 18, 1914.

In according this recognition the President must, of necessity, reserve for further discussion the details thereof, along with the question of the modification of any rights belonging to the United States which may be entailed by this decision.

In this connection I am desired to say that the President and the American people have every sympathy with the legitimate aspirations of the Egyptian people for a further measure of self-government, but that they view with regret any effort to obtain the realization thereof by a resort to violence.

(Signed) HAMPSON GARY.

Mr. President, article 147 of the pending German treaty reads as follows:

Germany declares that she recognizes the protectorate proclaimed over Egypt by Great Britain on December 18, 1914, and that she renounces the régime of the capitulations in Egypt.

This renunciation shall take effect as from August 4, 1914.

It follows, Mr. President, if we are going to require of our enemy in the treaty a permanent recognition of the protectorate of Great Britain over Egypt that we of necessity recognize it ourselves. It can not for a moment be claimed that we will require that this protectorate shall be recognized by Germany and that we shall not recognize it. It follows that all other nations signing this treaty and approving it without reservation do the same thing that we have required the enemy to do—recognize the British protectorate over Egypt to remain as a permanent proposition. In other words, this treaty wipes the national integrity of the Egyptian people off the face of the earth. Egypt becomes a part of the British Empire.

It is true, I presume, that in carrying out this protectorate Great Britain will select, when she can, minor officials who are Egyptians; but there will be no one, from the top to the bottom, administering affairs in Egypt who does not obey the decrees of the British Government. It is one of the steps, perhaps the last and the final step, by which the British Government takes over Egypt. If there be remaining any Egyptians in official life after the protectorate of England is firmly established, they will be only rubber stamps. They will be only tools to carry out the word and the command of their masters. They will bear the same relation to England that the Secretary of State bears to the President of the United States under the present administration.

I might add that the Austrian treaty, which has not yet been officially submitted, contains this same provision in regard to Egypt.

Under this treaty, as I construe it, if unamended and without any reservation with regard to this article, we pledge our honor and our money to the support of the British protectorate over Egypt. American lives and American blood are mortgaged in order to add Egypt to the British Empire contrary to every pledge, contrary to the most sacred promises that have ever been made in the history of civilization. The carrying out of this article gives the lie to every pledge that I have read to-day—and I did not read all of them—made in the course of the last few years by the British Government and the British statesmen speaking for that Government. It gives the lie to every proclamation that was ever made and every sentence that was ever uttered by our President in his famous 14 points, in all the pledges that all the leaders of all the Allies made to the world during the progress of the war.

The President has asked for the ratification of the treaty without change; and, while the President in his speeches to the American people has said that we are not bound to maintain the new divisions of the earth, I desire to call attention to a speech that he himself made in Paris at the English plenary session of the peace conference in speaking to the premier of Roumania, who, it will be remembered, was not taking kindly to the program of the peace conference. I quote the President's speech from the advance sheets of a magazine article written by Herbert Adams Gibbons. In this article Dr. Gibbons says that he has in his possession the original stenographic notes of the President's speech, and from these notes he gives us the President's speech, as follows.

Said the President to the premier of Roumania, who, as I said, was objecting to some of the provisions of the treaty:

You must not forget that it is force which is the final guaranty of the public peace. * * * If the world is again troubled, if the conditions that we all regard as fundamental are upset and contested, the guaranty which is given you means that the United States will send to this side of the ocean their Army and their fleet. Is it surprising that, this being the case, we desire that the settlement of the different problems appear entirely satisfactory to us?

The judgment of the President as he gave it then, while he was on the ground and while he was talking to the Roumanian premier, is right, and no student of this treaty can successfully contradict it. If it follows that we must send our Army and our fleet to protect Roumania, will it not follow that for the same reasons and on the same grounds we must, under that treaty, send our Army and our fleet to protect Great Britain in the enjoyment of Egypt as a part of that great empire?

Now, Mr. President, I want to read from two speeches made by Mr. Balfour, the great English statesman. He made one before the armistice was signed, while the war was on, while he was anxious to get the support of the Egyptian people. He made it at a time when he knew the Egyptian people were fighting with the Allies because they desired at the peace conference to be consulted as to their own future and their own life; and the next speech he made after the armistice was signed and after Great Britain had thrown off the disguise and come out in her true colors.

On November 19, 1914, when England was about to declare her protectorate over Egypt for these war purposes, while Egypt was valiantly fighting for the allied cause, and when it was desired that she should not become suspicious because of this protectorate, Mr. Balfour made this speech. As I say, it was on November 19, 1914:

We fight not for ourselves alone but for civilization drawn to the cause of small States, the cause of all those countries which desire to develop their own civilization in their own way, following their own ideals, without interference from any insolent and unauthorized aggressor.

Mr. President, that speech went all over Egypt. There was some feeling in Egypt, when England declared this protectorate after Turkey went into the war, for fear that she might try to make it permanent; but it was such protestations, such speeches, and promises as Mr. Balfour made that I have just quoted from, as well as the others that I have previously quoted from, that kept Egypt loyally fighting for the allied cause from day to day, with a firm and an honest and, in my judgment, a justified belief that when the war was over and victory was won, she would be admitted to the peace council and she would be recognized as an independent nation, as in reality she was as soon as the suzerainty of Turkey was dissolved.

Compare that speech, made by this great British leader, with another speech that he made on December 10, 1919, after the peace, after the war was over, after this treaty had been signed, and when Egypt was commencing to object. She had been objecting from the very beginning of peace negotiations, but her voice had not gotten outside of Egypt because of the censorship of Great Britain; but it had gotten to England by this time, in December, 1919. Some of the British people—and, in my judgment, the great majority of the British common people—are just as bitterly opposed to this provision of the treaty as I am. They know that it is a sin; they know that it is dishonorable; they know that it is a broken pledge; they know that the word of honor of England was given in the opposite direction; and so, when there was some agitation about it, Mr. Balfour made another speech. Compare this with the one that I have just read. This speech was made in the House of Commons. I am not going to read all of it, but I want to read an extract that shows just exactly where he stood, as representing the British Government on this question, now when Egypt was down, now when they had no more use for her armies, now when the great powers had divided up the earth and put a fence around it and England had fenced into her corral the Egyptian nation of 13,000,000 people, without their consent. He said, speaking of Egypt:

> British supremacy is going to be maintained, and let nobody, either in Egypt or out of Egypt, make any mistake on that cardinal principle.

The mask is now off. The British Government has put behind her all the pledges she has made and the treaties she has made in regard to the independence of Egypt. She has cast aside all the beautiful speeches made during the war by her leaders, her statesmen, in proclaiming that they were fighting the war for the benefit of weak nations, for human liberty, and for human freedom. She has taken over now by this treaty 13,000,000 unwilling people, contrary to the doctrine of self-determination, contrary to the agreement upon which the armistice was based and the war actually ended.

I wish to read further from Dr. Gibbons's article. Dr. Gibbons was there, and is speaking from personal observation on Egyptian affairs. In referring to the message of the King that was sent to the Egyptian people and the reply of the Khedive, both of which I have read, Dr. Gibbons said:

> Sultan Hassein told me personally that the British Government promised him that the Egyptians would naturally participate in the peace conference and would have their say in establishing the new international status of Egypt.

And that is the most natural thing in the world. No man can read what I have already put into the RECORD in the way of official communications and public addresses by those who represented the British Government and reach any other conclusion.

Dr. Gibbons said at another place in his very interesting and able article:

> The Egyptians use against Great Britain the same points the races we have liberated use against Germany when they deny the assumption that they owe their material blessings to British rule and when they affirm that the Government which held them in subjection has exploited them. The Suez Canal was dug and the railway and irrigation system planned and partly constructed before the British came. Mohammed Ali and his successors were enlightened rulers, and they were responsible for the Europeanization of Egypt. They freed the country from the Turkish yoke, successfully defended its independence, and laid the foundations of the present economic prosperity. The British have reimbursed themselves richly for what they have done in developing irrigation and transportation facilities. Not only have the Egyptian people paid in taxes every cent spent upon them, but they were mulcted for a large portion of the expense of the reconquest of the Sudan, and the graft of big salaries and pensions to British officials and of the maintenance of the British garrison and police system has come out of the pockets of the Egyptian people. An appalling sum in gold goes from Egypt each year to be spent in England by the families of British officials and by the large roll of pensioners. The story of how Great Britain has used her position in Egypt to prevent the establishment of a native cotton textile industry for the benefit of Manchester and to cheat the Egyptian peasants out of the open market price of their cotton for the benefit of Liverpool is a telling refutation of the smug and comforting theory that the British occupation of Egypt is an altruistic burden unwillingly assumed by the British Government for the benefit of the Egyptians.

It has been said that there might be some danger on religious lines if the independence of Egypt were recognized, and I desire to read what Dr. Gibbons said in regard to that. As I said, he speaks, after having been on the ground, from a personal acquaintance with conditions.

> The British speak of the "nationalist faction" in Egypt and hint darkly at massacres of Christians and Europeans if the British relax their strong military control. This can fool only the uninitiated. So far as I have been able to see, and I have enjoyed exceptional opportunities, the native Christians are fully as nationalistic as the Mohammedans. If they have any fear of massacres the high clergy of the Coptic Church—

Which is the Christian church—

> If they have any fear of massacres the high clergy of the Coptic Church and the intellectual elements among the Copts act most queerly. They have assured me that they are heart and soul with the Mohammedans in demanding independence; Christian priests have preached patriotic sermons in mosques, and hundreds of Coptic young men and boys defied the British machine guns in the streets of Cairo and Assiut. When I visited the Presbyterian College at Assiut in 1916 one of the seniors, who had high standing, came to me secretly and begged me not to believe the stories of religious antagonism. "It is the old trick of 'divide et impera,'" he explained. "All educated Copts realize that our interests are with our Mohammedan fellow countrymen against the British. As long as we are under the régime instituted by Lord Cromer there is no hope of happiness for an educated Egyptian. The British are killing our souls. But with education we awake to self-respect and we can not help challenging foreign rule. We are all willing to die for our freedom."

This, Mr. President, was after the armistice, after England had taken possession as she has done, after she has murdered hundreds and thousands of Egyptian people for simply taking part in peaceful demonstrations demanding the independence of their own soil and their own country.

In another place in this article Dr. Gibbons speaks of an interview with the head of the British Government. He quotes the Khedive as saying to him:

> The British Government asked me to take the Sultanate when they deposed my nephew. I accepted the post and the war-time protectorate because we do not want the Turks and Germans in Egypt. Britain's interests and ours are identical when it comes to winning the war. But I do not want my people to think that I was unfaithful to the independence of Egypt. We have the definite promise of the British Government, only this is not the time to discuss the question in public. We shall have to wait until the end of the war.

In another place in this article he stated, quoting again from the Egyptian official:

> Our principal indictment of British rule is its utter disregard of the obligation of spending a fair part of the money derived from taxes on the education of the people. The British are deliberately keeping the Egyptians from getting an education, and then they tell the world that we are incapable of self-government.

On the religious question I desire to read from an article written also by a man who was on the ground, who talked personally with the people, an article by Dr. William T. Ellis, which was printed in the New York Herald December 23, 1919. It is an interesting article throughout, but I shall only read a part of it:

> November 13—

That was November 13, 1919.

> November 13 was the anniversary of the formation of the Egyptian delegation to Paris to plead for national rights—

And I will have something to say about that delegation later on—

> It has been agreed by the Egyptians to observe this day as a national holiday. Demonstrations of Egyptian patriotism, solidarity, and unity of purpose are always to be features of the commemoration.
> This year on November 13 a great company of Egyptions, officials, notables, students, business men, and fellaheen, estimated to number 20,000, marched in a body to the leading Coptic Church, the seat of the Patriarch, and then to El Azhar, the world-famous Mohammedan mosque. In both places as many persons as could enter united in public prayers for the independence of Egypt. Moslems led in prayers at the Christian church, and Christians led in prayers at the Moslem mosque.

This day, when the Egyptian people selected their official representatives to go to the peace conference to represent them as an independent nation, is sacred to them. It is the Egyptian Fourth of July and is as sacred to them as is the immortal Declaration of Independence sacred to the heart of every American.

Mr. President, at this point probably I might as well speak of the Egyptian delegation that is referred to by Dr. Ellis. When the war was over and the armistice signed, Egypt, naturally relying upon the pledges and all the circumstances surrounding her participation in the war, supposed that she would be admitted at the peace table when peace was made. She selected delegates, she selected her official representatives, and then for the first time she discovered that England had been false in all the pledges that she had made. Then she realized that she had been fooled, deceived, and that the lives of her soldiers on the battle fronts had been sacrificed in vain.

These delegates selected by the Egyptian people were arrested—no charge of any crime, no complaint that they had disobeyed any law, but they had been selected by the Egyptian people to go to Paris as the representatives of the Egyptian nation to make the peace for which they had been fighting during all the war. No sooner had she taken this step than British Army officials arrested those representatives. They threw them in jail; they took them to Malta and put them in prison, and, let me repeat, without ever a charge of any kind being made against them. This brought about an eruption in Egypt. When the Egyptian people learned that before their official representatives could leave their own soil they were arrested and thrown into prison and were not going to be permitted to go to the peace conference, they rose almost as one man, demanding the release of these men and the freedom of Egypt.

They realized then that they had been tricked. They realized that all the blood that Egyptians had spilled upon the various battle fields had been shed in vain so far as the independence of Egypt was concerned. They realized that the promises made by the British statesmen on behalf of the British Government, those glittering generalities proclaimed by the President of the United States outlining the basis of this peace, were all bunk. They realized that they had been deceived, that their nation was going to be denied independence, and, notwithstanding their sacrifices, notwithstanding their loyalty, they were going to be turned over to another nation and their nationality absolutely destroyed.

When these people came out upon the streets of the villages and cities of Egypt, what happened? They were met with machine guns, they were attacked by bombs from British airplanes, their houses were burned, many of their women ravaged, men were tied at the stake and whipped, hundreds of them were shot down unarmed while they were engaged in the peaceful pursuit of trying to demand publicly before the world that the integrity of the Egyptian nation should be respected. Old men were killed, little children were killed. I have here photographs of 18 Egyptians, showing the naked bodies where they have been lashed until great welts have come out over their breasts and their backs, not because they committed a crime, not because they were charged with the commission of a crime, but because by this reign of frightfulness, following the precedent of the Kaiser, Great Britain wanted to coerce the people into submission. These 18 pictures that I have are not all. More than 500 men were flogged on their naked bodies. I shall read later on from official correspondence of the official representatives of the Egyptian people to the peace conference. Pictures were taken only of those who were able to get to the place where there was a photographer. I do not see how any liberty-loving man, woman, or child can look over the record that is made and reach any other conclusion than that it would be a crime, an international crime, a dishonor to civilization, if we would give our approval to conduct such as that, even though done by one of our allies.

After the Egyptian representatives had been imprisoned and the English Army had fired upon innocent gatherings and assemblages of people and killed them in cold blood, it was discovered that they could not stop the protestations in that way. Men and women, imbued with the spirit of freedom and human liberty, rushed pell-mell in the face of machine guns, knowing that death was going to be the result.

Gen. Allenby himself recommended to the British Government that these men be released, and after they had been held in prison in Malta for some time they were released. They were permitted to go to Paris. They never got into the peace conference. I will take that up later when I come to discuss the official correspondence of these representatives of the Egyptian people. At the present time I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the truth of a fact that I asserted a while ago—that the great mass of British citizenship have no sympathy with this kind of procedure.

I wish to read an article from the London Nation printed on November 29, 1919. I will not read the entire article, because it is lengthy. It is all interesting and all has a direct bearing, but I will read only some quotations from it:

> The proclamation of a protectorate in December, 1914, was a staggering blow to the hopes of the nationalists. So long as our status in Egypt was legally undefined and unrecognized they clung to the dream that the occupation might one day end. They have their register of our promises to withdraw. There are, they say, no less than 60 official repetitions of that pledge, which, in Mr. Gladstone's famous words, "If one pledge can be more sacred than another," were invested with "especial sanctity." In 1914 we wiped that pledge finally from our consciences even more decidedly than we had done 10 years before in the Moroccan treaty.
> It is time—

Says this article in another place—

> It is time that we asked ourselves to state honestly why it is that we insist on breaking our promise to withdraw from Egypt, or why we refuse to apply "the right of self-determination." That right is not satisfied by conceding some guarded form of consultative assembly. It means, if it means anything, the right of a people to choose under what rule it will live. Even if we elect to say that Egyptians, after a generation of our tuition, are still political minors, have we not laid down the principle that such races may choose the power which is to receive a "mandate" to watch over them? We seem to remember that Mr. Lloyd-George proposed to consult the negroes of German Africa before he transferred them to our rule. To refuse a right to Egyptians which we allow to nomad Arabs and the Cameroon tribes is sorry trifling. What is it that deters us? There are three possible answers—the strategic argument of the road to India, the financial argument of the investor, and, of course, the general reluctance to surrender power. Power that results in scandal is no precious possession. There are ways of insuring financial stability which fall far short of a protectorate. As for the Suez Canal, if we were in earnest with the idea of the League of Nations, we should ourselves propose to safeguard its neutrality by the same régime which we shall apply to the Turkish Straits. In any event it would be easy to police the canal without administering or even garrisoning Egypt.

It has been difficult, Mr. President, to get any reliable information out of Egypt because of the censorship maintained by the British Government over everything coming from there. I wish to read on that subject a dispatch that came from Cairo, Egypt, dated December 20, 1919, which was printed in the New York Times on December 25, 1919. I will read only a part of that dispatch. I think it has an important bearing upon the information which we do get from Egypt. It shows that we do not get it all. There is not any doubt but the worst is yet to be told in regard to Egypt. Now, remember, this is from Cairo, Egypt, where since the armistice Great Britain has been in control:

> Owners and editors of newspapers have received official warning to refrain from printing matter likely to excite the public. Recent disorders were attributed, the warning stated, to certain newspapers. Announcement is made that in the future a newspaper is liable to suspension under martial law if it prints:
> 1. References to the political opinions or activities of schoolboys or other irresponsibles.
> 2. Political protests addressed to the authorities or to the British mission without the consent of the censor.
> 3. Anything calculated to encourage public servants to strike for political reasons.
> 4. Reports or aspersions calculated to inflame the populace against the British or Egyptian Governments;
> 5. Newspaper men are assured that there is no intention to prevent reasonable criticism and are advised to submit doubtful matter to the censor before publication.

That shows, Mr. President, the desperate means that are being now employed to suppress public discussion there. Newspapers must not print "political opinions or activities of schoolboys or other irresponsibles," the dispatch says. Some of these uprisings were led by students from the universities. They are called "schoolboys" and "irresponsibles." Educated people in Egypt are suppressed. "Anything calculated to encourage public servants to strike" must not be published. The newspapers are assured that there is no intention of interfering with the right kind of criticism, but if they have any doubt to leave it to the censor. We know from censorship in our own country what that all means.

Mr. President, England's course in Egypt since the armistice is almost parallel with Japan's course in Korea and China before the armistice. Japan paved her way to her barbarous and inhuman treatment of Korea by the most profound expressions of friendship and love for the Korean people and the Korean nation. She entered into the most solemn engagements with nearly all the civilized nations of the world that she would respect Korean national integrity. Every time she robbed Korea of her sacred soil she made additional protestations of friendship and love, and when she finally took Korea over and abolished the Korean Government in violation of every pledge she had made to Korea and the balance of the world she still protested her friendship and her love for her helpless victim.

Japan gave the same kind of assurances as to the integrity of China and for her firm friendship for the Chinese people. As her friendship grew, the itching of her palm also grew, and the greater love she seemed to possess for China, the greater was her ambition to rob China of her nationality, her railroads, her harbors, her commerce, and her freedom.

For more than 30 years England has been giving to Egypt and to the world her solemn pledge of national honor that she had no ambitions in Egypt, and that she had no intention of depriving the Egyptian people of their territory or of their national integrity. She, like Japan—with reference to Korea and China—has entered into treaties with other nations, in which she has solemnly declared that she desires the perpetuation of the Egyptian Government and the Egyptian nation. During all those years her statesmen and her premiers, speaking in her Parliament, have proclaimed the honesty of her intentions in Egypt; always claiming that the integrity of the Egyptian nation was the ultimate object of her intentions.

It might be remarked parenthetically, Mr. President, that at the peace conference England forgot all about Persia and did not put her into the treaty. So when the peace conference adjourned, England took Persia over without consultation with anybody.

These two allied nations—England and Japan—received the support of China and saw Chinese shed their blood in behalf of the allied cause, knowing at the time that at the peace table

China would be carved and her most valuable territory and possessions given to her worst enemy. England, with the other allies, received the support of more than a million Egyptians on the battle field in eastern Europe. She ate from the hands of Egyptian peasants the food that made her great victory under Allenby possible, knowing when she did it that Egypt would be denied a place at the peace table; that her country would be despoiled; that her nationality would be blotted from the face of the earth; that the blood of thousands of her loyal citizens had been shed for the allied cause in vain; and that the freedom which Egypt thought she would eventually attain would be denied.

Japan loved Korea because she coveted the Korean farms for her own people. Japan loved China because China had coal and iron that Japan needed. She loved China because she needed Chinese ports for her commerce, and the railroads and territory in Shantung for her expansion.

While not directly a part of the discussion of the pending treaty as it refers to Egypt, yet, as it has a relation to that subject because of the similarity of the treatment accorded the people, I might digress to say that India furnished more than a million men upon the various battle fronts in behalf of England's cause, and when the soldiers of India went home, imbued with a spirit of liberty, believing in the proclamation of self-determination that were made by England and the allies of England, believing thereby that she had fought to make the world more free and that in the end she might share some of that freedom—when those soldiers went home and undertook to demand it, in peaceable assembly, they were shot down in cold blood by British machine guns. I will insert, Mr. President, at this point in my remarks an article from London giving a report of an investigation that was made by English officials of one of these murderous assaults upon innocent and unarmed Indian subjects.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I desire first to know whether I have permission to insert in the RECORD the article to which I have referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). Without objection, permission is granted.

The article referred to is as follows:

OFFICIALS O. K'D BIG SLAUGHTER, PROBE SHOWS—GENERAL IN COMMAND TELLS BOARD PROBING APRIL RIOTS IT WAS "HORRIBLE DUTY," LONDON LEARNS—EVIDENCE REVEALS LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR APPROVED BLOODIEST SLAYING IN LATE WESTERN HISTORY.

[By L. R. Murdoch, Staff Correspondent, Universal Service.]

LONDON, December 13.

A bloodcurdling story of massacre has been revealed by the British commission investigating the recent riots in India. It shows a British general deliberately ordering 50 troops to attack a crowd of 5,000 civilians and to fire until their ammunition was exhausted. The command was obeyed to the letter.

Five hundred persons were killed and 1,500 wounded. It was the bloodiest slaughter of civilians by western troops in modern history.

The evidence shows that this act was approved by the British lieutenant governor. News of the affair has just reached London from India with the reports of the Government commission's hearings at Lahore. The slaughter took place at Armitsar last April and was ordered to put down the riots there which were part of a general uprising that threatened to engulf the whole surrounding districts and spread all over India.

MARCHES ON CROWD.

Gen. Dyer testified before the commission that he arrived at Armitsar on April 11. Although martial law was not declared, he took over the administration from the deputy commissioner. He was informed that the situation was grave in many districts, including Lahore, and ordered that the alleged seditious meetings cease immediately. On April 13, according to his testimony, Gen Dyer informed crowds at Armitsar that meetings were forbidden and that assemblages were likely to be fired on without warning.

Later he was informed of a big meeting, which he judged to be not merely a disorderly meeting but open rebellion. He marched 25 British rifles, 25 Indian rifles, and 40 Gurkhas armed with knives to the scene and discovered an agitator haranguing a crowd of 5,000.

OPENS FIRE AT ONCE.

Continuing his testimony, Gen. Dyer said:

"I deployed my men and within 30 seconds ordered them to fire. The firing continued for about 10 minutes. My object was to disperse the crowd, and a little firing would have been insufficient to achieve that object."

The general admitted he had not warned the crowd, and asked what reason he had for supposing the crowd would not disperse without firing being necessary, he replied: "I think it quite possible that I could have dispersed the crowd without firing, but they would have come back and laughed, and I should have made a fool of myself. My view was that the situation at Armitsar was serious. I looked at the crowd of rebels and considered it my duty to fire and fire well."

Lord Hunter, chairman of the commission, asked the general: "Was there any other course open?"

Gen. Dyer replied: "No, sir. I looked upon it as my duty—a horrible duty."

Gen. Dyer asserted that 1,650 rounds were fired, and between 400 and 500 persons were killed and about 1,500 wounded. The soldiers, he testified, continued firing until they had run out of ammunition. He said he had made up his mind that if order were defied he would shoot straight away, and that he had felt he "had to do something very strong."

Justice Rankin, a member of the commission, asked: "Was it not a form of frightfulness?"

Gen. Dyer replied he figured it was best to "shoot well and strongly, so nobody would have to shoot again." He said there was no "middle course." Asked if his idea had been to strike terror into the hearts of the inhabitants, he answered he had found they had disobeyed his order and he meant to punish them and give them a lesson. From a military viewpoint, he said, the demonstration of force was bound to make a wide impression throughout Punjab.

One of the commissioners then read a telegram from Lahore (seat of the British lieutenant governor) to Gen. Dyer. It reads:

"Your action correct. Lieutenant governor approves.

"LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR."

The lieutenant governor of Punjab is Sir Michael Francis O'Dwyer, who has held that post since 1893.

FORCED TO CRAWL.

The evidence showed that during the riots mobs broke up the telegraph service, damaged the freight yards, and slew one guard and two bank employees, burning the bodies. A bank manager also was killed. The Government offices and an Indian Christian church were set afire and a missionary was outraged and left for dead.

Gen. Dyer testified he avenged the outrage on the missionary by picketing the streets and not permitting a single Indian to pass without crawling.

Mr. NORRIS. I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator stated a moment ago, as I recall, that India furnished 1,000,000 soldiers during the war for the purpose of fighting for England and saving England. Does not the Senator think—and I do not propound this question by way of criticism of his position or his statement—if Germany had triumphed in the great World War that India would have been one of the objects of attack and that Germany would have superimposed her autocratic form of government upon India?

Mr. NORRIS. That may be.

Mr. KING. And does not the Senator, therefore, think that the Indians in fighting side by side with the Britishers, with the French, with the Italians, and with the Americans, were fighting for their own liberty and for the cause of civilization?

Mr. NORRIS. They thought they were; there is no doubt about that; but, as will be shown in this article, things that have happened in India almost demonstrate that they were mistaken. The Egyptians thought—no man doubts it; English statesmen led them to think so—that they were fighting for Egyptian liberty, for the integrity of the Egyptian nation; but they have found out since that they were not; that they were fighting for more territory for England. Before the war, Egypt, with the exception of a nominal suzerainty, was an independent nation. Her independence now has disappeared from the face of the earth, and she is part of the British Empire.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I am not propounding the question or making the statement which I am about to submit with a view of defending Great Britain, but I desire to call the attention of the Senator, very briefly, to what England has done in Canada, in Australia, in New Zealand, and in South Africa. She has given to those dominions of hers autonomy, local self-government; indeed, such a liberal form of government that they might be denominated governments in and of themselves and separated from the English Crown; at any rate, the chains which bind them to the parent Government are as thin as gossamer thread; they are chains of love, affection, and loyalty to the mother country rather than those of force and power.

Does not the Senator think that the Anglo-Saxon race, which finds its highest expression, of course, in this great Nation and finds high expression in the English people, in the end will deal justly by the Egyptians and by the Indians and will give them local autonomy and perhaps independence? I merely suggest that to the Senator for his consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, with what the Senator says about Canada, Australia, and New Zealand I find no fault. So long as Canada, Australia, and New Zealand or any other dependency desires to be under the British Empire I am the last man to interfere; that is where they ought to be, if they want to be there, and the other side wants them there. That, however, does not excuse England or us or anybody else for subjecting by force a people who have a right to their independence and to reduce them practically to the position of slaves.

The Senator asks do I think they will ultimately be treated right? Probably—I do not know—in a thousand years from now, if conditions continue that long; but, in my judgment, this treatment can not be continued very much longer, because the treatment that has been accorded Egypt since the armistice was signed is such that it is revolting to every man who loves human freedom and who has in his heart any feeling of brotherly affection toward his fellow man. Because England treats Canada right is no defense of England when she abuses India or when she mistreats Egypt. I am not complaining as to Canada; I am not complaining as to Australia or New Zealand; I am complaining of taking over a nation of 13,000,000 people without their consent, against their will, in violation of every pledge that ought to be sacred between man and man and particularly between nations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one further suggestion, if the Senator will pardon me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that the work of Great Britain in Egypt, in the physical and material development of the land, in the building of dams at stupendous cost, exhibiting the highest engineering feats that the world has seen, and which has resulted in bringing under cultivation thousands of acres of land in order to bring prosperity to the people, and, indeed, have brought the greatest prosperity to Egypt that she has ever enjoyed, together with the work which she has done in an educational way, her efforts to Christianize the people and to serve humanitarian impulses there, deserve one little word of commendation?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator has overstated the case; the statement he has made is taking the matter a little too far. England did not build the Suez Canal——

Mr. KING. I was not speaking of the Suez Canal; I was speaking of the Assouan Dam.

Mr. NORRIS. The Suez Canal was completed and the great Assouan Dam was partially completed before England's efforts began. It was the Egyptians, as stated in the article of Dr. Gibbons which I have already read, who Europeanized the Egyptian people and the Egyptian nation. But, Mr. President, is it the Senator's assumption that because one nation goes into another nation and says, "We will develop some natural resource that you have and that you have not developed," therefore it has the right to take possession of its country and to deny its nationality? Even if that were true common honesty would have demanded that England proclaim her intentions at the beginning and not practice deception.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Let me finish now.

Mr. KING. The Senator inadvertently——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator inadvertently did me an injustice.

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator, then, if he thinks that. I do not want to do him an injustice, of course.

Mr. KING. I knew, of course, that the Senator did not.

The question I propounded was this: Did not the Senator think there ought to be one word of commendation for England? I did not justify England in the retention of the territory. I asserted that England had done certain things which contributed to the material prosperity of the Egyptian people. Then I asked, With that record, did not the Senator think that England was entitled to a word of commendation? I did not state, as I understand the Senator now to affirm, that England, by reason of having taken possession, and notwithstanding she has done a great deal of good, was entitled to retain possession and to superimpose her form of government on an unwilling people. I do not affirm that. I did not intend to affirm it.

Mr. NORRIS. In my judgment, as I said, the Senator has overestimated and overstated what England has done. As I have already shown, and as I think nobody can successfully deny, everything that England ever did in Egypt the Egyptians paid for. They did the work; by taxation they paid for it; and they have not been allowed, for instance, and are not allowed now, to send their cotton out to the world in the open market, because England needs it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska further yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield, although I should like to answer one suggestion made by the Senator before he puts another question to me.

Mr. KING. All right. I will just ask this question, and then I will not bother the Senator again.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not object to being bothered.

Mr. KING. The Senator spoke about the cotton of Egypt. The Senator knows that Egypt never raised so much cotton as at the present time and never received so much for her cotton as at the present time, and that England has paid those very high prices and brought great prosperity to the people of Egypt.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I do not forget it, I am going back to answer the other suggestions; but let me ask the Senator a question on that point. The American cotton producer never received so much for his cotton. Are you going to give England credit for that? Are we going to give England credit for the high wages that American labor receives? And if we are, are we going to charge her up with the profiteering? Are we going to put on the other side of the ledger, then, if you want to assume that for England, all the crimes that have been committed everywhere, all over the world, in the name of human freedom?

I was about to say when the Senator interrupted me the last time, Is it any reason for us, for instance, to take control of another people against their will, particularly after we have promised we will not do it, because they have some industry that we think we can develop better than they? How would we feel if England or Egypt came to the United States and went out here a few miles beyond the Capitol and saw Great Falls, where the water of the Potomac rolls down to the sea, and has been rolling down to the sea since the beginning of time, all the power that it might develop wasted and gone, and said to us, "You have never developed that great possibility there for the benefit of humanity. We are going to do it. In order to do it we will take possession of the Government," and then they would take possession of the Government; and after a while somebody like the Senator from Utah would come along and say, when we were claiming our independence and were being shot down by machine guns, "Why, Great God! did not England or Egypt develop Great Falls? Have you not got a word of commendation for her? You never did it."

Where are we going to draw the line, Mr. President? Why, England placed the line, President Wilson placed the line, the whole world drew the line when we were fighting in this war, when they outlined what the terms of peace should be—self-determination; no people should be ruled without their consent. Nobody denies that Egypt is competent for self-rule. She has ruled herself in the past for many years. England has said so. She has promised that she had no other motive than the preservation of that nation and of that people; and it is no defense to say that she will develop the agricultural lands, raise more wheat and more cotton, and dam some of the streams—none whatever.

But, Mr. President, every development that has ever taken place in Egypt has been made by the toil of Egyptian citizens, paid for by the taxpayers of Egypt. That is the reason why England wants Egypt. It is the financial profit that she is getting out of it. As Dr. Gibbons says, there is a long list of pensioners in England living on the taxes that are wrenched from the toilers of Egypt, and she wants it to continue, and under this treaty it is going to continue.

Let me return now, Mr. President, to the point where I deviated from my address when I spoke of England in India. I was speaking of the love and the friendship that great nations have for little nations when they are about to gobble them up.

During the centuries that have passed England has kept Ireland in practical subjection, under continual professions of national friendship. She is now deporting Irishmen to England on the ground of all imaginable kinds of crimes, always professing her sincere friendship for the Irish people. England loved Persia because she wanted to corner the oil fields of the earth, and I have put into the RECORD, in a prior discussion of this treaty that she made with Persia, by which she practically takes over the Persian Government and loans to Persia $10,000,000 that the Persian people must pay back with 7 per cent interest in order to develop English commerce and safeguard these oil fields.

She loans to Persia, at 7 per cent, money that she borrows from the American people at 4¼ per cent and upon which she has not even paid the interest up to date. England loved Egypt because Egypt is on the road to India; because her agricultural lands are the most fertile of all the earth; and because Egypt possesses cotton that England needs to keep her spindles turning and her world commerce afloat.

These historical incidents, Mr. President, almost prove that when an autocratic monarch professes his passionate love for a weak nation and reaches forth his mighty hand to shower upon the poor and helpless the blessings of his favor, the wise man will brush aside the silken folds of the royal mantle to discover the stiletto.

Mr. President, the official representatives of the Egyptian people, as I said a while ago, were finally released from prison and went to Paris. They attempted to get into the peace chamber and they wanted to represent their Government at the peace council, and although the King of the Hedjaz was there, and all kinds of nomadic tribes were represented by various kinds of personages, Egypt was denied admittance. They refused to permit Egypt even to be heard when she was being tried for her own life. When these official representatives of 13,000,000 people who had been fighting loyally during the entire war were denied admission they had nothing left except to send official communications to that conference. They wrote official communications, asking to be heard, to Clemenceau, the president of the council; to Lloyd-George; and, last but not least, to President Wilson; and in every instance their communications were ignored. The only exception to that is an acknowledgment of those sent to President Wilson by his private secretary, saying that the communications had been received.

These official representatives then issued an appeal to the nations of the world setting forth what they believed to be their rights. They have been gathered together by these official representatives, and I have in my hand a copy of all these communications, given to me in person by one of these official representatives, and it would be interesting if it could be read from cover to cover.

Men who love liberty, men who believe in our system and in our own Government, who love the Declaration of Independence, who sympathize with the fathers who issued it and believe in the pronouncements of that immortal document, can not read these messages coming from this much-abused, faithful ally without tears coming to their eyes.

I am not going to read anything but extracts. First of all, let me say that in that council of peace was the King of the Hedjaz. Nobody knows yet who he is. We only know that he does not amount to anything. A whole lot of other insignificant nations were represented there. I am not complaining that their representatives were admitted. I am only calling attention to the fact that the representatives of only 200,000, 100,000, or 300,000 people, if they were fighting on the side of the Allies, were admitted with two exceptions, and those exceptions were Egypt and China. Japan was there; and if you compare the sacrifices made by Japan and those made by Egypt in this war, it is like comparing the noonday sun with the weakest star in the firmament. These representatives issued an official document, an official address, to the diplomatic representatives of all of the foreign countries represented in Egypt. I am going to read just one sentence from that, because it shows that if there was any question—they do not admit that there was any—about the stability of British investments—about the Suez Canal, for instance, which England did not dig, but took after somebody else did dig it—if there was any question about her holdings, they were willing that any provision protecting them might be put in. The world knows that there is not any. Ever since the Suez Canal has been dug Egypt has protected it, and by the sacrifice of her own blood and her own soldiers she saved it from being taken by Turkey in this war. So I will read from this official pronunciamento of these officials just one clause. It is No. 5. I wish Senators could read them all, because they show that Egypt is willing to do anything, to make any guarantee about the protection of anybody or anything in Egypt, and are willing that they should put into the treaty anything that will safeguard such protection if they would only maintain the integrity of the Egyptian nation. This clause reads:

> Egypt is disposed to accept every measure that the powers will judge useful for safeguarding the neutrality of the Suez Canal.

I am going to read from the official letter of these representatives to Lloyd-George. In that they say:

> Do you refuse to believe that Egypt has been a precious aid to you? The enormous sacrifices that we have made during the war in blood and treasure for the triumph of your cause were indispensable to you, and, moreover, you have recognized many times that these sacrifices were one of the principal factors of the victory in the Orient.

Further on they say:

> At whatever point of view we place ourselves, we can find, neither in the law nor in pretended military necessity, any excuse for the measure of which we are the victims. A single explanation remains that we ought not to allow ourselves to adopt, for it impugns your good faith—that you desire to make our silence, imposed by force, appear at Paris as the acceptance by Egypt of the protectorate and the political régime which it comports.

They practically said in there, "You have tried to keep us away; you have put us in prison, you are trying to shut out from the world the very fact that we have tried to be heard."

They also sent an official communication to Gen. Allenby, and I am going to read from that just a quotation:

> The military authorities summoned us finally and warned us that we were obstructing the functioning of the Government in trying to prevent the formation of a cabinet; and two days later were arrested and deported to Malta our president, Saad Pasha Zagloul, and three of our colleagues.

Further on they say in this same letter:

> Scarcely was the news of the arrest and deportation of our colleagues known than a numerous group of students of the higher schools came to inform us that they had decided to make manifestations. We advised them earnestly to give up their project and go back quietly to their studies. But it seems that their youth could no longer stand the policy of oppression and that in this state of mind they were unable to reflect seriously about our advice or persuade their comrades to listen to us.
>
> The day after the arrest the students made peaceful demonstrations. Nearly 300 were arrested. The following day, March 10, the students of Al-Azhar University participated in manifestations. Some hoodlums profited by this to attack tramcars and break the windows of several shops. On the 11th another peaceful manifestation of students was received by a volley of shots which killed a certain number of them. On the 12th similar peaceful manifestations were suppressed by machine-gun fire, which caused the death of more young people. The same day at Tanta a peaceful manifestation of students was met by continuous machine-gun fire, which made numerous victims killed and wounded. On the 13th and the 14th the British army in Cairo intervened to put down further peaceful manifestations by firing directly into the groups in the streets, who were without arms and who were committing no acts of violence.
> There is no doubt that this firing on unarmed students by the British troops, when the students were orderly and were simply making manifestations, provoked serious disturbances throughout the country. This was the last straw which broke the camel's back. In fact, on March 15 news began to arrive of an attempt to cut the railway lines, and immediately the entire country participated in those outbreaks. The discontent arising from the cruel treatment inflicted, in the interest of peace, upon a peaceful and unarmed people was not alone shown by the men. The most distinguished women in Egyptian society were not able, on their side, to see their fellow countrymen treated in this way and keep silent about it. The curtain that ordinarily separates our women of the upper classes from the outside world did not prevent them from expressing their sentiments. In fact, nearly 300 women of the most important families of Cairo organized on March 20 a simple and dignified manifestation after they had read in the morning paper that permission had been granted them. But when they got out of their carriages and reached the home of Saad Pasha Zagloul, the British soldiers surrounded them on all sides, with fixed bayonets pointed toward them, and compelled them to remain two hours under a broiling sun without allowing them either to walk or to go home in their carriages. The permission to return home was granted only after they had been seen in this situation by the personnel of the American and the Italian diplomatic agencies. This was another proof of the policy of harassing and humiliating the Egyptians, which, in justice and equity, must alone be held responsible for all the events that followed.

Now, Mr. President, when these Egyptian representatives were unable to get into the conference and were unable to get any answers to the communications to the members of the conference they sent an official communication to the members of the House of Commons in England. They said in part:

> To the Briton the most precious possession is his individual liberty and the independence of his country. Is it possible for him to deny to others that for the defense of which a million Britons have given their lives since August 1, 1914? We ask you simply to listen to us and then to decide whether the establishment of a British protectorate over Egypt, against our will and without our consent, is consonant with the traditions, individually and collectively, of your race.
> When Great Britain declared war against Germany, Egypt immediately followed her example. We Egyptians were in entire sympathy with the ideals in defense of which the British nation took up arms. We felt sure that the great conflict between the forces of democracy and the forces of autocracy, between principles based on right and fiats based on might, would end in securing for small and weak nations a brighter future. We believed with Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd-George that the triumph of Great Britain and her associates would establish the world on a new foundation. For this reason we were glad to ally ourselves with the powers that promised to fight until the sanctity of the treaties, the rights of small nations, the existence of an international morality were recognized throughout the world.

Mr. President, I call attention to that language. Does it not appeal to every liberty-loving person? Do they not there call attention to pledges and promises that, if we are square and honest, ought to be kept sacred and inviolate, and has it not been demonstrated that they have been cruelly thrust aside and held for naught and these people subjugated and their nation destroyed without their consent and without an opportunity to be heard at the judgment seat of the court where the judgment was rendered?

They say further:

> During long years of war, in which we suffered with you and helped you to bear the burden, we were repeatedly told that when the final settlement came none who had helped in the common cause would be forgotten. Gen. Sir Edmund Allenby, the most competent man in the world to make the statement, declared publicly that the aid of Egypt was the most important factor of success in the decisive British campaign against the Turks. Had we not reason, then, to look forward to the defeat of Germany as our day of independence?
> Another cause of encouragement was the recognition of the independence of our brothers of the Hedjaz, who speak the same language as ourselves and are of the same religion as most of us. The Arabs of the Hedjaz did not have before a separate political existence like ourselves. In fact, within a century they were under our political control. We watched the dealings of Great Britain with the Hedjaz with keen interest and we registered with satisfaction the statement of the British cabinet, made in the House of Commons and reiterated at the opening of the peace conference, that the action in regard to the Hedjaz was inspired solely by the desire to help a subject nation to free itself from a foreign yoke and was not due to considerations of expediency. Was it illogical for us to expect from the British Government, in view of the oft-repeated assertions of its members, treatment at least as generous as that accorded to the Arabs of the Hedjaz?

Further on they say:

The only crime of which we have been guilty is the ardent desire to be consulted concerning our own destinies.

* * * * * * *

At the peace conference—

They say—that was to be convened in Paris we wanted only what every other race of the Near East asked for and obtained—a hearing of our case. Permission was denied us, the representatives of Egypt, to go to London or to Paris. When the Egyptian cabinet resigned in protest against the refusal of the British military authorities to allow us to go to England, the president of our delegation and three of its members were arrested suddenly and were deported to Malta without any charge having been preferred against them.

In Paris we have received no answer to our communications to the peace conference.

I desire to read a quotation from the official message that these representatives sent to Mr. Clemenceau, the president of the peace conference:

In the name of liberty, of which you have been during your whole life, by word and pen, the untiring champion; in the name of justice, which you have promised to make the basis of the deliberations and decisions of the conference; in the name of humanity, which can not permit that a people pass from hand to hand like vulgar merchandise, we implore you not to interpret our silence and failure to appear in person at Paris as our acceptance of the domination imposed upon us, nor to decide the future of our nation without having heard us.

No response. Silent as the grave. No answer. Would that appeal strike an honest American citizen as being worthy of consideration when it comes from people representing 13,000,000 associates in the war, hundreds of thousands of whose fellow citizens have died to bring about the victory that this peace conference was called to put into actual force in the way of a treaty?

They sent an official communication addressed to the peace conference itself. After they got out of jail and got to Paris, they tried every means and every avenue to reach the men who were holding the world in their hands, to reach the three men who had the destiny of the world in their hands, every one of whom had made to the world the most beautiful promises for weak nations, for human freedom, for liberty, and for self-determination; every one of whom, singly and collectively, denied them a right even to be heard, and condemned them without a hearing. In this communication they say:

The anxiety of the Egyptians will be easily understood. They see all the races—even simple tribes—whose political status the war has changed, invited to make their voices heard at the conference, while they alone of the nations affected by the war had been deprived of this right. It is difficult, in order to justify such an equality of treatment, to invoke any plausible reason in harmony with the principles consecrated by the war and that the conference had taken upon itself the obligation to follow.

* * * * * * *

On August 5, 1914—

I think it is August 6, because that is my recollection of the day they declared war, but they say in here August 5—

On August 5, 1914, we declared that we were in a state of war with Germany. When, several months later, Turkey intervened in the conflict as an ally of Germany, the situation of Egypt, her vassal, became very delicate. It is then that the authorized representatives of the nation proposed to the British authorities that the independence of Egypt be proclaimed. With the political situation thus arranged, Egypt would be able to fight, at the side of the Allies, on any of the battle fields. This suggestion was not listened to. Great Britain decided upon another solution in declaring propriu motu, at the beginning of the war, and because of the war, her protectorate over Egypt, in spite of our national aspirations. Nevertheless, the country made, for the cause of the Allies, very heavy sacrifices. Gen. Allenby has recognized that the Egyption factor was one of the most decisive in the victory against the Turks. Is it possible, after that, to say that the Egyptian problem is not within the competence of the conference?

They close this memorable epistle to the conference by saying:

The Egyption delegation request the peace conference, in the name of the Egyptian people, that it be admitted to formulate the demands of the country in accordance with the rules of right and justice that are the foundation of the deliberations of the conference.

Under all the circumstances, Mr. President, what honest, honorable, or fair right had the peace conference to deny that simple request?

They wrote another communication to Mr. Clemenceau, and in it they said:

The conference of the allied and associated powers, regardless of the fact that Egypt had played a great part in the triumph of the principles of right and justice, and therefore deserved the application of these principles to her case, has refused to apply to Egypt these same principles.

The conference refused to listen to the voice of Egypt, which, from the very outset, declared herself in a state of war with the enemies of the Entente, and participated loyally in the struggle of the Allies.

The conference has refused to discuss, with the representatives of the Egyptian people, the political future of their country, in spite of the fact that the status of Egypt had been changed owing to the war.

They wind up that communication to M. Clemenceau by saying:

"Peace," said President Wilson, "can only be lasting if it extinguishes resentment in the hearts of nations, and if there be only one justice for the strong and the weak alike."

Yet the Egyptian people have been sacrificed on the altar of diplomatic understandings between the great powers. One can hardly imagine why such a sacrifice has been inflicted on a nation like ours, with such a glorious history.

For these considerations, we, the representatives of the Egyptian people, must raise the voice of that poor nation which has been treated as if it did not belong to this universe, and which had worked against herself by throwing her lot on the side of the Allies. Egypt protests most strongly against such a decision, which has deprived her of the benefit of peace after having been a most faithful collaborator during the war. A nation which respects herself, is firm in her ideals and conscious of her rights, can not allow others to dispose of her destiny, a destiny of which she is alone mistress.

In another part of the letter to M. Clemenceau they say:

It will not be easy to make the Egyptians understand by what cruel trick of fate they must be excepted from the rule which lays down that every people has the right to dispose of itself.

Even were Egypt reduced to slavery by a permanent decree of the peace conference, should she not still have the right to choose her master and indicate the mode of government she would like to live under, seeing that she must live in tutelage?

In other words, if the peace conference is going to say that Egypt can not longer live as a nation but must be turned over to some one of the great powers, can not her executioners even give her the simple right of choosing the master who is going to rule over her? But she was denied even that. They further state in the same letter:

In the name of the Egyptian nation we protest against the measure that it is proposed to apply to us—a measure unjust, illegal, prejudicial to the interests of Egypt and of the world peace. Once more we ask the peace conference to hear the voice of Egypt, as it has heard the voice of other peoples. We ask it in conformity with the spirit of the noble principles established by the victory in order to spare further shedding of innocent blood and in order to establish peace.

In another communication to the president of the peace conference they say:

We desire to present to the conference a brief statement of the different forms of atrocities committed in our country. The conference will thus be in a position to judge whether, after such treatment, the Egyptians should be expected to live under the British protectorate. Since our race aspires to assume its own part of the obligations that humanity is imposing upon all civilized peoples, we hope that the conference will reexamine our case.

The Egyptian people hesitate to complain of the cruel vengeance of which they are the victim, vengeance meted out in the name of the great English democracy, but certainly without its knowledge. The Egyptian people hesitate to brand with such atrocities the glorious British Army at the very moment of its leaving the battle fields crowned with a laurel wreath of victory. But our hesitation is not due to the lack of the importance of the facts which constitute our grievance or to lack of proofs to establish our charges. We know that the great bulk of the British people consent to what is being done in Egypt only through ignorance of the case of the Egyptian people and of the shameful daily facts of the occupation. The truth has been rigorously suppressed. The British public does not know; the British Parliament does not know. Is there not reason for us to doubt the triumph of justice, when we are confronted with diplomatic combinations of statesmen who mold the policy of the great powers and who, by constantly giving in to each other on questions of principle, are sharing at the expense of justice and right the spoils of the weak? * * *

We refuse to believe that in this solemn hour of history, when there is a possibility of a new world arising from the ruins of the war, sordid, material interests can completely stifle the most elementary sentiments of humanity. Certainly, public opinion in Great Britain and her self-governing dominions, in the United States, in France, and in Italy will listen to our grievances and examine the statement of atrocities committed against the Egyptians and of humiliation imposed upon the Egyptians—our reward for the aid we have given the Allies to bring about the happy end of the war.

We refuse to believe that the British people are against us. We doubt if they realize why their Government is against us. The hostility of the military authorities in Egypt against the people of the country and the barbarous acts of their troops are the result of our having taken British statesmen at their word. During the war we helped against the common enemy. After the armistice we simply asked for the reward others were receiving, including our nearest neighbors—our independence.

We based our claim on our natural right, on the reiterated promises of the British Government, on the principles of the Allies, and on the enormous sacrifices we made for the cause of the Allies, and which were, according to Gen. Allenby, the principal factor of victory on the Asiatic front. It is painful to us to impute atrocities to the soldiers of the greatest civilized nation; but can we Egyptians remain with folded arms and keep absolute silence in the presence of the different forms of martyrdom the British military authorities are inflicting upon us, especially when our conscience is free from having committed the slightest crime? We know that the strong has always a tendency to abuse his strength, and that it is regarded only as a regrettable weakness or as unavoidable in scattered instances to exceed the limit of reasonable treatment of the enemy; but, as for us, we have never been the enemies of Great Britain; we have never been in a war against Great Britain; on the contrary, we aided her with our strength up to yesterday. Then if excesses committed against the enemy are reprehensible, what is to be thought of excesses committed against a friendly and allied people, and of attacks against its liberty and against its life? Can we hold our peace and not complain when it is decided that every Egyptian, of whatever rank, must stand up and salute passing British officers? Can we preserve our serenity when our women are violated, our villages burned, the innocent assassinated en masse?

Mr. President, these representatives submitted to the peace conference with this letter and others like it evidence upon which the statements are based. Not only were the inhuman acts which they have outlined committed by British soldiers, but the most tantalizing arrangements were made, by which the Egyptian, as he stood on the street, had to salute every English officer when he came in sight, and if he did not do so he was arrested. The occurrences in Egypt are almost impossible of belief, even when you read the testimony that was submitted. I confess, Mr. President, that I hesitated before I thought it was proper even to produce the evidence to the Senate, because I could not make myself believe that Great Britain, our ally, would stoop to perform the barbarous and inhuman acts that have been committed by British soldiers in Egypt after the armistice, particularly when we remember that Egypt was our friend, our ally, and, according to her numbers and her ability, sacrificed almost as much as any other nation, and at least nearly as much as any other nation if we exclude France.

They submitted some evidence of an English woman which is contained in a letter. This was official; it was sent to the peace conference; it is something which is backed up and vouched for by the official representatives of the Egyptian nation. They have sent hundreds and hundreds of names, of affidavits, all kinds of evidence, sustaining the charges, and they say in one of their communications that no charge is made by them, no evidence submitted, where there is any doubt as to its truthfulness. Here was an English woman who was in Egypt after the armistice when the British took possession of the Egyptian nation by force. Like other communications, I shall only read a part of it, because I can not take the time of the Senate to read all these communications, but I wish the Senate to understand that I am not omitting parts of them simply because they do not bear out what I am claiming. It would be just as interesting if they could all be read, if all could be told, although the story would be long and perhaps tiresome. In the letter which this woman wrote she first stated that she was in Egypt for five months. The letter was printed April 2, 1919. In her letter she says:

In the canteen in which I worked a very good native servant was kicked and knocked about simply because he did not understand an order given him by a soldier. An educated native in the town was struck in the mouth and his inlaid walking stick snatched from him by a soldier who wanted it. More than one English resident said to me, "It will take years to undo the harm that has been done here by the army." Personally—

Listen to this, Senators. Here is an English woman, a loyal English citizen, speaking, and she says:

Personally I feel that were I an Egyptian I should have spared no effort to evict the British. I felt ashamed of my country—bitterly ashamed.

She winds up her letter with this sentence:

Small wonder if they hate and dread us.

Some time ago the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] interrupted me by telling what the English had done in Egypt, and, among other things, he said they had taken the Christian religion there. Mr. President, this letter and hundreds and hundreds of others show under what difficulties a poor Christian missionary would be laboring in Egypt with British soldiers performing the inhuman, dishonorable acts that have been going on there ever since the British took possession after the armistice. Can we expect to spread the Christian religion by such treatment as is narrated by this Christian woman? Can we expect to spread the doctrine of the lowly Nazarine by taking those who do not agree with us and flogging them, as this evidence shows was done with hundreds and hundreds of innocent Egyptians? Can we expect to spread the Christian religion if we burn the villages, outrage the women, and steal the property of unoffending, innocent citizens living in their own country? Is that going to help the Christian religion? Every Christian missionary and every Christian throughout Christendom will blush with shame when they read the story of British cruelty in Egypt since the armistice.

In one of these official communications they say:

Consequently, when the armistice was concluded and Turkey found herself in a situation that no longer permitted her to maintain her claim to the suzerainty of Egypt, and Egypt thus became ipso facto independent, our people named this delegation for the purpose of asking the conference to establish in fact the independence we possessed in law, for the situation of England in Egypt rests on no foundation other than the presence there of an army cowing the people into submission. Great Britain is in Egypt not by right of conquest nor by right of any international agreement.

Mr. President, I do not believe any man can doubt the ability of Egypt to govern herself when he reads these communications from her official representatives. In all the diplomatic correspondence of the world, including that of the most enlightened and most powerful nations of the world, there is nothing that excels them in eloquence or in logic of argument. Such a people are not ignoramuses; people who can write the story that is printed in these letters should not be denied the right of self-government, especially when the denial of that right breaks a sacred promise made to the civilized world.

They say further:

The answer of the British military authorities to the official request of the Egyptian Government was to order the arrest and deportation to Malta of the president of the delegation and of three of his colleagues.

That is a repetition of what I have already read; but they go on in this communication at great length and tell about the suppression of all the meetings by the machine guns, and so forth, the burning of villages, and in one place they say:

The manifestations were suppressed by machine guns, which mowed down dozens of the unfortunate demonstrators. Since the Egyptians had no arms the order to fire was totally unwarranted, but frightfulness could not now stop the Egyptians from persisting in the determination to make the effort to obtain their independence.

Notwithstanding, Mr. President, they were shot down in cold blood, they still were so much imbued by the spirit of human freedom and liberty that they went on with their manifestations, knowing that it meant death.

They had firm faith in the principles of President Wilson—

Great God, how they were deceived—which had been solemnly accepted by the Entente Allies. They felt that if their delegation could only get to Paris, justice would be accorded them. So, in spite of death that awaited them, they advanced in groups in ecstasy, making the sacrifice of their lives to the cause of liberty. According to figures given in the House of Commons on May 15, the number of those who fell in this way for the triumph of their ideal was more than a thousand.

Further on they say:

No longer content to stop the demonstration by the use of rifles and machine guns, they were guilty in several places of rape, of the assassination of peaceful villagers—

They are speaking of the British soldiers—of pillage, of arson—all with the most trifling pretext or even without pretext.

Later they say:

Those who rule us have no thought of the pride of the people. The general commanding the British forces of upper Egypt decreed that every Egyptian must salute British officers passing in the streets under penalty of being dragged before a court-martial. These orders were no sooner put into effect than the dignitaries and high officials shut themselves in their homes and abandoned their personal affairs and those of the State.

* * * * * * *

On March 30 an armored train transporting several hundred British soldiers stopped above the village of Chobak. A certain number of soldiers penetrated the village, pillaging everything that was within their reach without encountering the slightest resistance. They attacked the honor of women. A husband who wished to interfere was immediately shot. Soon the soldiers spread themselves throughout the village and committed the most shameful excesses upon the women. Woe to her who wished to defend herself; she was immediately struck down. Woe to the man who wished to intervene; he underwent the same fate.

After the village was burned a hundred and forty-four houses were destroyed. There remain standing of this village only 56 houses. Twenty-one people were killed and 12 wounded. Some underwent a refined martyrdom. The soldiers buried the assistant mayor, his son, his brother, and two other persons up to their waists, and cut them up with their bayonets until they were dead. * * *

A detachment of more than a hundred soldiers, conducted by their officers, went to the village of Azizia, while another detachment of the same size went to Bedrechien. Motive? Searching for arms. The soldiers, after having pillaged the two villages, burned a large number of houses. * * *

In certain quarters of Cairo the soldiers attacked the inhabitants, ransacking their homes, and stealing everything they found, like silver and precious objects. In a single quarter and in one night the crimes reported to the police amounted to 32. The victims belonged to all classes of society—generals, notables, working people.

And then they refer, at these various places, to the annex attached, in which is the evidence upon which these charges are based:

See Annex No. 6. Annex No. 7 tells the history of a woman who, chased by the soldiers, succeeded with the aid of her husband in fleeing and arriving at her door. But the soldiers fired on her and killed her. * * * A little girl of 10 years was violated by several soldiers and was finally found dead.

* * * * * * *

Under pretext that in the neighborhood of the village of El-Chabanat an Indian soldier was killed, a detachment of English soldiers entered the village and, after having pillaged it, burned it, leaving more than 4,000 people without shelter, all this without investigation and without the slightest proof of an actual crime.

In that case, Mr. President, an English soldier, an Indian—some of the English soldiers were Indians—was killed, and there was no investigation made as to the cause of his being killed; and, Mr. President, you ought to expect some of them to be killed. There would be a good many of them killed if those things were going on in America. Every man who had an opportunity would kill one or two or three or four, or as many as he got an opportunity to kill. So an English soldier was killed, and in order to get the man who killed him they destroyed the whole village by burning it.

Under pretext that a shot had been fired at a British patrol which was passing at a certain distance from the village of Kafr Moussaed, the soldiers entered the said village, and also in the villages of Choubra-El-Charkieh and Kafr-El-Hagga, as well as in the hamlets that depend upon them. They compelled the whole masculine population to appear, and condemned them to be flogged on the stomach and on the back. * * *

And they were flogged.

The whole of Egypt rejects the British domination. The unanimous will of an entire people, homogeneous and having the ethnological conditions necessary to form once more its national unity, is the best proof that the people are worthy of independence. * * * It will be a crying injustice if the conference sanctions the loss of the autonomy we acquired a hundred years ago. * * *

We demand only the right to live. In virtue of what laws or of what principles of politics and morality should we be rewarded for the aid we have furnished the victors by the application of the treatment worse than that inflicted upon the vanquished enemies? Is it conceivable that the Egyptian people can be treated like ordinary merchandise in the political market, and this in the twentieth century, by the will of a conference that has not ceased to proclaim as its raison d'etre the liberation of small nationalities and the laying down of world-wide conditions which will insure a durable peace? * * *

Do you believe that our independence and our self-respect are less precious to us than your independence and your self-respect are to you?

In view of these considerations, we have the right to count on the equity of the peace conference. As the principal aim of the peace conference is to prepare a durable peace, we hope that our case will be reexamined, and that we shall be invited to present the wishes of the people of Egypt. In this way will acts be brought into agreement with principles. In this way alone will the allied and associated powers arrive at the peace they desire to attain.

Mr. President, they speak of the Egyptians that were flogged, and they send a photograph of 18 men whose pictures were taken a day or two after they were flogged. They say, in another communication, that these were the only men who were able to get to Cairo, where their photographs could be taken; so they do not represent the worst of the flogging. But no man can look without indignation and horror at these photographs of the naked bodies of innocent Egyptians, flogged not because they were armed, not because they had been even charged with committing a crime, but because they were Egyptians, because they wanted to be free, because they wanted their own nation to stand among the other nations of the world, because they wanted the proper reward for the sacrifices of hundreds and thousands of their fellow citizens who had given their lives on the battle field in order that the allied cause might win.

In one of these annexes they give a report of some of the atrocities, and I want to read a very few of them.

After they had described the burning of a town they say:

At 6 o'clock a. m. of the same day the village of Kafr El Hagueh—about 2½ miles from the railway line—and the surrounding villages were encircled. The villagers, who were at work in the fields, were obliged to reenter their homes in the midst of the shots fired upon them by the soldiers. The houses were all searched and all the male population taken to the railway station of Saft El Melouk. There they were encircled by British soldiers with fixed bayonets. The women and children had followed their husbands and parents, shouting and wailing, but dared not approach too near their people for fear of the soldiers.

And so they go on and describe how they were punished.

However this might be, they begged the general to institute an inquiry—

A charge had been made in this case that somebody had shot a British soldier and wounded him, and they were taking these towns in order that they would be sure to get the guilty person.

However this might be, they begged the general to institute an inquiry so as to punish the real author of the crime of which they accused the inhabitants of the region, all assuring him that the person or persons who had committed it could only belong to the lowest class of the population. All this was to no avail, however, the general declaring that unless the culprit surrendered or was indicated he would see that his orders were executed. * * * He refused to listen to us.

They say further:

Just then, however, we heard a terrible tumult, which was entirely dominated by the groaning of the men. The women and children were shouting and crying as they could see the sufferings of their parents from the banks of the canal where they had gathered all together.

Each man was brought before the authorities and was asked if he could indicate the criminal or any place where arms were concealed.

The soldiers' pretext for doing these various things was hunting for arms, hunting for guns and ammunition, which it was alleged had been concealed. I have an idea—I do not know, but I have an idea—that there were guns and ammunition concealed. They ought to have been concealed. They would have been justified in concealing them. They were justified in using them.

Each man was brought before the authorities and was asked if he could indicate the criminal or any place where arms were concealed. When he answered in the negative he was given a card and told to go on to a kiosque situated on the quay. Upon his arrival there he was seized by soldiers, who undressed him, took all his money away, and, as soon as he was naked, placed him with his head through a hole. Four soldiers held him outside this hole while four groups of soldiers, each composed of three soldiers, held his feet and hands in lifting up his body. Two other soldiers then flogged him unmercifully, without taking any care as to where the blows might fall.

This over, he was thrown out of the kiosque and beaten and kicked by other soldiers outside the kiosque. Some of these men fainted from the pain inflicted; others vomited blood. There was no doctor there to take care of those wounded or to prevent those who were ill or feeble already from being thus tortured.

The English did not even respect old age, and men over 50 years of age were tortured.

They give the names and the addresses of hundreds of people that it is alleged were thus treated, and they also attach to their official document to the peace conference a report of the medical authorities who examined the men after they were flogged and after they were abused. They give the names of the doctors.

Mr. President, thus far I have read letters sent by these representatives to the conference as a body, to the president of the conference, M. Clemenceau, individually, and to Lloyd-George as an individual. Now, I propose to read extracts from communications that were sent to our own representative, President Wilson, who was also there, and who joined in this refusal to give them a hearing. I want the Senate to consider what they said to President Wilson in connection with what President Wilson said in his speech at Mount Vernon on the 4th day of July, 1918.

The President in this speech was speaking of the things that must be attained before peace could be procured, and, among other things, he enumerated the following:

II. The settlement of every question, whether of territory, of sovereignty, of economic arrangement, or of political relationship, upon the basis of the free acceptance of that settlement by the people immediately concerned, and not upon the basis of the material interest or advantage of any other nation or people which may desire a different settlement for the sake of its own exterior influence or mastery.

Let us bear in mind that speech of President Wilson when we read the pleadings that these official representatives sent to him for mercy, for justice, for a hearing, for life. Let us remember, also, that that speech was one of the fundamental principles agreed upon by all of the belligerents upon which the armistice was signed, and therefore all of the members of the peace conference were bound by the sacred honor of the nations they represented to give adherence to that speech. President Wilson was not only bound by the honor of his own country, but he was bound by his own individual honor as a man, to give effect to the proclamation that he himself had put forth, and which rang around the world with the approval of all liberty-loving people everywhere. But, notwithstanding this, he, too, turned a deaf ear to the pleadings of these suffering people.

In the first place, Mr. President, before these representatives of Egypt had been arrested, while they were still in Egypt, they sent a telegram to President Wilson at Paris; and, as I have done with the others, I shall not be able to read it in full. I shall just read extracts. From that telegram, I read the following:

No people more than the Egyptian people have felt strongly the joyous emotion of the birth of a new era which, thanks to your virile action, is soon going to impose itself upon the universe, and to spread everywhere all the benefits of a peace whose calm and durability will no longer be troubled by the ambitions of hypocrisy or the old-fashioned policy of hegemony and furthering selfish national interests.

No people more than the Egyptian people appreciate the admirable disinterestedness with which your country entered into the war—disinterestedness that now enables it to demand that the same justice rule in deciding the affairs of the feeble as of the powerful, of the small as of the great.

The same telegram proceeds:

Unfortunately, the authorities have refused passports to the members of the delegation, and this measure which deprives us of presenting to world-wide public opinion our griefs and our wishes leaves the cause of Egypt at the mercy of insufficient and inexact documentation, and does not permit the realization of the insistent desire of Your Excellency, shared by the Allies, of seeing the destinies of peoples directed in accordance with their own desires.

They wind this up by saying:

Egypt begs Your Excellency to give her the opportunity of having her voice heard in defense of her lawful aspirations.

In another telegram to Mr. Wilson they say:

Egypt is trying to win her independence—the national right of nations—and she respectfully appeals to Your Excellency to help her in attaining this noble end.

In another telegram they say:

In two previous telegrams we have informed Your Excellency of the refusal of the British authorities to permit the departure of the delegation that has been intrusted with the responsibility of defending the interests and presenting the demands of Egypt in Europe. * * *

As we do not cease to be met with a refusal to allow our departure from our own country, the Egyptian delegation renews to Your Excellency its urgent prayer to help us to be in a position to expose the aspirations of Egypt.

They were still in Cairo. They had not yet been arrested. They were not yet in jail. They commenced to communicate with President Wilson by telegram, and the next thing that happened to them they were put in jail where they could not send telegrams. I do not know whether there was any connection between the telegram sent to President Wilson and the fact that the British nation arrested these people, but at first the British nation satisfied itself by refusing passports which said, in effect, "you can not go out of the country," and when they commenced to send telegrams to President Wilson asking him to intercede as the result of that, or at least following that, came their arrest and incarceration in jail. They sent another telegram, and, very complimentary, all of these were to the President, and very properly so, because they believed the President meant all the beautiful things he had said about the rights of small nations, about human liberty, and about self-determination:

To the great and venerated President who led the people of the United States in their disinterested participation in the European conflict to save humanity and to preserve the world in the future from the horrors of war we send our affectionate greetings;

To the eminent philosopher and statesman who occupies to-day a preponderant place among the leaders of peoples and whose high ideals are imposing themselves upon statesmen and all nations we offer our homage and our admiration;

To the chief of the great American democracy, who left his country in order to bring about a durable peace based upon equal justice for all and guaranteed by the society of nations, we submit the cause of Egypt, which is subjected to a foreign domination that Egypt unanimously rejects.

And yet the only response to that telegram that was sent from Cairo was the arrest and incarceration in prison at Malta of these representatives. But finally, after they had been released, as I have related, and got to Paris, they then took it up again with President Wilson. They sent him a communication from the hotel where they were living in Paris, and I quote from that:

From the beginning of the war—

They said to President Wilson—

the Egyptian nation has never faltered in its loyalty to the Entente Alliance, and especially to Great Britain. To avoid the raising of embarrassing questions the Egyptian leaders decided to work wholeheartedly for the winning of the war and postpone discussion of the future of Egypt until the peace conference.

A delegation has been sent to Paris by the Egyptians to present their case. We represent all elements of the Egyptian population—Mohammedan and Christian alike.

The only thing the President ever did, so far as the Egyptians were concerned, was to send them this letter:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 22 and to say that it will be brought to the President's attention.

Sincerely, yours,

(Signed) GILBERT F. CLOSE,
Confidential Secretary to the President.

Another letter was sent to President Wilson, dated April 29, 1919. I read only parts of it:

Upon your respect for the rights of men we base our hope that the demand will be granted. Our faith in the impartial justice upon which you proposed to make the peace of the world is so great that even your recent intervention in connection with the British protectorate has not shaken it. Whatever may have been the reason that led the United States to recognize the protectorate, we believe that we should now make known the real opinion and aspirations of our country.

The privilege which we ask was not refused to the enemies of the cause of liberty. Can it be denied to those who have contributed to the triumph of liberty?

We make a special appeal to Your Excellency, because the people of all Egypt have placed their supreme hope in you. In no country was your stirring call for justice heard with such response as in Egypt. We are hungering and thirsting for liberty, and in your principles we see the pledge of our deliverance.

We were the first to rejoice over the coming of an era when "all people and all nationalities would have a right to live on a footing of equality, in liberty and security one with the other, whether they be strong or whether they be weak.

We have counted on your promise that in the general settlement the people would have satisfaction. That is why our young men rallied to the cry, "Long live Wilson!"

Only yesterday your solicitude spoke eloquently on behalf of a small nation, refusing to allow her conquerors to rule without the control of the League of Nations. You would not admit that a people who until now had formed a part of the Ottoman Empire should pass from one sovereignty to another like a piece of merchandise. You insisted that their aspirations be respected. Can this solicitude stop at the threshold of our unfortunate country?

Egypt is the cradle of civilization. The people of Egypt have faith in the high mission you assumed when you said that justice and not interest must dominate.

Here is another communication written by the president of the Egyptian delegation on behalf of that delegation to President Wilson. This is in June, 1919, while the President is still at Paris at the peace conference. He said:

I had the honor to request on April 22 last an audience, in which, as the representative of a historic and civilized country, I had hoped to submit to Your Excellency the real state of affairs in Egypt, as well as the national aspirations of my fellow countrymen.

* * * * * * *

My request for an audience was based upon the fact that the hopes of the Egyptian people rested in you as the author of these noble principles, and as the honored President of the great American democracy, which entered the war for no selfish purpose, but merely to serve the cause of liberty and justice.

Again the material and scientific resources of the United States, together with the great moral efforts of the Republic, were utilized—as Your Excellency emphatically declared—not in self-defense, nor for the love of conquest, nor, may I be permitted to add, for the consecration of foreign dominations over unwilling countries, but for the establishment of a system of international justice before which must bow both the stronger and the weaker nations.

These principles—which were declared in the name of the American people as the basis of a democratic and a durable peace—have become so deep-rooted in the hearts of the whole Egyptian people that they revolted, unarmed, for the application of these principles to their country. Their absolute faith in the 14 points, in the speech of September 27 last, and in other declarations was unshakable. And the bullets of the British Army in Egypt were powerless to shake their firm belief in your ability—and in the ability of the American people—to realize the principles for which they had fought and won. In the deportation of my colleagues and myself the Egyptian people saw an attempt on the part of the British authorities to deprive the country of the benefit of your consideration.

Their will prevailed. We were released. And our first duty on arriving at Paris was to request Your Excellency for an audience. This honor was denied to us. And a few days later the recognition by the Government of the United States of America of the British protectorate over Egypt was published throughout the world.

According to information received, the news in Egypt fell upon deaf ears. The Egyptians could not imagine that the principles which promised to the world a new era of political freedom and political equality would consecrate the servitude of a whole nation.

The decision of the peace conference with regard to Egypt resulted in a policy of systematic revenge by the British military authorities throughout the country. Towns and villages have been submitted to most awful exactions. Some villages have been completely burned, and thousands of families are without shelter. People who do not salute British officers are court-martialed. The judge of Kena Province refused to attend court to avoid submitting to such humiliation.

The Courbash is being most freely used. Notables are being maltreated and imprisoned. Women were violated, and in one case a husband (who was present) was shot dead by the troops while attempting to defend the honor of his wife.

And all this because the Egyptian people had dared to demand their political emancipation!

That they will persist in demanding their political freedom goes without saying. They will do so in the firm belief in the righteousness of their cause and in their whole-hearted adherence to the principles enunciated by Your Excellency. They will either succeed through America's help or perish victims to their loyalty and good faith.

For these reasons I beg to request that one of my colleagues and I be received by Your Excellency, so that we may explain to you the state of affairs in Egypt.

That plea, that ought to burn into the heart of every man who loves freedom, of every man who believes in a square deal to his fellow men, that plea that ought to have gone to the depth of every human heart, fell on deaf ears when it encountered Woodrow Wilson. Absolute silence, ignored, no answer, nothing done, no audience allowed.

Again, on June 18 they sent a letter to the President in the name of the Egyptian delegation.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your confidential secretary's letter of the 9th instant, in which he says that you have not had the time to give an audience to one of our colleagues and myself. We note with satisfaction that you do not exclude the hope of an interview in the future.

Still hanging on to the hope, false hope as it proved to be; still hoping against fate that the man whose word had resounded around the world in behalf of human freedom, the man whose advice the Egyptian people had followed and fought for to the very end, believing in the doctrines that he had proclaimed, they still hoped that he might at least give them a hearing.

We feel sure that you realize, Mr. President, the position in which you have been placed on account of the rôle of international leadership which you have assumed.

We wish to impress upon you that it would be the despair of the Egyptian people if their delegation failed to get even a hearing before the exponent of international right and justice.

We do not believe that you wish Egypt to be condemned unheard. And we do not feel that you can form a judgment on the Egyptian situation without giving a hearing to the Egyptians themselves.

We believe you purposely left open the possibility of an audience with us in the future, and we respectfully request that this be granted us as soon as possible in order that history may reflect honor on you in this affair, as in all others connected with the conference.

And, Mr. President, that was the end. That plea that would almost turn a heart of stone failed even to bring a response from the confidential secretary, and thus Egypt was turned over without her consent to the British Empire. There she is to-day, there she will remain if this treaty is approved, as loyal and as true an ally as fought in the Great War.

Is America going to treat this ally in that way? Is the Senate of the United States going to put its official stamp of approval upon the conduct that leaves 13,000,000 people condemned unheard and without an opportunity to speak in their own behalf? Are we going to put our seal of condemnation upon an ally who lost more men than America did in the war, who did, as everybody knows, valiant service from the beginning to the end? Are we going to give approval to the demand of Great Britain that she will be permitted to thrust aside the official promises and pledges that she has been making to Egypt and the world for the last 30 years that she has no ambitions upon Egypt? Are we going to do it? Can we read with approval the speech of President Wilson made at the tomb of the father of our own country; can we remember his beautiful words there at Washington's tomb and give our approval to this act that, in my judgment, will be a disgrace to civilization?

Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, I have confined my remarks mostly to the question of Egypt, but Egypt is not the only sin contained in this treaty. It is only a sample, and it is not the worst sample. It is only an illustration of the general rule. Almost every page of the hundreds contained in this treaty contains evils and other wrongs as great and as sinful as the crime against Egypt.

The world does not yet know the extent of the evil that is tied up within the folds of this ponderous treaty. The world was weary of war. It had been promised that when the war was over there would come out of it a peace that would be lasting.

The armistice was signed and hostilities ended on the express understanding that a peace should be written that would recognize the beneficent doctrine laid down in the famous 14 points and the other addresses of the President on that subject. All the peoples of the world believed that the sacred pledges so solemnly given by the belligerent nations would be kept inviolate. They had no suspicion when the armistice was signed and this agreement was made that secret treaties had been made by some of the principal allied nations that would result in the violation of every pledge.

The discussion that has gone on throughout Christendom has been confined almost entirely to the League of Nations portion of the treaty. Those who are demanding of the world the approval of this document have discussed practically nothing else.

Censorship in London, in Tokyo, and in other places, including Washington, has kept the world to a great extent in ignorance of the crimes that have been committed at Versailles in the name of peace. Can it be that the patriotic people of this Nation desire the Senate to turn a deaf ear to the pleading cries of many millions of people who by this treaty have been transferred from one nationality to another like chattels? Can it be that posterity will approve our action if we violate every principle for which our forefathers fought and which have made us a great and prosperous Nation? Can we long boast of our freedom and our honor if by our act we hold as chattels and slaves millions of helpless and innocent people and in this civilized day divide up the earth to suit the autocrats of Europe and Asia, without considering the wish or the will of the people whose freedom and liberty are thus denied?

To defeat this treaty it ought to be sufficient to know that every pledge made by which hostilities were ended and the armistice signed has been violated and trampled underfoot. There are those, however, who feel, even though we are violating these pledges, even though we are transferring people like chattels from one nationality to another, that we are excused for so doing because this treaty professes to bring to the hungry world a permanent peace. To those who believe in this doctrine it ought to be sufficient to point to the lessons of history. Every attempt that has been made during the history of the world to carry out such a program has ultimately failed. The history of Poland, of Alsace and Lorraine, and numerous other instances might be cited as guideposts to the statesmen of to-day. We can not build a permanent peace upon a foundation of broken pledges and unjust and inhuman treatment to millions of the human race. Such attempts have always failed, and always will; they must fail because they violate the eternal law of human progress. We can not by any man-made instrument repeal the laws of God, however laudable may be the purpose. All history teaches that such efforts must end in disaster. This treaty, if approved, while containing these inhuman and dishonorable things, will bring misery, suffering, and war to those who shall follow us, because they are in violation of nature's laws which are as immutable and unchangeable as the heavens.

When the representatives of the great nations emerged from their secret chamber they gave to the waiting world a treaty too long for the busy citizen to read and labeled it "perpetual peace." A war-weary world accepted their judgment, and, for a time, in no unhesitating way condemned any citizen who dared to deny the virtue of this unholy document; but when the fair-minded and honest citizenship of civilization had been induced to study this barbarous monstrosity, they began to awaken from their dream of peaceful satisfaction and commenced to realize that humanity had been "buncoed." When the peace-loving world understands what this treaty contains, it will not be slow to condemn the men who have practiced this deception. Already, the self-appointed autocrats who sat in secret judgment at Versailles are receiving a just condemnation in the hearts of their own fellow citizens. Orlando has been defeated in Italy; Clemenceau has been overthrown in France; Lloyd-George sees the handwriting on the wall; and Woodrow Wilson is "watchfully waiting" the coming condemnation of the American people.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I submit a conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill, being House bill 12046, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at the present time. I desire to say that it is a partial report, certain amendments, three in number, not having been agreed to. I therefore submit the report, and move its adoption. If that motion be agreed to, I shall then move for a further conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 16, 54, 57, 58, and 59.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 23, 24, 26, 27, 29, 33, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, and 65, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$45,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$6,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: At the end of the matter retored insert the following: "An itemized statement of the articles transferred hereunder and the cost price thereof shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate number 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the salary of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Finland at the rate of $10,000 per annum from March 1 to June 30, 1920, inclusive, $3,333.33."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE.

"Not exceeding $500,000 of the appropriation of $3,500,000 for the care and custody of the draft records and for the employment of clerical assistance for the purpose of furnishing to adjutants general of States statements of service of soldiers who served in the war with Germany shall be available for the employment of clerical assistance necessary for the purpose of furnishing such information from the records of the demobilized Army as may be properly furnished to public officials, former soldiers, and other persons entitled to receive it: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall reallot the appropriation of $4,000,000 for temporary employees in the War Department in such manner as will provide an allotment of $174,000 for the office of The Adjutant General in addition to the allotments already made for that office for the current fiscal year for work in connection with records of the demobilized Army."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out "$500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$300,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: " : Provided, That in case said bridge is thrown open for public use one-half the cost of the maintenance thereof shall be paid by local interests"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$6,600,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000,000," and add at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment the following: "Provided further, That the construction work hereunder shall be done by contract, let to the lowest responsible bidder, and no bid shall be accepted for any building to cost in excess of $2.45 per square foot for an unlined building or $2.90 for a lined building"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"Norfolk, Va., navy yard: For dry dock and accessories, exclusive of any profit to the contractor, $451,047.30."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 17, 22, and 34.

F. E. WARREN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES W. GOOD,
J. G. CANNON,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report which has been read. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the report, but I desire to make an observation in case it is considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether he expects to have the report disposed of this evening?

Mr. WARREN. It should be disposed of this evening, because we have to act upon the report before the other House can do so, and quite a number of the amendments provide for sums which should be available by Monday next. There is an entire agreement on all but three items, and as to those three items we shall ask for a further conference.

Mr. KING. I desire to inquire further of the Senator if the consideration of the report were deferred until to-morrow morning, in order that we might have an opportunity to read it and see what are the items in controversy and what have been agreed to, and the report were taken up the first thing to-morrow morning, could it not be disposed of then without involving any delay in the final disposition of the matter?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator from Utah that there are three items which are still in disagreement, and I will tell him now what they are.

Mr. KING. I am advised as to those three items, but as to the other items which have been assented to there might be some disposition in the Senate to remonstrate a little.

Mr. WARREN. In other words, the Senator desires to send the report back unapproved?

Mr. KING. I do not want to take——

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has the right, of course, to object to the present consideration of the report, but I hope he will not do so.

Mr. KING. I do not want to object, but it seems to me that the Senator will dispose of the matter just as quickly if he will let the report go over until to-morrow morning and give us an opportunity to read it.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, my motion may be voted down, but I move the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah object to the consideration of the report?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from Wyoming makes a motion which is subject to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report. The Chair understands that any objection carries the report over for one day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding was that the Senator from Wyoming withdrew his request and made a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that the request was withdrawn. He has not heard of such a request being made.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the misunderstanding arose in this way: As we were at that time in executive session, I at first asked that the conference report be considered as in open legislative session; but when a motion is made to adopt the report I do not understand that an objection can then be maintained, but that the motion would have to go to a vote.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, upon that motion I desire to say just a few words.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand the Chair to hold that one objection would carry the report over for a day?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands the rule.

Mr. WARREN. The objection would only be to considering it in legislative session, because a motion will not apply; that is, the objection does not carry it over if we are by unanimous consent in legislative session for the moment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Wyoming to ask unanimous consent to consider the conference report in legislative session, which, of course, he had to get. That, I understand, he has got—permission to consider it in legislative session. Now he presents his report. That is privileged. He has presented the report, and the privilege is exhausted. The question of consideration is open. The Senate can decide whether they will consider it now or not, as I understand the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the rule is Rule XXVII, and reads:

> The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is right.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the rule.

Mr. LODGE. But the question of consideration can be passed upon.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. A conference report has no privilege for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report, being a privileged matter, has been received in accordance with the rule. The question of whether or not the Senate will take up the report for consideration is before the Senate, and, as the Chair understands the rule, a single objection takes the report over until some other time.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; I think not, Mr. President. It requires a vote of the Senate. The question of consideration has been raised and must be decided without debate.

Mr. SMOOT. The rule says:

And when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put and shall be determined without debate.

That is Rule XXVII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand the rule.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as the point has been made about my delaying the treaty, I will state that I gave notice that I should hold the treaty before the Senate against everything but a conference report; but I am not going to hold it before the Senate against a conference report, especially when it is necessary that an agreement should be reached between the two Houses before Monday next in order to meet certain of the appropriations that are carried in this deficiency bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes that under Rule XXVII the question of consideration of the report must be immediately put. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill 12046.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report is now before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, one of the items upon which I understand the conferees have failed to agree is the amendment of the bill which provided $3,000,000 for repair of naval vessels. May I ask the chairman of the committee whether that is correct?

Mr. WARREN. It is.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I was present during the debate in the Senate when that amendment was adopted, and at that time there seemed to be some confusion among the Senators who were interested in it as to the reason and necessity for asking for this amount in a deficiency bill. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] called attention to the fact that $31,000,000 had been appropriated in the last naval bill for repair of naval vessels, but attention was not called in the Senate to the fact that the Navy Department in its last annual estimate, after a study of the situation and needs of the Navy for repair of its new fleet, had asked for $75,000,000, and that the committee of Congress cut down the appropriation of $75,000,000 to $31,000,000. Several statements were made upon the floor as though a much larger sum than $31,000,000 had been appropriated. I heard $80,000,000 mentioned at one time as the amount that had been appropriated for the repair of naval vessels, but that was an entire mistake. Only $31,000,000 was appropriated, and it was not half of the amount that had been asked for by the Navy. Now, it seems to me that when the estimate of $75,000,000 made by the department for the repair of ships was cut down to $31,000,000 it is not at all strange that there is a deficiency in that appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator understands, of course, that the Senate is insisting upon retaining that $3,000,000 appropriation; hence the disagreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that, and I very much hope that the Senate conferees will continue to stand upon that; but the particular point that I wished to bring to the attention of the Senate conferees, in order that they might present it in conference, was the fact that in the last annual appropriation bill the estimate for this item was cut down more than 50 per cent. That fact was not brought out in the debate here. That tremendous reduction by Congress in the last naval bill in its efforts to economize is the cause of the present complete tie-up of the work in the navy yards in connection with the repair of our naval vessels. This is a very small item in comparison with the curtailment of the amount that was asked for by the department.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that we had those items with us and all of the figures, and that on four different days we went over to a greater or less extent those figures, which, of course, we had before us.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Including the estimates presented in connection with the last annual appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to know it.

I take it that it will be conceded by every man who takes a business view of this matter that sooner or later our naval vessels must be repaired. If this appropriation is denied in this bill, I assume that it will be agreed by all who take a business view of the matter that it will have to be added to some other bill; so the only question is whether or not we are going to leave vessels rusting and deteriorating in the docks and in the navy yards in a state of disrepair and unfitness for use simply in order to delay making the appropriation from the Treasury and to create some sort of an appearance—a rather false appearance—of economy. It seems to me that true economy would dictate the immediate appropriation of this amount, and the repair of these vessels as soon as possible, in order to prevent the accumulation of the expense that will come from further delay.

Some figures were given, at the time this amendment was adopted, of the percentage of deterioration of vessels tied up at the docks and waiting for repairs—5 per cent a month, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] suggests—all of which will be saved by the immediate appropriation of this amount; and I urge upon the Senate conferees that they insist upon this appropriation.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that nothing less than an emergency will bring the conference committee, and especially the House, to a realization of the necessity of keeping in repair the vessels of the Navy.

We have here the testimony of Admiral Coontz and of Admiral Taylor that it is absolutely necessary to provide in this deficiency bill the sum required simply for the purpose of repairing the ships that are in Atlantic and Pacific waters.

I say that an emergency is the only argument that seems to avail with men who are bent upon economy. Economy and retrenchment are excellent things; but we know very well that when it was important that we should equip ourselves for the war, the expenditure on account of our unpreparedness was overwhelming; so it was very poor economy to wait until the enemy was at our gates.

There are now in the city of Washington the governor of the Hawaiian Territory and a delegation from the legislature, and I learn from them in conversation that the conditions in the islands are very critical; that there is a strike among the Japanese, who comprise one-half of the entire population of the islands; that there are 120,000 Japanese in the islands, and they are on a strike, and their consuls, it has been discovered, have agents in every camp who report to them. In order to make the strike effective notice has been sent out by the unions composed of Japanese that in case any Japanese refuses to join in the strike he shall be reported to the burgomaster of his native cantonment, or whatever political subdivision it is, in Japan; and great pressure, which seems almost to be of an official character, is put upon these men to join the strike—against whom? Against the white planters.

These Hawaiians say that the white planters will not yield. Already, they state, 14 cane fires have been started in the different plantations. They are using the method of sabotage and the destruction of property to bring about the accomplishment of their purposes; and I am told that a Japanese warship has just entered the harbor, ostensibly for the purpose of taking off Japanese who are willing to go back.

That is one condition in the Pacific, apart from many others throughout the world, which have inspired the men who control the Navy with a desire to keep the ships in repair; and I think it is of first importance that we should instruct—if, indeed, they need instruction—our conferees to stand for the insignificant $3,000,000 which we have voted for the repair of our naval fleet. The Secretary of the Navy said that $10,000,000 was necessary, but we have offered him $3,000,000, and now the House conferees refuse to grant even the $3,000,000. I think it is a matter upon which we should stand without doubt or equivocation, because of the extreme necessity of keeping in repair our fleet, our first line of defense, necessary to maintain our prestige and guard our rights.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish that the Senate would recede from the item to which the Senator from California has just referred.

We appropriated for the Navy, for the current year, nearly $700,000,000. The direct appropriation was six hundred and some odd millions, and $64,000,000 were authorized in the shape of contracts. Out of that sum, it seems to me, there was ample to meet the expenditures required in any exigency which might arise.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator realizes, however, that the large sum of money which he has just mentioned is not available for the specific purpose for which this amendment is needed. The appropriations in the naval bill are specific, and the items which go to make up the amount which the Senator has stated, if the amount is correct, can not be used for the purpose of repairing vessels.

I do not understand that the Senator from Utah disputes the fact that the fleet is badly in need of repairs, and that many vessels are out of commission on account of the lack of money to repair them and put them in a fit condition. If the Senator is not prepared to deny that fact—and I do not think it can be successfully denied—it seems to me that his citation of sums of money appropriated for other purposes has but little bearing upon this immediate question. I do not think the Senator from Utah wants to have our fleet deteriorate, or have it incapacitated from service, and the question presented is simply a direct, plain proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. A matter of economy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A matter of economy, as the Senator from Maryland very truly says; a matter of business also; and the circumstances stated by the Senator from Utah do not in any way affect the question.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand, of course, that the appropriation bill did not carry the entire amount that I have referred to, namely, nearly $700,000,000, for the purpose of repairing vessels belonging to the Navy. There was a very large item, however, to which I referred the other day; indeed, there were two large items, for repairs and for construction in the yards and the docks. The aggregate of all those appropriations that related to repairs and improvements was nearly $100,000,000. The information that was conveyed in the House, I understand, indicates that that appropriation has not yet been exhausted. On the 1st of July there will be available such sums as may be required for the coming year. The committees now are dealing with this question. I believe from the information which I have that there is a sufficient amount now, if properly utilized, to carry on legitimate and imperative repairs until the next appropriation shall have been made.

Furthermore, Mr. President, after Congress has examined the subject fully, as the Naval Affairs Committees did both in the House and in the Senate, and reached a conclusion as to the appropriation which should be made, I do not approve of the idea that the executive officers of the Government, in the face of action by Congress, in the face of an investigation which had been made, shall go and create deficits without limitation and exercise their own discretion without any limitation. Congress decided what should be expended. As I recollect the debate the other day, there was something which indicated that some of the officials of the Navy Department transcended their authority and had made some improper expenditures, or at least had utilized money not allocated to them, and in so doing had deprived other funds of money which should have been allocated to them.

I think if you ratify the action of the Navy Department by making this appropriation you will confirm them in their acts of usurpation and you will invite them to continue the policy of ignoring the act of Congress and to continue a policy of expenditure regardless of the amount which Congress appropriates. Of course, we are all in favor of maintaining a Navy, and a great Navy, but we are in favor of law and in favor of subjecting executive officials to the laws which shall be enacted by Congress.

I sincerely hope that if this item goes back to conference the Senate conferees will recede.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only wish to say a single word. I want to express a strong and earnest hope that the Senate conferees will stand for the Senate provision. The total expenses of the Navy have nothing in the world to do with the item that is up now. A refusal of the appropriation under the guise of false economy is simply wasteful and destructive.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I feel so strongly in the matter that I should like to test the sense of the Senate on the subject, and I move that the conferees on behalf of the Senate be instructed to adhere to the item of $3,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to that course. I propose to ask for the reappointment of conferees, and the supposition is that they are instructed by the Senate when the item in disagreement is again sent to conference. However, if the Senator insists upon it, I shall not oppose his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Did the Chair understand that I had made a motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California made no motion as the Chair understood.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from California moved that the Senate instruct its conferees to stand by the item of $3,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion was not in order at that time.

Mr. PHELAN. I shall renew the motion when it is in order.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask the House for a further conference, and that the presiding officer appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. UNDERWOOD conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask the attention of Senators briefly to the reservation before the Senate and to the substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I am opposed to the substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska, and I also wish to suggest an amendment which I think should be made to the reservation. I am deeply interested in the ratification of the treaty with proper reservations protecting American rights, and I think we ought, if possible, to get together upon it.

Before discussing the reservation and the substitute, in just a word I wish to refer to a matter brought to the attention of the Senate on yesterday. It had reference to the length of time war would be delayed and to the effect of a finding by the council. Article 12 provides:

> The members of the league agree that if there should arise between them any dispute likely to lead to a rupture they will submit the matter either to arbitration or to inquiry by the council, and they agree in no case to resort to war until three months after the award by the arbitrators or the report by the council.

This, of course, means that, regardless of the character of the award, regardless of compliance with the terms of the award, regardless of the unanimity of the council in making a decision, for three months there shall be delay, a cooling time, with the hope that by diplomacy or in some way the differences may be adjusted and war prevented.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not desire to yield just yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to finish what I have to say on this subject first, then I will yield gladly.

The fourth paragraph of article 13 provides that—

> The members of the league agree that they will carry out in full good faith any award that may be rendered—

This refers to an award by arbitration—> and that they will not resort to war against a member of the league which complies therewith.

The effect, of course, of this provision is that if an award is made by arbitration and one of the members offers to comply and does comply, then the other member will not resort to war.

Paragraph 5 of article 15 provides—and this has reference to the case of a dispute brought to the attention of the council:

> If a report by the council is unanimously agreed to by the members thereof other than the representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute, the members of the league agree that they will not go to war with any party to the dispute which complies with the recommendations of the report.

The effect, therefore, is this: For three months absolutely the parties agree after the award is made that they will not resort to war. In case of arbitration it is agreed that if one of the parties complies the other will not resort to war at all. In case of a unanimous finding by the council other than the two parties to the dispute; that is to say, if seven of the council unanimously agree upon the terms of settlement between the parties to the dispute and one of the parties complies, the other party will not resort to war.

The seventh paragraph of article 15 carries the provision that this reservation is intended to avoid. Let me say, Mr. President and Senators, that I regard these paragraphs as the heart of the league. I regard them as the valuable portion of the league. They are the provisions that make a league for peace, not an alliance for war. They are the provisions that seek to bring about an adjustment of disputes through peaceful means, through arbitration, through conference, by an adjustment, and to obligate members of the league to delay war first, and if arbitration settles it, or seven of the council unanimously agree and one of the parties complies with the agreement, then that there shall be no war. I believe in these provisions. I believe they will be of real service to the world to maintain peace. There is no provision for the use of guns. There is no obligation to resort to war in them. They are the league for peace as compared to article 10, which I regard as an alliance for war.

The provision to which I am opposed as it stands in article 15 and to which this reservation applies is the seventh paragraph, as follows:

If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them, and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report, and shall make no recommendation as to its settlement.

By rules of international law solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the parties. I am unable to find established rules of international law that take domestic questions out of the field of internationalism and make them solely domestic questions. I am unwilling that domestic questions be passed upon by any board of arbitration or even by the seven members of the council. Especially I am opposed to having considered by them the question of immigration.

This is no new question in the United States. In January, February, and March, 1912, the Senate had under consideration a treaty of universal arbitration with Great Britain. Reservations were attached to that treaty providing that no domestic question should be the subject of arbitration. The reservation further proceeded to declare that we would not submit to arbitration the question as to whether the question was a domestic question. I desire to say to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber that every Democrat in the Senate at that time voted for the reservation, providing that we would not submit to arbitration our domestic questions and would not submit to arbitration the question whether a question was a domestic question, and we proceeded then to name immigration as one of the domestic questions which under no circumstances we would submit to arbitration.

In supporting this reservation I am simply following the policy declared by the Members on this side of the Chamber in 1912, and unanimously supported by them at that time when the treaty came from a Republican President, when the majority of the Senators were on the other side of the Chamber and when about one-half of them joined with us on this side to put the reservation upon the treaty which saved our domestic problems from foreign interference or from arbitration and saved us from letting any outsider determine for us what was and what was not a domestic question.

Mr. KING. What was the form of the reservation?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not have it before me now. I can give it to the Senator later. I have it in my office.

Now I come to the proposed amendment or substitute of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I can not think that the Senator from Nebraska will insist upon his substitute. It is an obstruction to the ratification of the treaty. I would expect the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to support it, and if the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] were here I would expect him to support it, because they openly desire to kill the treaty; but I can not see how anyone who favors the treaty will support it. Let me read it:

That no member nation is required to submit to the league, its council, or its assembly for decision, report, or recommendation any matter which it considers to be a domestic question, such as immigration, labor, tariff, or other matter relating to its internal or coastwise affairs.

That is, no member of the league, not the United States, but the domestic disputes of no member of the league, shall be considered by the council, and each member shall alone determine what are its domestic questions. I agree that we should say that we will not submit ours, but it says "no member" shall submit. It not only takes us out but undertakes to amend the league covenant and apply the principle which we, by reservation, can apply to ourselves and applies it to every member of the league, whether the others wish such a privilege or not.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The contention has been made by Senators upon both sides of the Chamber, and I think the contention was correct, that the treaty itself as drawn does not commit to the League of Nations the domestic and internal affairs of any signatory to the treaty; that every signatory to the treaty is left free to determine its own purely domestic and internal affairs. With that premise, does the Senator think that the reservation offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] or the reservation offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], which the Senator from Georgia is now discussing, affects in any manner the treaty, adds to or subtracts from or confers any additional rights upon the signatories, or deprives the signatories of any rights?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I dispute the premise. I show by the league covenant itself that the premise can not be sustained. The league covenant provides, as I read it a few moments ago—

If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them, and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report, and shall make no recommendation as to its settlement.

In the first place, it leaves it to the council to determine whether it is a domestic question. In the second place, the council is not to determine that it is a domestic question unless by international law it is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the parties. I deny that there are well-established rules of international law which take out of international consideration and make solely domestic all questions that may arise and which we should retain under our exclusive control because they concern our internal policies; but even if it is contended that there are rules of international law upon this subject I am unwilling to submit to the council the question of determining that matter for us; just as in the treaty with Great Britain in 1912 there was a provision that if we had a dispute as to whether the particular question was to be referred to arbitration, a board should pass upon it. Led by Senator Bacon, of Georgia, we rejected that provision in the treaty with Great Britain and we reserved to the United States under the reservation the right to pass upon what was a domestic question, and we reserved all domestic questions from arbitration.

I object to their passing upon what is a domestic question for us, and the rule of procedure by which they are to pass I also object to. I object to the language "solely domestic." Take the case of immigration—take the case of a treaty with Japan. Immigration is in some respects not a domestic question. It involves the interest of the country whose nationals are coming to our country.

I would like to have the word "immigration" expressly named in this reservation, because I would not vote to ratify the treaty under any circumstances if it would permit a question even as to the right of the United States to determine for herself who shall come to this country and who shall stay here. I especially am pleased with the fact that this reservation names immigration and declares that immigration is a domestic question, and no country shall interfere with our action and no council shall interfere with our action and no arbitral board shall interfere with our action when we come to determine who we will let live with us and how they shall live here.

I concede if the Senator's premise were not disputed his conclusions would be right; but I maintain that the seventh paragraph of article 15 is unsatisfactory in its mode of handling the question of domestic problems, that it jeopardizes our control of the problem of immigration. It invites a dispute with Japan, and it invites other disputes. I would never vote for any treaty of any kind that took away from the United States the privilege of controlling that problem.

Now, coming back to the substitute of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], it is an amendment to the league covenant. It is not a reservation as to ourselves; it is a provision that is to affect all the members of the league; it is to be applicable to every member of the league. It may be that there are members of the league who are perfectly willing to have their domestic problems considered by the council; there are members who have ratified it with the present provisions; there are members of the league whose territories adjoin each other and whose relations are so intimate that it might be desirable for them to submit to the council problems connected with their domestic matters; but we are 3,000 miles away from Europe, and the American people will never consent, I pray and believe, to let any other nation interfere with our domestic problems. When the Senator from Nebraska extends the reservation that we would have as to our own affairs and makes it applicable to every member of the league, he passes away from the field of reservations into a change of the league covenant itself.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Has not the Senator from Nebraska also passed entirely out of the field of interpretation? By no stretch of the imagination could this be called an interpretative reservation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for the suggestion. I am not one of those who pretend that they are simply for interpretations. I do not care whether you call them interpretations or reservations, but we must be freed in some respects from the structure of the league. It is not a matter for us to consider that somebody else thinks; it is not a matter for us to consider what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] wants or what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] wants or what the President wants, but it is for us to determine what we think is right. It is not for us to play politics in the interest of any party, but, laying parties aside and party interests aside, each Senator for himself is called to determine what he thinks is best for his country. I am one of those who believe that when a Senator takes that course he is doing what is wisest for his party.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Nebraska will withdraw his amendment. If we adopted it there would have to be a new conference in Paris and a resubmission of the treaty to every country which is a signatory of it. That is the very thing we have been trying to avoid; it is the thing we on this side—all, I believe, except one or two irreconcilables, or one irreconcilable—think should be avoided.

Mr. BORAH. There are more than that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope not on this side. The Senator from Idaho is more familiar with them than am I, but I had hoped that there was only one irreconcilable on this side. I believe there are some irreconcilables on this side who want the treaty without reservations, and if the Senator from Idaho is counting those he is probably right that there is more than one irreconcilable found on this side.

Every Senator, however, knows that the treaty can not be ratified, and most of them believe it ought not to be ratified, without reservations, and reservations which go beyond interpretations are necessary.

Now I come to the reservation reported by the committee. There was a tentative agreement, I understand, on the part of the bipartisan conference that the word "internal" should be placed before the word "commerce," in line 5, and that in lines 7 and 8 the words "and all other domestic questions" should be stricken out. My own view is that the word "commerce" ought not to be in the reservation at all, and for this reason: We can not class all questions involving commerce as domestic questions; some of them are international; some of them we should be willing to submit to arbitration. It is illogical, it seems to me, to put the word "commerce" alongside the other subjects which we declare to be absolutely domestic questions not to be submitted to arbitration. There are many questions growing out of commerce which are domestic questions and will be held by us domestic questions, and I would not be willing to see any of them referred to arbitration. The language of the pending reservation is:

> 4. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs * * * are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The reservation names several questions; but in the words I have read there is found an express provision that we intend to handle domestic questions ourselves; that we reserve exclusively to ourselves the right to determine what are domestic questions and what are not domestic questions; and we do not need to insert the word "commerce." If we name some subjects, I do not think we ought to strike out the additional language "and all other domestic questions," because we have not named them all; and I believe in covering those domestic questions which have not been named. But as commerce, it seems to me, may apply to international questions as well as to domestic questions, to say that all questions growing out of commerce are to be treated by us as domestic questions, I fear goes too far. I hardly see how we can sustain the proposition, and I should be glad to see it removed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but at that point, if it will not inconvenience him——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will not inconvenience me at all at this time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desired to ask him how he avoided the point raised by the Senator from Washington yesterday afternoon, to wit, that the Constitution had vested in Congress the exclusive control of commerce among the States and with foreign nations? If that power is vested in Congress, how can we delegate any portion of it to the league?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We do not delegate it to the league. This is what we do: By treaty we can delegate to arbitration a question which ordinarily would be the subject of legislation. By treaty we can submit a liability that would subsequently require recognition by Congress in the way of an appropriation to arbitration for adjustment and decision. There are many questions about which we may arbitrate, upon which Congress must finally act.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But, Mr. President, in addition to that, if the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will first yield to the Senator from Connecticut, and then I will yield to other Senators.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Inasmuch as the treaty gives both the council and the assembly jurisdiction over all questions which may affect the peace of the world, if the league, through its council or assembly, finds that a question involving our commerce with a foreign power does affect the peace of the world, why have we not attempted to give the league jurisdiction of foreign commerce instead of Congress, to which the Constitution gave it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My view of that question is that the general authority is one of consideration but not of action; the authority of action is specifically limited at certain places in the league covenant, and the propositions I have just been discussing are limited only to the extent that we agree, if the finding is unanimous, that we will not go to war.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, permit me to suggest, in answer to the question of the Senator from Connecticut, that the Constitution of the United States confers jurisdiction upon Congress to regulate commerce only in so far as the United States can regulate it. If we have commerce with Austria, with Germany, or with Japan, the Constitution does not confer upon the Congress of the United States the power to regulate commerce in a foreign country, so that, if we have a treaty with any of those countries containing the "favored-nation" clause, or any other clause pertaining to commerce, a dispute over that treaty may be arbitrated, and should be arbitrated; but the Constitution does not give the Congress any power in case of a dispute with a foreign country to regulate commerce in that country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But if the finding was that there was a liability upon our part, it would require an appropriation by Congress, which would simply follow the adjudication, if Congress saw fit to make it. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his interruption.

Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate any longer. I am deeply desirous, on account of our country and on account of the Senate, to see the Senate act and to see it function. I wish to see 64 Senators vote to ratify the treaty; I believe it is to the interest of our country; I believe it is the demand of the people of our country, and I think if the Senator from Nebraska does not withdraw his substitute we should defeat it.

I hope he will withdraw it, because I do not think it should receive many votes, except his own and those of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] not being present. Then I hope that some Senator on the other side, in the majority, will move to eliminate the word "commerce" from the reservation. We do not need it in, because there are problems growing out of commerce that we can not insist are domestic problems solely, and I do not like to see the Senate add a reservation claiming as purely domestic a matter which may or may not be purely domestic. I believe if we will take the word "commerce" out that we will help to get votes to ratify the treaty.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In just a moment. I desire the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Minnesota when I repeat that by taking the word "commerce" out I believe we will remove a cause of just question as to this reservation, help to get votes for the treaty, and yet leave entire control in the United States of all questions affecting commerce which we determine to be domestic. I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am interested to know what made the Senator from Georgia suspect me of any intention to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Because I think its adoption would make ratification impossible.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, not by us; and the treaty has been ratified by the other nations. I voted for every amendment which I thought was proper before the other parties had ratified the treaty, but now that they have ratified it, and it is in existence and in operation so far as they are concerned, I regard it as unwise, if not impossible, for us to amend the treaty which they have already accepted without amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think I can rely upon the Senator from Connecticut to do anything he can legitimately to kill the treaty, and, if putting an amendment on it would hinder its ratification and tend to kill it, I thought he would favor it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator is quite justified in thinking that I would do anything I could legitimately to kill the treaty, but I would want to do it in a wise way, and I would not want folly added to my crime.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was using the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Missouri and their attitude toward the treaty to emphasize my opinion that this amendment would hinder and not help ratification. I thank Senators for their attention, and I again urge that without pride of opinion or effort to adhere to past action we seek reservations protecting the interests of our country which may still receive the requisite votes for ratification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the reservation proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the proper time I shall offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute for the reservation offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I merely tender it now, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and at the appropriate time I shall offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. KING to the reservation proposed by Mr. LODGE is as follows:

Amend reservation No. 4 so that it will read as follows:

"4. The United States understands that the jurisdiction and authority of the council or the assembly of the league do not include any power over the proper domestic, internal, or national police of any member of the league, and that said articles do not confer upon the league any powers with respect to immigration, imposts, property, inheritance, naturalization, citizenship, labor, coastwise traffic, or any other matter of proper domestic policy. This enumeration of matters of policy shall not in any wise be taken to exclude from authority of the United States any other subject of domestic policy properly within the national political powers and sovereignty of the United States, as recognized by the law and custom of nations. The United States will not submit to arbitration or to consideration of the council any question which in its judgment is a question within its domestic jurisdiction and sovereignty."

NOTICE OF CONFIRMATIONS.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Florida, who desires to make a request.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for yielding, and I shall occupy merely a moment. On the 20th of February a number of post-office nominations were confirmed by the Senate, including several from my State. Under the rule requiring two executive sessions before they can be certified to the President they have not as yet been certified. Therefore, as in executive session, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the post-office nominations which were confirmed on the 20th of February be now certified to the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am reminded that the nomination of marshal for the northern district of Georgia was confirmed a few days ago. I do not think any unanimous consent order was made that the President should at once be notified. The former marshal is going out of office on the 1st of the month, and it has been arranged to change the office on that date; so it is quite important that the President should be notified.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of all confirmations made on February 20.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 28, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 27, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast made us and filled our souls with longings, hopes, and aspirations, cleanse us from all guile and imbue us with light to guide us, strength to sustain us, in every laudable ambition.

The world is facing a crisis and our Nation is facing with it great trials. Save us, we beseech Thee, from perils of stupidity and blunders and guide us safely on to the genius inspired by our fathers that we may live and grow in everything that is pure, and noble, and holy. In the Christ spirit. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SURPLUS MOTOR EQUIPMENT HELD BY WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up Senate bill 3037 and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3037, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3037) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer, free of charge, certain surplus motor-propelled vehicles and motor equipment to the Department of Agriculture, Post Office Department, Navy Department, and the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service, and certain other surplus property to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks to insist on the amendments of the House and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a House bill amended by the Senate?

Mr. KAHN. No. It is a Senate bill amended by the House.

Mr. GARNER. And the Senate disagrees to the House amendments and asks for a conference?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the request is to insist upon the House amendments?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. I should have said so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. KAHN, Mr. MCKENZIE, and Mr. DENT.

THE AMERICAN LEGION.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD an editorial which appeared simultaneously in five eminent independent journals of Ohio on the proposition of the American Legion. It is a very illuminating editorial, nonpartisan, and short.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial relative to the American Legion. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I regret very much to object to anything that the gentleman from Ohio might suggest should go into the RECORD, but if we begin now to insert into the RECORD editorials suggesting the policies which Congress should pursue with reference to the legion there will be no end to it. Only yesterday we referred all these measures to a committee of the House for the purpose of consideration. Would it not be better to wait until that committee reports out a bill and gives consideration to it before we encumber the RECORD with editorials? I am not going to object to-day, but I would like for somebody who is responsible for the RECORD to take care of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. This is a copy of the editorial printed simultaneously in five most important papers in Ohio, namely, the Toledo News-Bee, the Cleveland Press, the Cincinnati Post, the Akron Press, and the Columbus Citizen:

JUSTICE FOR THE SOLDIER AND SAILOR.

The American Legion, through its executive committee, asks that Uncle Sam pay to all ex-service men and women a $50 bond for each month of service during the war.

Commander Franklin D'Olier, in presenting the legion's case, says the Government has granted additional pay to its clerks for war service. War-time workmen in shipyards and munitions plants were paid high wages.

What the soldiers and sailors want, therefore, is not in its strict sense a bonus. They want a compensation adjusted to other Government rates of pay. And they have it coming to them.

The United States committed a regrettable blunder by not paying our soldiers at least $3 a day, as this newspaper advocated at the time. The result is that the service men came home to find the cost of living inflated, the buying power of the dollar deflated, and himself without war savings to help him build for the future.

Of all suggestions so far advanced for a fair and retroactive compensation to our active war forces, the proposed legion bonds plan is the best, the most just, the most workable.

It dovetails in with the present necessity for Government economy, for the bonds would involve no immediate expenditure of money.

They would be issued directly from the Government to the ex-service men and women, with no intermediate floating of a bond issue or increased taxation to pay for them.

The bonds would mature at a future date, in line with the just contention that the future generations should help pay for the Great War, which was conducted as much in their interests as the present's.

Canada and Australia, the two countries most like ours, have already set the example, though both their resources and man power were drained more than ours by the war.

Australia sent 400,000 of its 5,000,000 population overseas. It paid its fighting forces 40 per cent higher than our men were paid. Yet Australia did not consider its duty completed when it had merely brought its fighters home. The Australian blinded in the war is given a $3,500 home by his Government at a rent of 2 cents a month. Returned men were given from $10.50 to $15.50 a week until they found jobs. Able-bodied ex-service men who desire to farm are loaned $2,500 as working capital at low interest.

Canada, from a population of 8,000,000, sent 400,000 overseas. It paid its soldiers better than America.

Returned Canadians were given bonuses ranging, according to length of service, from $400 to $600 for married men and $280 to $420 for single men. Returned Canadians got $75 a month until they found jobs.

Canada has free vocational and farming training for its ex-fighters. Those who want to farm are loaned by the Government up to $4,500 for land, $2,000 for live stock, and $1,000 for buildings and equipment.

Interest is at 5 per cent, and the borrower has 25 years in which to pay. The Soldiers Land Settlement Board of Canada has spent about $200,000,000.

In contrast with Canada and Australia, the United States has done practically nothing for its ex-service veterans. The Lane project, to give them reclaimed land, fell through. A $60 bonus was voted, but it was a drop in the bucket.

Many suggested forms of bonuses have been advanced. We know now what the soldiers themselves, through the American Legion, want. They ask nothing but fairness. The legion bonds can be granted without financial difficulty. They should be granted.

PRODUCTION OF CORN.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for about three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the gentleman is going to speak about.

Mr. RUBEY. I want to boost Missouri a little.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a letter from the editor of the Farm Journal, a paper published at Philadelphia, calling my attention to the fact that some time ago they offered a prize of $1,000 for the best 5 acres of corn produced in the United States. This letter states that this prize was awarded to Missouri, and that the prize went to Mr. J. R. Shelton, of Holden, Johnson County, Mo., for the best 5 acres of corn in the United States, the average yield being 127½ bushels per acre.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Do you know how many States that same thing has been issued to? [Laughter.]

Mr. RUBEY. I will say to the gentleman that Indiana, I am informed, got the second prize. [Laughter.] No; I beg the gentleman's pardon; Indiana received the third prize. Ohio was the second.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The same first prize that you are now talking about went to Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUBEY. I hope the gentleman will not interfere with my little boost for my State. [Laughter.] Especially I hope he will not do that in view of the fact that this $1,000 prize goes to a farmer in my State who competed for it in the usual way, along with many hundreds of farmers from all parts of the country. Nearly 1,500 farmers competed for this prize in Ohio, Indiana, and Missouri, and notwithstanding the large number of competitors in these States Missouri carried off the prize. And I want to say in addition to this that the statement is made by the gentleman who won this prize that he won it without fertilizer, using simply the good old-fashioned Missouri soil. That produced 127½ bushels per acre on the average for the 5 acres.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did the gentleman notice the other day a statement made by the gentleman from Oklahoma, showing how much larger the production of corn per acre was in Oklahoma than in Missouri?

Mr. RUBEY. I did not notice that. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this, if I do not exceed my time, and that is that there has been a larger yield per acre than the one I have cited, but that was when fertilizer was used and 1 acre was taken as the example.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say, so far as Oklahoma is concerned, that it must have been barred from the competition in this matter; otherwise Missouri would not have won in the competition with the State of Oklahoma. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. And, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri, who is manifesting so much State pride, that so far as that yield of corn is concerned, Alabama has the record of 237½ bushels. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUBEY. That was in a boys' contest some years ago, when only 1 acre was cultivated and fertilizer was used.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am glad the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] has called attention to the great yield in Missouri, and that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has referred to the yield of 237½ bushels in his State. I want to say if they continue to encourage these farmers in Missouri and in Alabama they may possibly get up to the record, eventually, of North Carolina, which holds a record of 250 bushels per acre, the largest in the history of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope no more of the gentlemen will interrupt me, because if they do there is no telling how large this yield is going to get to be. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri will admit that the State of Texas is in a class by itself, and is not involved in this controversy.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in connection with what has been said, it was reported to me the other day that a former Member of this House, Joseph C. Sibley, had raised on 12 acres of ground 331 bushels of corn to the acre. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. They are still going up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It shows the effect of being a Member of Congress.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Illinois is joking again.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; that is an actual fact.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, while we are on this subject, I had a similar letter from the same paper. I desire to make reference to the subject of prizes for wheat. The average annual yield of wheat per acre in the United States for a 10-year period was stated as 15.8 bushels. In the State of Washington the average annual yield is 25.4 bushels to the acre for the same period. In the prize contest the first three prizes on wheat went to the State of Washington, one man raising approximately 84 bushels to the acre, another approximately 82 bushels to the acre, and a third approximately 82 bushels to the acre. All three of the prizes went to Island County, the wheat being produced on one of the largest islands in the United States, located in Puget Sound and in the congressional district which I represent. [Applause.]

To be exact, the prize winners, their residence and production, are as follows:

Fred De Wilde, Oak Harbor, Wash., 83.96 bushels per acre.

John Le Sourd, Coupeville, Wash., 81.33 bushels per acre.

Justus L. Hancock, Coupeville, Wash., 81.24 bushels per acre.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to close my statement by again calling attention to the fact that the remarkably high yield in Missouri was obtained under field conditions. From what has been said by my colleagues, it looks like the mistake I made was in reporting my yield first. [Laughter.]

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, to show that there were three prizes offered last year for the largest yield of an acre of potatoes in the United States, and that Aroostook County, in my district, obtained all three prizes. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of a better yield of legislation, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. WOOD of Indiana, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 12610, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Interior, $12,000; First Assistant Secretary, $5,000; Assistant Secretary, $4,500; chief clerk, including $500 as superintendent of buildings, who shall be chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretaries, $4,000; assistant to the Secretary, $2,750; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; assistant attorney, $2,500; 2 special inspectors (whose employment shall be limited to the inspection of offices and the work in the several offices under the control of the department), at $2,500 each; 6 inspectors, at $2,500 each; chief disbursing clerk, $2,500; chiefs of divisions—1 of supplies, $2,250, 1 of appointments, mails, and files, $2,250, and 1 of publications, $2,250; expert accountant, $2,000; clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 12 of class 4, 2 at $1,740 each; 1 $1,620, 16 of class 3, 1 $1,500, 19 of class 2, 1 $1,320, 24 of class 1, 4 at $1,000 each; returns office clerk, $1,600; female clerk, to be designated by the President, to sign land patents, $1,200; 7 copyists; classified laborer, $1,140; skilled laborer, $804; multigraph operator, $900; assistant multigraph operator, $720; typewriter repairer, $900; 2 telephone switchboard operators; chauffeurs—1 $1,080, 10 at $720 each; 10 messengers; 7 assistant messengers; 22 laborers; skilled mechanics—1 $900, 1 $720; 2 carpenters, at $900 each; plumber, $900; electrician, $1,000; gardener, $600; messenger boys—1 $540, 1 $420; five packers, at $660 each; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 8 female laborers, at $400 each; captains of the watch—1 $1,200, 1 $840; lieutenants of the watch—1 $1,020, 5 at $840 each; 3 sergeants of the watch, at $750 each; 66 watchmen; engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $1,000; 7 firemen; clerk to sign, under the direction of the Secretary, in his name and for him his approval of all tribal deeds to allottees and deeds for town lots made and executed according to law for any of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, $1,200; in all, $318,590.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question.

On page 101, lines 14 and 15, I note that there is 1 chauffeur at $1,080, and that there are 10 chauffeurs at $720. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why it requires $1,080 for 1 chauffeur when 10 chauffeurs can be secured at $720 apiece.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Ohio, that the $720 men are truck drivers, while the $1,080 man is the chauffeur for the Secretary of the Interior, to drive his private car. I wish further to state that in the estimates submitted they asked for three chauffeurs for the Secretary's private automobile—one day man, one night man, and a relief man. We thought the Secretary of the Interior might be able to get along with one chauffeur.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. When the gentleman speaks of the Secretary's "private chauffeur" he means his personal chauffeur?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. In connection with his official duties?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that is what I mean.

Mr. SNELL. Does the Secretary himself work on his job night and day?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I presume, of course, that he would not ask for anything but what was official and that would indicate that the Secretary of the Interior was working night and day. As I have stated, the estimate was for three chauffeurs—one day man, one night man, and one relief man.

Mr. BEGG. Does it take greater skill to handle a passenger car than it does to handle a truck? Why the discrepancy of $360 a year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is very good reason for that. In the first place the higher-priced chauffeur works longer hours, and in view of the fact that we did not appropriate for a night chauffeur for the Secretary of the Interior, I presume this one chauffeur will have to do some night work. Then aside from that he has to keep himself in better attire and more in accord with the position that he is occupying, and I do not think that the amount given to this chauffeur is unreasonable. It is the same amount that is given to the chauffeurs for the other Cabinet officers.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence of two special inspectors, while traveling on duty, at not exceeding $4, and for actual necessary expenses of transportation (including temporary employment of stenographers, typewriters, and other assistance outside of the District of Columbia, and for incidental expenditures necessary to the efficient conduct of examinations), to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,500.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the typographical error in the word "typewriters," in line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the correction.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Office: Commissioner, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,750; financial clerk, $2,250; chiefs of divisions—1 $2,250, 1 $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; private secretary, $1,800; examiner of irrigation accounts, $1,800; draftsmen—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200; clerks—18 of class 4, 25 of class 3, 30 of class 2, 60 of class 1 (including 1 stenographer), 32 at $1,000 each (including 1 stenographer), 34 at $900 each, 2 at $720 each; messenger; 4 assistant messengers; 4 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $283,790.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill for a moment. I notice he has dispensed with 26 clerks in the Indian Bureau. I read the hearings, but was unable to find much concerning that matter. I want to find out from the gentleman if he knows just what work these clerks are doing whom he proposes to abolish.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Acting upon the best information that we had, and knowing the desire of Congress to reduce expenditures in the Indian Bureau as rapidly as possible, and believing that the bill recently introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma will have a tendency in that direction, we decided that we could dispense with this number of clerks. I will state to the gentleman that I have had a conference with Mr. Sells, who has charge of the work, and he has agreed that he will make a showing to the Senate committee of just exactly what they want. I apprehend that there will not be much trouble if they make a showing that there is a necessity for these clerks, and that the remedy may be had on the other side.

Mr. CARTER. I want to say to the gentleman that I am in full sympathy with his purpose in reducing expenses of all bureaus. Seeking to carry out that purpose, the Indian Committee reported and the House passed the bill relating to citizenship which should operate to release many competent Indians, but that bill has not yet passed the Senate. I am in hopes it will pass the Senate, because it should materially reduce the expenses of the Indian Bureau. Granting that this bill should become a law during this session, however, it may still be necessary to maintain the present force until all administrative work necessary to releasing competents and distributing their per capita of tribal funds has been accomplished. I was just wondering if the clerks that this would turn loose might not be the very clerks required for this important work.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say that in the opinion of Mr. Sells we have reduced some clerks that he regards as essential. There was no showing of that fact before the committee, and we felt justified in so doing. Mr. Sells has his recourse, and he can make his showing before the Appropriation Committee at the other end of the Capitol when this bill gets there for consideration. There is no disposition on the part of this committee to cripple the service. When that showing is made before the Senate committee there will be no trouble on this proposition.

Mr. CARTER. What the gentleman expects to do is to have this matter thrashed out before the Appropriation Committee of the Senate, and if it can be shown that the services of these clerks are really needed, they will be retained.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the idea, that the matter will be taken up before the committee having this bill in charge.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman means the legislative committee, the appropriating committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. In other words, the gentleman is willing to agree to the employment of all clerks necessary to the service, and with this announcement I found myself in accord with the purpose of the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is not our desire to cripple the service. We are perfectly willing to appropriate for as many clerks as are necessary to carry out and complete this work.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement made by the chairman of the subcommittee, I think the matter can be adjusted upon a proper showing before the Senate committee, as he has stated. While I am on my feet I want to say that there was no increase in the service of this branch during the war because of the war, and therefore there is no demand for a decrease like there is in a good many other departments of the Government, as, for instance, in the War Department and the Navy Department, where a great many temporary clerks were employed. As I understand, in the Indian Service there were no temporary employees during the war.

I want to say further that I am in sympathy with the chairman of the subcommittee and the membership of the House generally in reducing the expenditures wherever it can be done without any injury to the service. But I want to leave this additional thought with the committee. A good many believe that as you individualize the lands and moneys of the Indians that you can immediately decrease the expenses. That is a mistake. When you deal with Indian tribes you deal with them much more cheaply from a governmental standpoint than when you deal with them as individuals. The Indian Office now is engaged in individualizing the lands and moneys of the Indians, and therefore more attention has to be given to the individual Indian than heretofore. As I remarked a moment ago, we used to deal with the Indians in their collective capacity. For instance, we dealt with the Five Civilized Tribes collectively as tribes. Within the last few years we have been dealing with the individual members of the tribes, and therefore it has taken more clerical force; it has taken more employees, both in Washington and in the field, than when you deal with them in their collective capacity. I wanted to invite the gentleman's attention to that, because I was afraid that he had not had occasion to give any detailed study to the Indian question which necessitated an increase rather than a decrease in the clerical force in the bureau and in the field.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am at a loss to know why, after the Government has allotted the land to the Indians and has declared the Indian competent to manage his own affairs, relieving him of the tribal relation, it should be necessary to spend a dollar on him from Washington; why there should be an overhead charge here in Washington with respect to the Indians that have been practically released from Government control.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman understands; he is an old Member of the House—been a member of the Indian Committee for 16 or 18 years—he knows that the supervision over the individual Indian has been retained by the Indian Office in Washington. He knows that the competency commissions go among the various tribes and that they have to report to Washington and their work has to be supervised and approved, and that supervision is kept over nearly all the individual Indians until they are entirely free and able to manage their own affairs.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I also know that in the same connection this supervision is retained more in the interest of the man who holds the job than in the interest of the Indian.

Mr. HASTINGS. That may be true, but we must have the clerical force to take care of it until the method is changed.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The method should be changed now.

Mr. HASTINGS. But it has not been changed. It is up to Congress to enact the legislation the gentleman complains of, and that can not be done on this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And it never will be changed while you continue to appropriate and grant additional help on the demand of the Indian Office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Patent Office: Commissioner, $5,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to get some information from the chairman of the committee. Within the last few days there has been one of the largest delegations of business men I have ever seen at the Capitol before the Committee on Rules in connection with the Nolan bill, which provides for various increases and changes in the Patent Office. These gentlemen claim that on account of the salaries paid in the Patent Office they are unable to keep efficient and experienced examiners, and on account of this inexperience on the part of new men there is growing up throughout the country a lack of confidence in the work of the Patent Office. Furthermore, they say the Patent Office is from 130 days to a year behind in its work. I would like to know whether this condition of affairs was brought to the attention of the committee, and, if it was, what the committee did in connection with it, and if we should give further consideration to this condition in this bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion I think that further consideration should be given to this measure. I do not know exactly what the terms of the measure are, but I do know that there is need for relief in the Patent Office. The Patent Office has received as little attention, so far as increases of salaries are concerned, as any department of this Government. The business of that office has increased more than 100 per cent in the last six months.

Mr. SNELL. That was one of the statements made before our committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is absolutely correct, and the Patent Office is one of the few offices that are revenue raisers for the United States. I think the amount that will come in as net, after paying all of the overhead charges, for the present year will amount to $250,000. I would say to the gentleman that we gave to the Patent Office very nearly all they asked for in their estimates. We did not undertake to increase any salaries for the reason that we felt if we did we would invite trouble and it would result in getting nowhere because of the fact that every increase would be subject to a point of order, and any attempt at any general increase in this office would have been subject to a point of order.

Mr. SNELL. There are no increases carried in this bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. SNELL. These gentlemen made the statement before the Rules Committee that it was absolutely impossible to get the technical men necessary in the Patent Office at the prices being paid now, that outside business corporations had taken all of the best men and paid them anywhere from 30 to 100 per cent more than they were getting in the Patent Office.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That was substantially the evidence before our committee. We did do this: We gave them a great many new places, and we felt that that was as far as we could go; and, in fact, it was all they asked us to do.

Mr. SNELL. From the information that is before the Committee on Appropriations, then, the gentleman would consider this a good proposition for the Rules Committee to consider?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I think it is worthy of further consideration.

Mr. SNELL. And worthy of consideration by the House?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think so. If the gentleman will take the time to read the hearings on that proposition, submitted by Mr. Newton and some of those who are attached to the office, he will find them very illuminating and that they contain a great amount of valuable information. As I stated here the other day, all of the ingenuity that was set loose during the war, and that was then expending itself on war inventions, is now turning its attention to inventions of peace-time instrumentalities, and this has increased the business of the office more than 100 per cent.

Mr. SNELL. These gentlemen made the statement that they are from 130 days to 1 year behind in their work, and that there is a great deal of business being held up because of the fact that people are not able to get papers from the Patent Office.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no doubt about that, and that is why we gave them the additional force in this office.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman indicate the surplus accumulated from fees in excess of what has been spent in the conduct of the office? Is it not some seven or eight or ten million dollars?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no surplus. The money has all been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Has the gentleman any idea how much the office earns yearly in excess of the cost of administration?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It varies. Their estimate at the time these hearings were held was that the surplus for the year 1919 would be $144,424, and they further estimated that if they had additional help, which we have given them, they would be able to do a great deal better than that this year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman also in regard to furnishing copies of patents, and so forth? I have had a number of complaints from men who state that the Patent Office informs them that they could not furnish printed copies or other copies of patents. Why can they not do that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They can. Of course, a limited number of patents are printed in the first instance, and they do not always know how many they will need. Sometimes they do not need the regular quota and other times they need many times more, and one of the reasons assigned for additional help is that they do not have sufficient force to do this extra work.

They get a photostatic copy of the patent, and have even gone so far as to permit some man who is engaged in photostatic work and private institutions engaged in this kind of work to make photostatic copies in order to supply the demand they could not supply to produce these original copies.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, recently I got a communication something like this, where the Patent Office had stated they could not furnish a printed copy of the patent, but a printed copy had been ordered; and also at the same time, although they had ordered the printed copy and had an appropriation for it, they were seeking to convey the impression to the correspondent that the reason they could not furnish the copy in the first instance was that Congress had not given them money enough.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There may be some truth in that. They are asking, for the purpose of relieving the situation the gentleman is speaking about, an appropriation from the deficiency committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Education: Commissioner, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,000; specialist in higher education, $3,000; editor, $2,000; statistician, $1,800; specialist in charge of land-grant college statistics, $1,800; 2 translators, at $1,800 each; collector and compiler of statistics, $2,400; specialists—1 in foreign educational systems and 1 in educational systems, at $1,800 each; clerks—5 of class 4, 6 of class 3, 7 of class 2, 9 of class 1, 13 at $1,000 each; 2 copyists; 2 skilled laborers, at $840 each; messenger; assistant messenger; messenger boy, $420; in all, $82,860.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention to what seems to me to be an absurd appropriation. Under the Bureau of Education we are appropriating for a commissioner and that commissioner gets $5,000 a year. On the next page we have the Superintendent of Capitol Building and Grounds, and we give him $6,000 a year. We also have a lighthouse superintendent who gets $6,000 a year. We have a Superintendent of the Bureau of Standards who gets $6,000 a year, and you might stand here and enumerate officers in the Government, who in my judgment are not as important as the Commissioner of Public Education in the United States, whose salaries range from $6,000 to $10,000 a year. Now, I want to say to the chairman of the committee I shall not offer any motion to raise the salary of the Commissioner of Public Education of the United States, but I do think this, he is worth more than $5,000 a year or he is not worth anything.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will gladly yield for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Pursuing the gentleman's line of thought, we have numerous porters here in the public buildings in Washington drawing a salary of $1,000 a year and $240 bonus, making $1,240 a year, and we have college graduates teaching school here in the city of Washington who do not draw over $840 a year.

Mr. BEGG. I agree with the gentleman all the way through, and the thought I want to leave with the House is this: If the public education of these United States is worth anything it is worth appropriating enough money to get the best man you can get of that particular profession for its head, and $5,000 to-day will not hire a school man big enough to command sufficient respect of even the village superintendents throughout the country to get his recommendations considered.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will gladly yield for a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Commissioner of Education have anything to do with the school activities of the different sections?

Mr. BEGG. I will answer that question by saying that if the gentleman will follow the next page he will find there we are appropriating money to the Commissioner of Public Education for the purpose of making investigations in various lines of education. We are giving him money to spend. He makes the investigations, and I simply maintain this position of a $5,000 man can not make an impression on a $12,000 superintendent, or a $9,000 superintendent, or a $7,000 superintendent. Even in our village schools in this country they are getting more money than the Commissioner of Education. I do not know anything about the Commissioner of Education—the present incumbent. This is not an attack upon him. He is probably a $20,000 man. It is poor policy for this Government to appropriate a miserly, measly sum like $5,000 a year when a little city in any State will give a man competent to be superintendent not $5,000 a year but it will give him $7,000 or $8,000. In any commercial line we will give anywhere from $7,500 to $10,000 and $12,000 a year.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I just wish to supplement the list of $6,000 employees by calling the attention of the gentleman to the fact that we are paying the reporters for committees $6,000.

Mr. BEGG. Very true; and I could go on, if I should make an investigation, and find any number of them. I want to appeal to the gentlemen of this House, the majority of you who have children to educate. I believe that the most critical thing in America and the most vital thing would be to pay your educators a salary big enough and great enough that would attract the biggest and best men of that calling in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. May I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will be glad to yield for a brief question.

Mr. BEE. I just wanted to make this suggestion, that I do not know a large city in my State that is not to-day paying its superintendent of education $5,000 a year, and if this man is worth anything he ought to be worth more than that or the position ought to be abolished.

Mr. BEGG. I just stated a minute ago that either the Commissioner of Education of the United States is worth more than $5,000 a year or he is not worth carrying on the pay roll. He is absolutely detrimental if he is not worth more than $5,000, but because of custom, and custom alone, we sit here and appropriate $5,000 a year for that job. Now, when I say custom and custom alone, there was a time in this country when $5,000 commanded a representative educator, but that time has passed. I would like to see this committee in its next bill—and I shall not make any effort at this time—but in its next bill I should like to see the committee do one of two things: Either eliminate the office or else pay a salary big enough to get a representative man from that profession, so that when he makes a recommendation to my city or your city, to my school officials and to your school officials, that recommendation will command respect.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I gladly yield.

Mr. GARD. With the gentleman's positive ideas on this question, does he intend to offer an amendment to increase the compensation or strike out the appropriation?

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio I do not so intend at this time. I think it is probably sufficiently potent to call the attention of the House to it. I know they are all fair men, and I do not care to disrupt the committee's plan of holding this down as low as possible, but if I am in this House when the next bill comes up I shall do so unless the committee does it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take issue with my colleague from Ohio in what he has said, but I want to call his attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations respects the law that Congress gives us to act under, and the law in reference to this subject fixes the salary of the Commissioner of Education at $5,000 a year. The Appropriation Committee must follow that instruction or its action would be subject to a point of order. The committee that has the original jurisdiction of fixing this salary is the place to address remarks of this kind, rather than by implication, leaving the impression that the Appropriation Committee is not doing its full duty toward this office.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WASON. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. I want to state—and I thought I did clearly state—that I meant no criticism of the committee. I merely meant to centralize the attention of this House on the condition that exists, and if that is the law it does not excuse the House. We amend statutes every day to help out some banking industry or some commercial institution, and the fact that it is by a law that we pay this commissioner $5,000 a year and we can not get the kind of a man we want for the place does not excuse us from responsibility. I am not centering my remarks to the committee at all, but to the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] referred to the Commissioner of Education as superintendent of public instruction in the United States. Those are not the duties of the Commissioner of Education. It is not the duty of the General Government to superintend public instruction in the United States, and even if it were it has not yet been assumed. The Commissioner of Education presides over a bureau the total appropriation for which for all purposes are considerably less than $175,000 a year. The other gentlemen, whose salaries were mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio, have important duties and have charge of large sums of money. The Bureau of Education has a few experts—I presume they are—and they publish some annual reports which, in the main, are not read even by the school-teachers of the country, because, in the main, they are not valuable. But the chief work of the Bureau of Education is looking after the health and education of the Eskimo in Alaska. That is about all they do. And while they are making a great and noble effort to teach the Eskimo children in Alaska all there is to be known about reading, and writing, and science, and art, and literature, and then, in addition, teaching them how to live—doubtless a very valuable work—after all we have taken a lot of that away from them in this bill, because it is not done either economically or well. They have just issued a bulletin, a copy of their educational magazine—for the publication of which I do not know where the authority exists, but it is worthless—devoted to education, and so forth, in Alaska, and no one can read it without thinking how silly most of it is. If the Government of the United States wants to undertake the supervision of public instruction in the United States, they ought to pay a man a very high salary to do that. I do not believe the time has come when the education throughout the country should be removed from local control and centralized in a bureau of Government clerks in Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph, in order to get the floor for a few minutes.

I want to indorse what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] said a moment ago, because I believe his position is well taken, but I do not believe he ought to be so timid about the matter that he will make a good suggestion and then not back it up by offering a proper amendment. All of us know that the Commissioner of Education for the United States Government is drawing too little when he draws a salary of only $5,000 a year, a thousand dollars less than the officers who superintend the public buildings and other places in Washington.

Mr. BEGG. Lighthouses.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. And of lighthouses, who draws $6,000. If the gentleman hesitates about offering his amendment for fear of getting a curtain lecture from the floor manager, I will agree to inveigle the Republican majority leader out into the cloak room and entertain him a few minutes, and let the gentleman offer his amendment while the floor manager is outside.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BEGG. I want to advise the gentleman from Texas that it is not fear.

Mr. BLANTON. I know it is not; it is not fear, but timidity, if anything, because I heard him get a lecture in here one day, and he did not take it at all. He promptly and properly asserted his rights. But I knew something was keeping him from offering a proper amendment, because he did make a good suggestion. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON] is mistaken when he tells his colleague that the committee does not have authority to raise the salary. The committee has that authority, or has assumed to exercise it in this bill.

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman, if I may, that it is sometimes the better part of discretion to go when you can get somewhere, rather than to run up against a wall.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. But we can not get anywhere unless we keep pegging away at these older fellows until we get them to act and to get out of these old ruts, and some of us new fellows have got to keep after them all the time in order to get them out of these old ruts, and why I take so much time on the floor is because I am trying to get some of these old fellows to change their old extravagant methods and economize.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if he does not believe that in the interest of orderly procedure in legislative action we should first increase the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Education of the Federal Government and give him some authority before we increase his salary?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, if his duties are those of an ordinary janitor we ought to discard the office. But if he is really a United States commissioner of education, in its real sense, we ought to add enough dignity to the position by paying him a proper salary commensurate with such duties. As suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], we ought not to keep an office here and maintain it and designate it by the big name of "Commissioner of Education of the United States" on a measly, miserly salary. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON] said by way of excuse that the committee did not have any authority to raise this salary. The committee assumed the authority in the bill to create and place a lot of new positions in here unauthorized by law, and fix generous salaries opposite the new positions created. The gentleman will remember that I made points of order against each and every one of them, and the Chair sustained my points of order, and struck out of the bill the various appropriations for these new positions attempted to be created. The Chair held that they were unauthorized by law. That was done yesterday. I made a point of order to four of them, and the Chair sustained it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I think his statement to the effect that they had authority ought not to have been made, because it was evident that they do not have authority, or the point would not have been sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee had authority to fix the pay of the officers authorized by law, and this is one of the officers authorized in the law, and the committee should have assumed the authority to fix a proper salary.

Mr. MADDEN. No. The salary is fixed in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks permission to withdraw his pro forma amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will object to the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the committee did not make any change of salary here because the salary is fixed by law. Any change in this law would be subject to a point of order and consequently, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] has well remarked, he does not care at this time to offer an amendment and run up against an obstacle that could not be overcome.

I wish, however, to make a suggestion in this connection. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON] stated that the committee was a law-abiding committee, as it doubtless is. But I hardly regard this as a strict matter of law, and I hope that the gentleman from New Hampshire will not regard me as hypercritical when I say that the public is getting misled sometimes by the expressions that we use with reference to amendments that are subject to a point of order because they are not in accordance with the rules of the House.

The Chair the other day, using language that has been used for so long that he had abundant precedent for it, referred to a certain amendment that was offered and other amendments of its class as being illegal. In no strict sense of the word, and, as I think, in no proper sense of the word, are these amendments that are subject to a point of order illegal. They are simply not in accordance with the rules of the House. But if we were doing anything illegal, or proposing to do anything illegal by adopting them, then every time unanimous consent is asked for some action we are being asked to do something that is illegal, because it is not provided for by the rules of the House. Yet we do this nearly every day, and sometimes 50 times a day. If we did not, the rules, instead of facilitating our business, would make it absolutely impossible to ever get through with it. Unfortunately the public is getting misled by that expression, and I have seen several times in the public prints statements to the effect that Congress was doing things that it knew to be illegal, when it was simply by unanimous consent doing something that was not in accordance with the ordinary rules of the House. Congress has the lawful right to do anything that is authorized by the Constitution, and in the exercise of its rights it may at any time dispense with all of its rules. Provisions in a bill that are subject to a point of order are not illegal, for Congress has the right to use the rules or not, as it may choose. On the contrary, they are absolutely lawful if no Member raises the point of order, provided, of course, that no constitutional objection can be properly urged.

I simply mention this in order to correct a misapprehension that is now existing in the mind of the public to a considerable extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYORS GENERAL.

After June 30, 1920, the offices of surveyors general in the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and the Territory of Alaska are discontinued, and the several surveyors general shall, on or before that date, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, deliver into the custody of the Commissioner of the General Land Office all field notes, maps, records, and other papers, and all furniture and equipment of their respective offices, and the Commissioner is authorized, whenever the surveys and records of any surveying district are completed, to dispose of such field notes and plats of survey as are duplicates of records in his office in accordance with sections 2218 and 2221 of the Revised Statutes, and from and after June 30, 1920, the authority, powers, and duties in relation to the survey, resurvey, or subdivision of lands and all matters and things connected therewith, heretofore vested in and exercised by the several surveyors general, including the use in his office of deposits by individuals for office work, the like use of funds arising under the acts of March 2, 1895 (28 Stats., p. 937), and June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 834), and the employment of personal services thereunder and for office work on Indian surveys, shall be vested in, and devolve upon, the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, That so much of the clerical force in the offices of surveyors general as may be needed and such records as may be necessary may be transferred to the General Land Office in Washington, and the Joint Committee to Assign Space in Public Buildings shall provide the necessary additional space in the Interior Department Building.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. FRENCH. I make the point of order that it is legislation which, under the rule, is not proper to be included in an appropriation bill. I refer especially to the latter part of paragraph 2 of Rule XXI, which provides—nor shall any provision in any such bill—

That is, an appropriation bill—or any amendments thereto changing existing law be in order, except—

First:

Such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

Second:

By the reduction of the compensation of any persons paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Third:

By the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

And fourth:

That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment.

This proposition, I think, no one will contend comes from a committee which has jurisdiction. There is in existing law provision made for the establishment of surveyors general in the different States mentioned in this paragraph and in the Territory of Alaska. The laws have been provided, passed at different times, and this paragraph proposes to wipe them all out, and in lieu of the law to provide the language in the existing bill.

No. 4 of the propositions referred to in the rule provides that an amendment of this character might be in order if it came from a proper committee or from a joint commission authorized by law. This, however, is not such a case. Therefore it seems we need not discuss that particular feature. It also does not come within provision No. 2 that I referred to, as to the reduction of the compensation paid to any person out of the Treasury of the United States, because this does not propose to reduce the compensation of any person.

There are two other provisions, however, in the rule that bear upon this particular section. The two are the ones that I referred to as No. 1 and No. 3. No. 1 is that an amendment shall be in order—

such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

Of course that is conditioned upon other parts of the rule.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Would you contend that it did not reduce the number of officers?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, no; I do not contend that; but I am going to connect that up with another part of the rules of the House that I think is very pertinent to the case.

Mr. SNELL. If it did not reduce the salary or number of officers, you would not have any objection, because it would not take anything away from you?

Mr. FRENCH. I would have objection to the way it is proposed the work shall be handled.

The third provision to which I referred was that an amendment would be in order, other things being considered as satisfactory, if it reduced the amounts of money covered by the bill. This amendment may or may not reduce the amount of money covered by the bill. It does reduce the amount covered by the bill of last year and of several previous years. It is problematical and hypothetical whether the work, if done in the manner proposed, would in years to come be handled more economically than under the present system. It also appears to reduce the number of officials, because it does wipe out the several surveyors general. But it is also an established rule that an amendment of this kind is not in order if it enlarges the scope of the work of an officer whose office is already established. If you will turn to the section as it is proposed, you will find that the offices of the different surveyors general are wiped out. Then you will find that the duties conferred heretofore upon the surveyors general are conferred upon the Commissioner of the Land Office. Beginning with line 17, on page 113, the language of the bill recites—

And the several surveyors general shall, on or before that date—

The date for the abolition of the offices—

under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, deliver into the custody of the Commissioner of the General Land Office all field notes, maps, records, and other papers, and all furniture and equipment of their respective offices, and the commissioner is authorized, whenever the surveys and records of any surveying district are completed, to dispose of such field notes and plats of survey as are duplicates of records in his office in accordance with sections 2218 and 2221 of the Revised Statutes.

With the exception of the last line, that is, of course, all new legislation. It does not have relation to the abolition of the offices. Now, on page 114, line 2, the language is:

And from and after June 30, 1920, the authority, powers, and duties in relation to the survey, resurvey, or subdivision of lands and all matters and things connected therewith, heretofore vested in and exercised by the several surveyors general, including the use in his office of deposits by individuals for office work, the like use of funds arising under the acts of March 2, 1895 (28 Stats., p. 937), and June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 834), and the employment of personal services thereunder and for office work on Indian surveys, shall be vested in and devolve upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

In other words, you add to the duties and responsibilities of an officer certain duties and responsibilities that have not heretofore been added, and which are now under the law vested in several different officers, whose offices it is proposed to abolish.

There have been several decisions upon this particular point. If you will turn to Volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, section 3680, you will find a case cited where the Committee on Agriculture brought in the Agricultural appropriation bill and omitted the appropriation for the salary of the chief clerk of the Bureau of Animal Industry. In lieu of that provision, however, the committee provided that there should be an assistant chief of division. This assistant chief of division was not authorized by law, and a point of order was made against the paragraph on the ground that it was in violation of the provisions of the rule to which I have directed attention. After the matter was considered the Chairman ruled that the point of order was well taken; that the committee did not have the authority in wiping out one office to bring in a provision in the bill creating other offices within the same bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to call his attention to the fact that the ruling just quoted by him was made in the House when the Holman rule was not in existence?

Mr. FRENCH. Let me call attention to section 3598 of Volume IV of Hinds' Precedents. Here was a ruling made after the adoption of the Holman rule. The Committee on Appropriations brought in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill with a provision that included the language—

For additional expenses involved in keeping the Library (of Congress) open from 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., $15,000.

The point of order was made against that language under the same rule to which I have directed attention. Here was an instance in which the committee sought to add new duties, new powers, and new responsibilities to the library force, and under the rule the Chairman held that the point of order was well taken and that the committee did not have authority to report such legislation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That was clearly out of order, because of the fact that it was new legislation that did not pretend to retrench expenditures or to discharge officers. That was the ground upon which it was held out of order.

Mr. FRENCH. It was held out of order because it added new responsibilities and duties to an officer whose responsibilities and duties had been fixed by law.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And did not retrench expenditures.

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, it did not retrench expenditures. But the rule also is very definitely held in this House that wherever any part of a section falls under the ban of the point of order it carries with it the entire section that is involved. It is true that these several offices could be abolished under the Holman rule, and if the section simply provided for the abolition of the offices of the several surveyors general, no one could contend that that proposition would not be in order under the rules of the House. But here is a proposition that not only abolishes the offices of the several surveyors general but also establishes additional duties and responsibilities which are placed upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office which are not his under existing law, and under the same rule under which it has been held that an amendment reducing expenses by abolishing offices is in order, it has also been held that if a particular part of a provision is out of order the entire section of which it is a part must fall with it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Upon what theory can it be claimed that this is a reduction of expenses? This provides for the repeal of the law creating the various surveyors general for the several States and turning the jurisdiction over to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. How can anyone at this time say that it is a saving of any expense?

Mr. FRENCH. I prefaced my remarks with the statement that even that question is hypothetical, that it is speculative. We do not know whether it will reduce or increase expenses. If the gentleman will turn to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for last year—chart opposite page 103—he will find that for every acre of land surveyed in the United States, in States where there is no surveyor general's office but where the work is handled from Washington, the office expenses per unit of acres surveyed is far greater than the average expense of surveying lands in the States where there are surveyors general's offices.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I knew that the gentleman knew that, and that is the reason I wanted to call it out. As a matter of fact, the expenses will be more, because of the distances and the greater amount of travel of the men who will have to be sent out to do this work, instead of having it done by the surveyor general in the State who is right on the ground with a force that can do the work.

Mr. FRENCH. Under the practice of a hundred years we have handled the matter through officers—surveyors general—right in the States where most of the surveys have been made. When the work of surveying the public land is about to pinch out—and it is pinching out in some States right along—the offices are abolished and the work taken over by the General Land Office. But in the handling of that work—I am not talking about the work in the field, I am talking about the office work alone in the city of Washington—the cost is greater than that of doing the same kind of work in the offices of the different States.

The chairman of the committee may say that the appropriation is less for the coming fiscal year than for the current year. This is doubtless so, but it would not necessarily be so on the basis of work done. It might be smaller, because there will not be so much work done in the next fiscal year as in the present year or the last one.

Let me call the Chair's attention to section 6878, in Hinds' Precedents, where it has been held that when a part of a section that is out of order is not germane, under the rule, the whole paragraph proposed must fall with it. In that case during the consideration of the Army appropriation bill in the committee Mr. HULL of Iowa made a parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not if a part of the paragraph was held subject to a point of order the whole paragraph would be stricken from the bill, and the Chair ruled upon the point and said that if the point of order was made against the entire paragraph, yes; but if the point of order was directed against a part of the paragraph, then only the words designated would go out.

Now, I submit here we have a case on all fours with the case decided at that time. We have a part of a paragraph that possibly standing alone would be in order. Yet there is nothing to show that it would reduce expenses if the several offices were abolished. But the other part of the paragraph, containing constructive legislation as to the duties and responsibilities of the officers not heretofore charged with this duty and responsibility is out of order. I did not make a point of order against that alone but against the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield for the Chair to ask a question?

Mr. FRENCH. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman distinguish this in any way from the paragraph in the former part of the bill abolishing the offices of the Subtreasuries?

Mr. FRENCH. I have not checked up closely on that, and I would not want to say. I think the point I have referred to is pertinent to this part of the paragraph. The whole paragraph involves two propositions—one of which is possibly in order if it stood alone. The other proposition is not in order under the rules of the House, and the whole paragraph must go with it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FRENCH. I will yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is plain that this would not reduce expenses. It will really increase the expenses, because in line 23, page 114, they appropriate $175,000 for the transfer of the records to Washington.

Mr. FRENCH. The proposition of the gentleman adds to the suggestion I made a little while ago, that it is purely speculative whether or not it would reduce in any way the expenses of the Government for the coming year.

If the Chair will turn to volume 5, section 6880, of Hinds' Precedents, he will find the same question to which I referred a minute ago was passed upon when the naval appropriation bill, on February 25, 1904, was under consideration. Here an amendment was proposed by Mr. Bell, of California. Mr. Bell raised a parliamentary inquiry, asking if the point of order was sustained as to the entire amendment. The part of the amendment to which the point of order was made was ruled out, and the Chair made this observation:

> It is well settled that where there is an amendment, any provision of which is out of order, the whole amendment falls with it.

It seems to me upon the considerations I have suggested, the tying up of the entire proposition in one paragraph, it being clearly demonstrated that one part of the paragraph is not in order, the fact that a part of the paragraph is not in order must carry the whole paragraph down with it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point of order that the paragraph entitled "Surveyors general" seeks to change existing law by legislation on a general appropriation bill and that the provision does not show upon its face, as a fair and necessary conclusion, that the enactment of such legislation will retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HAYDEN. The present occupant of the chair has held that a saving of expenditure must appear beyond all cavil to make an amendment in order under the Holman rule. In considering whether an amendment will retrench expenditures the Chair can look only to the pending bill, the law of the land, and the rules and practices of the House.

The paragraph of the bill which is before the Chair contains five substantive propositions, any one of which may be enacted into law as an independent measure. The first proposal is that the surveyors general in the 12 Western States and the Territory of Alaska are abolished. If the Chair will look at the law he will ascertain that the aggregate salaries paid to these 13 officials is $36,000. By the next proposal the surveyors general are required to deliver into the custody of the Commissioner of the General Land Office all field notes, records, and other papers, and all furniture and equipment of their respective offices. The transfer of such property is bound to cost money.

The proposal to transfer all of the powers now vested in the surveyors general to the Commissioner of the General Land Office might not indicate upon its face that the result will be a direct expense to the Government, but that expense will result from that transfer of authority is shown by the appropriation called for further along in the bill. It will also cost money to transfer the duplicate plats and records to the secretary of state of each State, as is further provided by reference to section 2218 of the Revised Statutes.

The fifth and last substantive proposition which is contained in the proviso on page 114 authorizes the transfer of records and clerks from the offices of the surveyors general to the General Land Office in Washington. Certainly no one will deny that it will cost considerable sums of money to make such a transfer, and the proof of that fact quickly follows.

I direct the attention of the Chair particularly to the following paragraph, beginning on line 19, page 14:

> For per diem in lieu of subsistence, salaries, freight and expressage on records, instruments, and equipment shipped from the several offices, and the purchase of additional stationery, supplies, and equipment required in the General Land Office by reason of such transfer, $175,000, including $4,000 for salary of the secretary of the Territory of Alaska.

That is new legislation for the sole purpose of effecting this proposed transfer. It appears upon its face that a large expenditure of money, amounting to $175,000, must be made to do the work in Washington now performed under the direction of the surveyors general in the Western States, and the sum to be appropriated obviously exceeds the $36,000 which is supposed to be saved.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman from Arizona the same question that he asked the gentleman from Idaho? Does the gentleman distinguish between this paragraph and the paragraph abolishing the Subtreasuries?

Mr. HAYDEN. Distinctly so. The provision abolishing the Subtreasuries was amended from the floor of the House by adopting section 2 of the bill H. R. 12721, introduced with that object in view by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which provides that all of the functions now performed by the Subtreasuries shall be transferred to the Federal reserve banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not speaking of the Platt amendment, but of the item as carried in the bill originally.

Mr. HAYDEN. The item as it originally appeared in the bill was rejected and the Platt amendment was accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that he would hold the item in order, following the precedents.

Mr. HAYDEN. I did not understand that the Chair actually ruled upon the original provision in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not have to rule upon it, because an amendment was offered striking it out; but the Chair stated at that time that he would have ruled it in order, following the decisions of Chairman CRISP and Chairman SAUNDERS on that precise question. The Chair wants to know if the gentleman makes any distinction between the item carried in the bill and this particular item.

Mr. HAYDEN. My attention was particularly directed to what actually took place. There was simply a transfer of jurisdiction from one bureau to the other, without carrying any expense or appropriation, as is provided in this case. It seems to me that if the Chair is confined to the terms of the bill before him, he must conclude that if an appropriation of $175,000 is necessary to pay the salaries, freight, expressage, and so forth, on records and equipment shipped from the several offices of the surveyors general to Washington, and required in the General Land Office by reason of such transfer, he can not help but rule that on the face of the bill there will be a larger expenditure of money at this time than there would be if this proposed legislation was not enacted into law. That appropriation of $175,000 refers directly to the last proviso of the pending section, which states that the clerical force and equipment in the offices of the surveyors general may be transferred to the General Land Office in Washington. It is my contention that in order to make such a transfer, as shown on the face of the bill, it will cost more money than will be saved by the abolishment of the offices of surveyors general.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman the point the gentleman is trying to make—that this does not show on its face that there will be any reduction in expenditure—is not well taken. Much stress is laid upon the fact that we provide in this bill in another paragraph $175,000 for clerical force and for freight to defray the expense of shipment. I call the Chair's atention to the fact that it is disclosed in this paragraph that we abolish 13 distinct offices, 13 surveyors general, carrying a total salary of $39,000; that we abolish the salaries of the clerks in these offices, to the amount of $172,570, and contingent expenses amounting to $12,300, making a total saving for the year 1920 of $223,870. As against that, deduct this appropriation of $175,000, and you have a net saving to the Treasury of $48,870.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In a moment. The clerical force of $172,570, carried into the $175,000, or deducted from it, leaves less than $3,000 for freight, which would be an incidental expense.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In just a moment. So that it does appear upon its face that it results in saving money to the Government and in retrenchment of expenditures. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. The gentleman suggests that the $175,000 carried in the next paragraph pays the salaries of the clerical force. I submit that it provides for per diem and transportation and freight and so forth.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is reading too far down in the paragraph. The very first line says that it is for per diem in lieu of subsistence and salary. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, is there any guaranty at all that the amount of work would be done under the law for the coming fiscal year that was done in the year with which the gentleman is making the comparison?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is a matter that might be pertinent if we were arguing with reference to the feasibility of the abolishment of these offices, and upon that proposition I think I have abundant authority to show that the work will not be curtailed in the least, and that it will be more advantageous and expeditious to those immediately concerned than under the present operation.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me call attention to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the last fiscal year. It is therein stated that it is shown that the office cost per mile of land surveyed was $4.61, while the average cost throughout the United States, and that includes these surveyors general offices and all the western offices, was $1.41 and $2.08 per mile.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That argument is not pertinent to the point of order, but I would say in passing, in answer to the gentleman, that with the decline of this activity, with the necessity for public surveys constantly growing less, the expense proportionately constantly grows greater.

That would be a sufficient answer to the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. FRENCH. But that does not answer it. Here is a proposition where the office force alone at Washington, that employs far more for doing this same kind of work than are employed in any office of any one of these States, where the cost per mile per unit is $4 and something, in comparison with less than $2 in the States where you are proposing to abolish the office.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will insist upon arguing the point of order. Now, with reference to the fact as to the germaneness of this proposition, the Chair looks to the law as it is, not as to any conjecture that might be thrown into it. He knows what the laws is, because it is demonstrated in the appropriation bill for 1920. He knows the proposal, because he has it immediately before him, and the two together show a net saving by the abolishment of these officers of $48,870. This case is on all fours with the abolishment of the Subtreasuries.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. VAILE. I notice in the matter of the independent treasuries, page 65, there is no provision in the act as it was reported providing for the transfer of the duties of those officers.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the trouble with the gentleman; he was not present and does not know what happened.

Mr. VAILE. The Chair referred in his discussion to the act as reported to the House, not what happened on the floor. The Chair's interrogatories to the gentleman from Arizona apparently are intended to base a conclusion upon the act as reported here to the House. Now, taking the act as reported to the House, the provision regarding the Subtreasuries shows nothing whatever about the transfer of the duties, whereas the provision in regard to the transfer of the office of surveyors general after June 30, 1920, etc., is that it shall be turned over to the General Land Office.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman, for his edification, the previous ruling on this very Subtreasury proposition was based upon the proposition that carried the very same idea with reference to the transfer of duties and has been universally held in order——

Mr. VAILE. In any event, the case is not on all fours with these independent treasuries.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is on all fours with the independent treasury proposition. Now, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the provision of the Platt amendment, which the Chair held in order:

> That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to transfer any or all of the duties and functions performed or authorized to be performed by the assistant treasurers above enumerated, or their offices, to the Treasurer of the United States or the mints and assay offices of the United States, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, or to utilize any of the Federal reserve banks acting as depositaries or fiscal agents of the United States, as provided by existing law, for the purpose of performing any or all of such duties and functions.

There was a transfer of the duties of these Subtreasuries to the Treasury of the United States. In the case at hand there is a transfer of the duties of these surveyors general to the Commissioner of the General Land Office absolutely parallel in so far as the situation is concerned. That being true, if it was proper to take and provide for the performance of the duties now incumbent upon the Subtreasuries by the transfer of their duties to the Treasury of the United States, it is equally proper to provide by this proposal for the transfer of the duties of these surveyors general to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the city of Washington. It strikes me it is not necessary to spend further time in arguing a proposition that is so perfectly plain and on which a ruling of the Chair has been so recently made.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. RANDALL of California. I notice the committee has this proviso:

Provided, That so much of the clerical force in the offices of surveyors general as may be needed and such records as may be necessary may be transferred to the General Land Office in Washington.

Is it not possible under that provision to transfer the entire force to the General Land Office? Is not that possible?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Even if it were so, we are giving the benefit of the doubt so far as the saving is concerned if that would be true. As a matter of fact, it will not be done.

Mr. RANDALL of California. As a matter of fact, we do not make any reduction of the expenses of conducting these offices if the power which you give in the bill is exercised.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have cut off the salaries of 13 sinecures, pure and simple; sinecures which, so far as the duties they perform are concerned, might as well all be in Alaska as to be distributed throughout these States.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Was the gentleman ever in the office of a surveyor general in any of the public-land States, and does he know anything about their duties and work which they perform?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. They were abolished in my State before I was born. In fact, there never were any.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. So the gentleman was never in the office of a surveyor general of a public-land State?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I never was.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. But the gentleman speaks authoritatively and says that these places are sinecures, and that no duties are to be performed by these men?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. When opportunity is given, I think I can demonstrate it—demonstrate that it will prove a benefit to the service itself in avoiding tedious and vexatious delays and in greater efficiency.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair asked me a few moments ago to point out the distinction, if any, between the original provision of the bill with respect to the abolition of the Subtreasuries and the pending paragraph. The Chair will note on page 65 the bill as originally introduced did not provide for the transfer of the personnel from the Subtreasuries to the reserve banks, but merely gave to the employees who were legislated out of office a preference right under the civil-service law to secure position in the Treasury Department or any other branch of the Government. Let me read it:

All employees in the Subtreasuries in the classified civil service of the United States, who may so desire, shall be eligible for transfer to classified civil-service positions under the control of the Treasury Department, or if their services are not required in such department they may be transferred to fill vacancies in any other executive department with the consent of such department. To the extent that such employees possess required qualifications they shall be given preference over new appointments in the classified civil service under the control of the Treasury Department in the cities in which they are now employed.

The proviso beginning on line 13, page 114, reads:

Provided, That so much of the clerical force in the offices of surveyors general as may be needed and such records as may be necessary may be transferred to the General Land Office in Washington.

It is to this last proviso that I particularly direct the attention of the Chair, which seems to me makes the whole paragraph subject to the point of order, because it enacts new law for the transfer of a clerical force from the field into Washington. It is subsequently shown on the face of the pending bill that the expense of such a transfer, the salaries, and freight, and other items connected with it will amount to $175,000, which amounts to very much more than the apparent saving in the salaries of the surveyors general.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the inquiry was made by the Chair whether this particular item could be distinguished from the Subtreasury item. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it can be very readily distinguished from that item. I do not gainsay at all the proposition that it is in order on an appropriation bill to abolish an existing system and provide another and different system, provided always that the Chair on the whole is satisfied that the alternative system so provided will effect a reduction of expenditures.

The Chair has heretofore overruled the precedents afforded by Mr. Chairman CRISP and others to the effect generally that the Holman rule should be liberally construed, holding in express terms that if it was a question of drawing the conclusion that an item in the bill or an amendment from the floor afforded a reduction of expenditures the rule should be strictly construed, not liberally. Apply that ruling to this situation and let us see to what conclusion it will lead the Chair. What would be the proper conclusion should the Chair strictly construe the rule?

It is perfectly clear that while the bill abolishes the surveyors general in certain States, the work of those officials is not abolished. It is merely transferred. And the only question is whether the Chair can determine that this legislation on the whole will necessarily, ex proprio vigore, effect a reduction of expenditures; whether, in other words, the operating expenses of the system afforded will be less than the operating expenses of the system which it replaces.

I call the attention of the Chair to the transfer of the officials provided by the bill.

In line 13, page 114, it says:

That so much of the clerical force in the offices of surveyors general as may be needed and such records as may be necessary may be transferred to the General Land Office in Washington.

Every one of this force, and more, may be needed. How can the Chair determine how many officials will be transferred under this authority? Moreover, when these officials are transferred from the present localities where their work is being conducted to the remote location of Washington it will be altogether problematical whether the cost of operations on the whole will not be thereby increased. By what process of reasoning is the Chair able to say how many officials will be required in the new location to do the work necessary to be carried on, or what will be the cost of conducting operations from so distant a point as Washington?

The cost of transfer is problematical; the number of officials necessary to be transferred can not be ascertained at present, and the overhead cost of the new system is impossible of ascertainment by reference to any facts now in the possession of the Chair.

Another thing, as pointed out by the gentlemen who have argued this matter on behalf of their respective States, is that, as a matter of course, the work on the ground can be conducted much more economically with the headquarters of the chief officials in easy reach of the field force than when those headquarters are located in Washington and the officials must be sent to the field from this point. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] argued that the remarks of the gentleman from Idaho on this line did not touch the point of order, even though the figures submitted by that gentleman established his contention that operations conducted from Washington would be more expensive than operations based on headquarters in the several States. So far, Mr. Chairman, from these figures not being related to the point of order, they are of the very essence of the point of order, since it is necessary for the Chair to contrast the figures of the present system with the problematical figures of the alternative system. This provision is not in order, unless the Chair is satisfied that, on the whole, the replacement system will be more economical than the present system.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. HAYDEN. I would like to state that there is annually appropriated $700,000, every cent of which is expended in the survey of public lands under the supervision of the surveyors general. So it is not alone a question of saving their salaries.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am seeking to point out, that the overhead under the new system may be so much greater than under the old, that it will swallow up the reduction appearing from the figures of the gentleman from Indiana. If that may be the case, and the Chair is not able to say that it may not reasonably be the case, then the provision as a whole is not in order.

On page 114 a very large amount is appropriated in this connection, as follows: For per diem in lieu of subsistence, salaries, freight, and expressage on records, and so forth, $175,000. The gentleman from Indiana takes this appropriation into consideration in his effort to show a reduction but he entirely fails to establish that on the whole this alternative system can be run more economically than the system that it is to replace. As stated above, unless it appears that the new system operating as a whole will be more economical than the old the paragraph is not in order. That is what is involved here. The Chair, as I have said, has already held, with respect to the Holman rule, that there can be no liberality of construction in respect to the conclusion of reduction of expenditures, but that it must appear beyond cavil or controversy that on the whole this reduction will be effected.

Every gentleman from the States affected by this provision who has argued this matter has pointed out (and the Chair should take cognizance of their suggestions, equally as well as of the suggestions of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], because both are merely arguments) that the overhead expenses in connection with operating the new system will be much greater than under the old. How much greater, Mr. Chairman, no one can say. Hence the cost of the new system is altogether problematical.

That brings us, Mr. Chairman, to the very crux of this matter, and that is whether the Chair, looking to the paragraph as a whole, can undertake to say definitely how much of the present force will be transferred to Washington and when transferred here what will be the cost of its establishment, maintenance, and operation at such a distance from the field of immediate activity. The Chair must be satisfied beyond cavil that the new system on the whole will be cheaper than the old, to sustain the paragraph under discussion. The Chair in reaching a conclusion of reduction should first determine reasonably the number of officials necessary to be transferred; second, the cost of establishing and maintaining them in the new location; third, the cost of conducting operations in the States with Washington as a headquarters. When the Chair has found a reasonable answer in figures to these three queries he will be able to make a comparison between the known cost of the present system and the cost of the alternative system, and to determine which of the two on the whole will be the cheaper. Of course, it is perfectly clear that if the bill stopped at abolishing the surveyors general a palpable retrenchment would be effected and the paragraph would be in order.

But when the transfers are provided for and an alternative system is afforded and headquarters so remote from the territory where the work is to be conducted are established, then the Chair is unable to say how many agents will need to be transferred, how many will be necessary for the conduct of the business from the new headquarters, and how great the overhead cost of the new system will be. In this state of uncertainty how can the Chair say that the new system will necessarily be cheaper than the old? How can he make a comparison between the two until he establishes to his satisfaction the essential facts of the new system? How can he, construing the Holman rule strictly as applied to the conclusion of reduction, undertake to say that he has enough facts in hand to make a comparison? And until he can make a fair comparison how can he reach a conclusion that the new system will be more economical than the old?

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself for a moment to some of the arguments advanced by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] in support of his point of order.

If I judge correctly, his argument was based largely upon the proposition that under the Holman rule the legislation proposed in the latter part of the paragraph should be held not in order, because it is not reported by a committee having jurisdiction and, further, that it is not properly related to the first part of the proposition, abolishing the surveyors general, as to make it in order in case the Chair holds that part of the item in order. We all know the Holman rule so well that it would be a burden for me to quote it. I gather from the argument of the gentleman from Idaho that he assumes that the latter part of the Holman rule—the proviso—limits the first three elements of the rule.

Mr. FRENCH. No; I think it enlarges it; but this is not comprehended within the provision.

Mr. HICKS. In my opinion the proviso in the Holman rule merely adds another vehicle by which legislation can be carried in an appropriation bill. Should I need reinforcement to my contention, I would quote from a ruling of Chairman CRISP on March 14, 1916, when in discussing the proviso he said, "It provides an additional method of legislating on an appropriation bill." Chairman SAUNDERS, on February 9, 1912, said, in discussing the Holman rule, "That proviso allows further amendments on the report of the committee having jurisdiction, provided they reduce expenditures."

It seems to me that the gentleman's contention that the several propositions which follow the one abolishing the surveyors general are not in order is not well taken. He admits, I think, that the salaries and a number of offices are reduced in the committee proposition, but contends that the following propositions of the same paragraph are not so related to the first part, reducing the offices and the salaries, as to come within the rule. I think, from the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], we can assume that the salary and number of offices will be reduced if this paragraph remains in the bill. The language admits of no doubt. I think the gentleman from Idaho practically admitted that there would be that reduction. To me it is not problematical; it is positive. Some have contended that the removal of the offices to Washington will increase expenditures. I submit this is pure guesswork and therefore outside the province of the Chairman to pass upon as a reduction. Then, the gentleman brings up the point whether or not these other legislative provisions in the paragraph, three or four of them, are so related to that "reduction in the salary and number of offices" as to come within the purview of the Holman rule. Let me state that in my opinion they are properly related. They are not independent, substantive propositions. They can not be divorced from what goes before, for they simply provide the ways and means of carrying on the work when the surveyors are abolished. They are useless when considered by themselves and have virility only when harnessed to the first part of the paragraph, and therefore must be considered as an integral part of the whole paragraph. Let me quote to the Chair a decision which I think is directly in line with what my contention is—that these several clauses are a part of one proposition and are therefore in order if the first part is in order. I argue that the second and third parts of this paragraph are so related to the part which reduces salary and offices as to be indivisible.

On March 14, 1916, we had before the committee an appropriation bill, and the late Mr. Borland, of Missouri, sought to amend that bill by adding an amendment providing for the reduction by one-tenth of the number of employees in the various departments in Washington, and then he added words which provided "that the heads of the departments, in order to make that work more efficient and to prevent loss to the Government, shall require the employees to work not less than eight hours a day," and so forth.

A point of order was made to that by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], both he and Mr. Borland conceding that the provision about reductions was in order. The Chairman, Mr. CRISP, of Georgia, ruled that the first part of Mr. Borland's amendment providing for a reduction of salaries was undoubtedly in order, and that therefore the only question for the Chair to decide was whether or not the second part, which compelled the heads of departments to require additional work on the part of the employees, was so related to the first part as to be in order; and the Chairman held that that relation did exist, and therefore held the whole amendment to be in order.

I will quote to the Chair, with his permission, the decision of Chairman CRISP on that occasion, because it seems to me directly in line with the point of order that we are now discussing. I read:

> Now, the Chair is clearly of opinion that where an amendment is offered reducing the salaries paid out of the Treasury, coupled with legislation, that legislation, to be in order, must be connected up with, or related to, or logically follow from the part of the amendment reducing the number of employees or the amounts covered by the bill.

And so forth; and he held the whole amendment in order. In my opinion this is on all fours with the proposition before us to-day, and if the Chairman holds that the reduction of officers is in order—and I respectfully submit he can not do otherwise—then I contend he must hold it all in order and will therefore overrule the point of order made against it.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the Chair to one feature of the expense involved in this matter that has not yet been discussed. I find provision is made that the joint committee shall provide the necessary additional space in the Interior Department for the employees to be brought to Washington under the provisions of this section if it is adopted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Interior Department building today is all occupied. I grant you that the committee referred to in this section would have the power to take out of that building some bureau or some sections of bureaus and place them elsewhere, but if they did that they must somewhere in this city rent the space to put the employees taken out. We are now paying great sums of money for rentals in the District of Columbia, and I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that these offices of surveyors general in the West to-day are located in public buildings, where rent is not a feature or an item that is to be considered. That will have to be considered here if these employees are brought to the city of Washington to be housed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not if the Chair is prepared to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The point of order made by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] involves not only a question of the interpretation of the rules of the House but a question of fact. The Chair thinks that it would first be proper to dispose of the question of fact.

The gentleman from Idaho and others intimate that possibly this would not be a real reduction of the expenditures of the Government. The Chair has before him the current law relating to the subject matter, which provides an appropriation of $223,870 for offices of surveyors general, of which the sum of $39,000 is salaries of surveyors general. This paragraph abolishes all the offices of surveyors general, and carries in the next paragraph an appropriation of $175,000.

Clearly on the face of this item there is a saving of $48,870. Under these circumstances would the Chair be justified in assuming that possibly such matters as have been alluded to just now by the gentleman from South Dakota, high rent of public buildings, and so forth, might result in a larger eventual expenditure?

The Chair is unable to distinguish between this proposition and the one abolishing the Subtreasuries. The present occupant of the chair some years ago made precisely the argument that has been made here, that while on the face of it the abolishment of the Subtreasuries saved money in that it abolished the offices, it might eventually cost more to transfer the employees, and not result, ultimately, in a saving of money; but the present occupant of the chair was overruled on that proposition, and he thinks rightly.

The Chair does believe that the Holman rule should be construed strictly, as the gentleman from Virginia has said. The Chair has not ruled and will not rule that an item can come under the Holman rule if it does not show on its face that it saves money to the Government. The Chair will not speculate where it is not apparent on the face of the item that it will retrench expenditures. Conversely the Chair does not think that he ought to speculate where on the face of the item, as here, there is an evident saving in this bill of $48,870, or that he is justified in guessing that eventually the expenses might be greater. On the question of fact then the Chair is clear in his mind that this is a saving of money to the Government by the abolition of the offices of the surveyors general. Now, that being the case, and this being a change of existing law, does it come under the Holman rule?

The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] makes as his principal point on that subject the question of jurisdiction of the committee. He claims that the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction over the original subject matter, and to sustain that contention he refers to the proviso of the Holman rule. Now, the Chair thinks that the proviso has nothing whatever to do with the main part of the Holman rule as applied to items originally brought in in a bill. This is an item contained in the bill brought in by the Committee on Appropriations, and under the Chair's construction of the Holman rule it is not necessary that that committee must show jurisdiction of the original subject matter.

The Chair further believes that under the Holman rule it would be competent for a Member on the floor to offer an amendment, provided it came under the first part of the Holman rule. To the mind of the Chair the proviso of the Holman rule does not, as he has stated, relate either to original items or amendments offered on the floor in the first instance, because the proviso applies only to further amendments. In other words, in the opinion of the Chair the proviso in the Holman rule expands rather than contracts its scope.

The question then resolves itself into one as to whether the provision carried in this bill brought in by the Committee on Appropriations qualifies under the first part of the Holman rule, which reads as follows:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures, by the reduction of the number and salaries of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amounts of money carried by the bill.

To the mind of the Chair this matter is absolutely clear. There is no question that this item is entirely germane to the bill. The only question then is, Does it by a reduction of the number and salaries of the officers of the United States retrench expenditures? Clearly it does. It specifically reduces the number of officers, it specifically abolishes their salaries, and it specifically reduces the amount of money carried by this bill. Under the circumstances the Chair can not think that he can make any other ruling except to overrule the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH: Page 113, line 13, strike out line 13 and the remainder of page 113 and all of page 114, down to and including line 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For salaries of surveyors general, clerks in their offices, and contingent expenses, including office rent, pay of messengers, stationery, printing, binding, drafting instruments, typewriters, furniture, fuel, lights, books of reference for office use, post-office box rent, and other incidental expenses, including the exchange of typewriters, as follows:

"Alaska: Surveyor general and ex officio secretary of the Territory, $4,000; clerks, $11,220; contingent expenses, $3,600; in all, $18,820.

"Arizona: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $18,400; contingent expenses, $600; in all, $22,000.

"California: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $14,100; contingent expenses, $650; in all, $17,750.

"Colorado: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $18,650; contingent expenses, $750; in all, $22,400.

"Idaho: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $12,600; contingent expenses, $750; in all, $16,350.

"Montana: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $16,980; contingent expenses, $600; in all, $20,580.

"Nevada: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $12,060; contingent expenses, $500; in all, $15,560.

"New Mexico: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $18,900; contingent expenses, $900; in all, $22,800.

"Oregon: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $9,510; contingent expenses, $600; in all, $13,110.

"South Dakota: Surveyor general, $2,000; clerk, $3,100; contingent expenses, $200; in all, $5,300.

"Utah: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $14,020; contingent expenses, $725; in all, $17,745.

"Washington: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, 11,260; contingent expenses, $750; in all, $15,010.

"Wyoming: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $10,540; contingent expenses, $500; in all, $14,040.

"Expenses chargeable to the foregoing appropriations for clerk hire and incidental expenses in the offices of the surveyors general shall not be incurred by the respective surveyors general in the conduct of said offices, except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

"The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to detail temporarily clerks from the office of one surveyor general to another as the necessities of the service may require and to pay their actual necessary traveling expenses in going to and returning from such office out of the appropriation for surveying the public lands. A detailed statement of traveling expenses incurred hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof.

"The use of the fund created by the act of March 2, 1895 (28th Stats., p. 937), for office work in the surveyors general offices is extended for one year from June 30, 1920: Provided, That not to exceed $25,000 of this fund shall be used for the purposes above indicated."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, there are a number of gentlemen interested in this proposition. I think, before we begin the discussion of it, we had better agree upon the time for debate.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I am in sympathy with the report of the committee, I am willing that these gentlemen who oppose the committee shall select some one else to control the time on this side; or, if they desire me to do so, I am willing to control the time. It might be better to agree upon some one else; and, if the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] or the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] or any of the others are willing to divide the time among themselves, any agreement they make with the chairman of the subcommittee will be agreeable to me.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There are 12 States involved and 1 Territory. Will they want more than one Representative from each State to talk?

Mr. SISSON. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Some of the States may not want any time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman indicate how much time is desired?

Mr. SISSON. Gentlemen on this side of the aisle desire 60 minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is there no one over there to stand up in favor of the committee proposition?

Mr. SISSON. I have just stated to the Chair that I was in sympathy with the report of the subcommittee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I knew that.

Mr. SISSON. I am speaking for myself only. I can not tell about other gentlemen.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I wondered if anybody on the Democratic side except the gentleman from Mississippi was in favor of economy.

Mr. SISSON. I want five minutes for myself. I suggest two hours on a side.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state that all the gentlemen who have asked for time, with the possible exception of one, are in opposition to the provision contained in the bill. So it occurs to me that there should not be so much time taken in opposition to it and so little time in favor of the bill.

Mr. SISSON. That might strengthen the position of the committee, however. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I ask that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to two hours, one-half in favor of the bill and one-half against it, because of the fact that gentlemen who are in opposition to the bill are so numerous.

Mr. SISSON. I will retain five minutes of the time for myself, because I am going to speak in favor of the committee's report.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Let us agree on two hours' debate.

Mr. SISSON. That is satisfactory.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have a list of the gentlemen who have asked for time on this side, and the gentleman from Mississippi has a list of those who asked for time on that side, and I will control one half of the time and he the other half.

Mr. SISSON. That is satisfactory.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and one-half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TILSON). The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it in order to enter into such an agreement in Committee of the Whole where the time is to be divided?

The CHAIRMAN. It is by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the Members, I would say that the amendment I have proposed is based on the language of the last current appropriation law. The particular items, however, have been modified, in some instances increased and in other instances decreased, so as to meet the estimates of the Department of the Interior in the recommendations made to the Congress. The net total in the amendment I have proposed is a little over $2,000 less than the amount carried in the current law.

The paragraph which the committee has reported proposes to wipe out all the surveyors general offices in 12 States and 1 Territory, to do away with the work as it has been done for years, and to transfer the work and jurisdiction to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

I recognize that there must come a time when this shall be done. From year to year as the different States that were public-land States approached the completion of surveys of their public lands it came to be too large an expense to maintain the surveyors general in those particular States. Then the offices have been abolished and the work taken over by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The whole matter of public-land surveys is one that has had to do with all our States. The States along the Atlantic seaboard handled it for themselves, and so did the State of Texas. But the other States were public-land States, yet they are not so to-day. There is no surveyor general in any of the States as you go west until you reach the Dakotas and Colorado, and the reason is there is no public land or little public land unsurveyed. The work is pinching out in all the States. But the work to-day is in such shape in the 12 States and 1 Territory that in my judgment it is not wise to abolish the offices of the surveyors general in most of them.

Let me call attention to the lands in the several States that are still unsurveyed. Up to June 30, 1919, 1,261,136,954 acres of public land had been surveyed within the United States. We have unsurveyed land amounting to 559,229,126 acres. These lands to which I have referred that have been surveyed are largely in States where there are no surveyors general. The lands that are not surveyed are in the States to which I have referred where there are to-day surveyors general. To-day, according to these figures, approximately one-third of the land within the United States and Alaska has not been surveyed. Idaho is one-third unsurveyed; Utah more than one-third; New Mexico is one-fourth unsurveyed; and Arizona three-fifths. Colorado has nearly 3,000,000 acres not yet surveyed and Washington nearly 8,000,000 acres, while most of the States whose surveyors general offices you propose to abolish have vastly more.

Is it the orderly thing to do, is it the economical thing to do, in this stage of our surveying work, for us to abolish the policy that has obtained for 100 years, to abolish surveyors general offices in the various States and transfer all the work to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in Washington, regardless of the status of the surveys? I submit that it is not. We have had much experience in the West in doing business with officers 2,000 miles away, and we do not like it.

Let me call attention to another fact: You take the lands in these public-land States and you will find that they are being entered upon by homesteaders or other entrymen under the various land laws. I was very much surprised the other day when turning to the records of last year I saw that the number of acres of land acquired by private individuals under the public land and other land laws last year was in excess of 11,000,000 acres. And when I turned to the records to see how many acres passed to patent last year under the homestead laws I found the grand total was 6,524,759.68 acres. I found there were only six years in the whole period of land history of our country when the acreage acquired by settlers under the homestead laws was in excess of the acreage that was acquired last year under the homestead laws. Of course, it is true that in part this is accounted for by the enlarged homesteads and by the stock-grazing homesteads. Numerically, probably the number of entrymen is smaller than it was for many years past, but at the same time the number of entrymen must be large when the total acreage is six and one-half million acres, and when there were only six years in the past when the lands acquired exceeded in acreage the lands acquired last year.

Now, let me call attention to the receipts from the public-land States. The total receipts of the public-land States under the different land laws are in excess of $495,000,000. The receipts of public-land States last year were in excess of $4,000,000, and with the exception of four or five years from 1906 to 1912, when, under the enlarged-homestead law and under the development of the Reclamation Service, the receipts were increased tremendously, the receipts last year compare very favorably with the receipts covering a great many years. These three points to which I have referred are pertinent because they show the tremendous interest of people in the public-land States in the work that is conducted by the offices of the surveyors general. It shows the importance of the work, and it is important that these offices should be retained in the several States, so that the people who are interested in this work can have ready access to them.

Now, what does the surveyor general do? Prior to some 10 years ago he was trusted with the responsibility of awarding contracts for surveys. To-day the contract-work plan is not followed, but the Government handles the work through its own officers and surveying parties. The surveying parties in a given State return to the surveyor general's office with their survey notes of field work done. These notes are worked over and plats are made. Errors that are disclosed are corrected, and if necessary a surveyor can return to the land he has surveyed without crossing the continent and check up on his work. After the plat has been made and the notes transcribed, one set is sent to the Land Office at Washington for final approval and one set is retained at the office of the surveyor general for public use.

Mineral-survey applications are made, and the surveyor general upon a proper showing authorizes a deputy mineral surveyor to do the work. The surveyor general's office receives the money to cover the office cost of the survey and the survey proceeds.

There is a vast amount of detailed information requested of the surveyor general's office every day. It is requested by miners and by farmers, by settlers and prospectors, by county officers, by courts, and by the State. In the 12 States and the Territory of Alaska under the surveyors general are 119 clerks, draftsmen, or other office help. These people are rendering a distinct service to the public. The West is in the building, and we do not like to do business with executive officers two or three thousand miles removed when we can transact the same business with officers near at home. Suppose you could save a little in overhead charges. The people in the West would pay for it, and more than pay for it, in extra cost for service in long delays and in waste of valuable time. Gentlemen, other than is necessary for systematic conduct of the public business, the people will welcome closer contact with their public officials and not remoteness, which leads to bureaucratic government.

Let me call attention again to the fact that the overhead charges, the office charges, are not greater in most of these States than the overhead charges in conducting the same work in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, if I read correctly the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. In three of the States, I believe, the average office charges are larger than the office charges here, but in all of the other States the average charge is much less than the average charge for office work in the surveying division in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The average cost is one-half or less in these different public-land States from the standpoint of mile unit of land surveyed in handling the work under the surveyors general of the different States than when the same work is handled under the supervision of the General Land Office, with the office located from two to three thousand miles away, and when you think of Alaska, 5,000 miles, from the place where the land is situated that is being surveyed. I wired to the surveyor general of my State and he advises that if the work of the assistant supervisors of survey could be combined with that of the surveyor general, under the direction of the latter, an economy could be effected. I wired to a preceding surveyor general and he says that possibly a saving of $50,000 can be made to the Government by the proposition that has been recommended by Mr. Tallman and by the Committee on Appropriations, but he says that when you are making the saving to the Government you are going to add more than you will save to the people in these public-land States, who, because of their remoteness from the Capital where the work shall be done, will be compelled to pay out of their own pockets for the handling of useless work. I admit that as the work of the surveyor general's office pinches out it should be abolished, but why abolish the offices in States where the work has not pinched out and where it continues and will for several years continue exceedingly heavy?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH]. Congress should not attempt to change a long-established policy of this Government at this time, as has been proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. The law now provides for an orderly way in which the offices of surveyors general shall be dispensed with. When the survey of the lands in any State is completed the Secretary of the Interior has authority to then abolish the office and transfer such duties as may remain to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. This summary proposal, when there yet remain in the Western States vast areas of land to be surveyed, is premature, untimely, and in the end will not be economical for the Government.

The total area of vacant public land in Arizona on July 1, 1919, was 20,714,785 acres, of which 13,572,200 acres was unsurveyed. Last year 1,762,639 acres were surveyed in my State. At that rate it will take nearly eight years to survey the remaining public domain, but surveying must proceed at least that fast to meet the demand for land by settlers.

The Indian reservations in Arizona comprise 21,884,682 acres, of which less than 3,000,000 acres have been surveyed. The Indian country must in time be surveyed by section and township, and Congress is annually appropriating money for that purpose, which is expended under the direct supervision of the surveyors general. It is evident that there are many years' work ahead in surveying the Indian lands in Arizona alone.

That is not all, however, for there are 12,076,769 acres in forest reserves in Arizona, only about one-half of which has been surveyed. In order to prevent quantities of merchantable timber from being acquired under the homestead laws many forest homestead entries must be surveyed by metes and bounds which, like all other surveys, must be approved by the surveyor general. Arizona was granted 10,489,236 acres of public land in aid of the common schools and for other purposes by the act admitting the State into the Union. None of this land can be selected until it is surveyed, and the State land commission is continually filing applications for new surveys in order that title to the lands donated by Congress may pass to the State.

Another uncompleted work of the surveyor general of Arizona is the survey of the remainder of the 3,218,469 acres granted by Congress in alternate sections to encourage the construction of the Atlantic & Pacific—now Santa Fe Pacific—Railroad. The railway company deposits money for such surveys which are now in progress. Mining claims must also be surveyed prior to patent at the expense of the claimant, and the recent regulations governing mineral leases on Indian reservations require all such claims to be regularly surveyed before a lease will be granted. Owing to the value of the mining properties involved, the supervision of mineral surveys constitutes a very important part of the duties of the surveyor general, the proper performance of which is of vital interest to the great mining regions of the West.

I have gone into details with respect to the situation in Arizona in order to demonstrate the inconvenience, expense, and hardship which will be imposed on large numbers of people representing many and varied interests if this new method of conducting the survey of the public lands is adopted. At the close of the last fiscal year the total area of unsurveyed land in Arizona was 31,028,155 acres, which is 7,500,000 acres greater than the entire area of Indiana.

The State of Indiana was once an unsurveyed wilderness, but the Congress of the United States brought order out of chaos by having the entire State surveyed, and every acre of it has passed into private ownership. In 1796 a surveyor general was provided for the territory northwest of the Ohio River for the convenience of those who were seeking homes on what was then the frontier. This surveyor general's office was maintained until 1857, when every township in Ohio and Indiana had been surveyed. It is my contention that the people of Arizona are entitled to the same service and the same consideration as was given to the people of Indiana under similar circumstances.

How can the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], who is in charge of this great appropriation bill, justify the proposal he has made? It has been demonstrated that no real economy will be effected. It has been proven that the service will be impaired. It has been shown beyond a doubt that all those who desire surveys to be made will suffer greater inconvenience and expense. The existing law contemplates that in due course of time, when all of the land in any State is surveyed, the office of surveyor general will be discontinued. Until that time comes, why should the people of Arizona and the West be denied the same advantages which have heretofore been provided for every other public land State? [Applause.]

We are told that this legislation is recommended by Commissioner Tallman. Now, I have a very high regard for the Commissioner of the General Land Office. No one has brought greater ability to that office since its establishment than Clay Tallman. He is not only a man of sound judgment but also possesses the capacity to accomplish results both by his own efforts and as an organizer and administrator. The Members of this House receive quicker and better responses to their inquiries from the General Land Office to-day than from any other bureau of the Government, because the commissioner has kept the work in Washington current despite the war demands and other obstacles. In that regard Mr. Tallman may be compared to Gen. McCain when the latter was in charge of The Adjutant General's Office, and I know of no higher compliment than that to pay to any bureau chief.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office said at the hearings that in his opinion some money could be saved if the 13 surveyors general offices were discontinued and the entire public-land survey service conducted from Washington. Of course, he is sincere in that opinion, but did anyone ever hear of a first-class bureau chief who did not honestly believe that economy and efficiency would surely follow an increase in his powers? Everyone of them who is worth his salt will say that, because they have faith in themselves, without which they would be unfit for positions of responsibility. But actual experience has taught the Members of Congress that such expectations are not always realized, the usual result being an increase in appropriations with no greater service to the public.

In the present instance I fear that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has allowed a very natural desire for greater authority to warp his usual good judgment. What is the sum of money involved in the salaries of the surveyors general? The total saving if the offices are abolished is only $36,000. Yet Congress annually appropriates $700,000 for the survey of the public lands, the expenditure of every cent of which would normally be under the supervision of the surveyors general. We are told that this will reduce overhead expenses. Is 5½ per cent too high a charge for supervision? Ask any experienced contractor and he will tell you that a much higher rate is usually charged in private work. Some competent man must be in close touch with the surveying parties in the field or mistakes will be made and expenses incurred which will amount each year to much more than the alleged saving by the discontinuance of these positions.

If all of the surveyors general are thus summarily removed from office, does anyone imagine that the Commissioner of the General Land Office will himself perform all of the work that these 13 men have been doing, even though Congress shall enact fiction into law by saying that all of their authority, powers, and duties shall be vested in the commissioner? I am confident that I know what will happen, and I can fortify my forecast by reading the following extract from the commissioner's last annual report:

The work of the eastern surveying district includes the miscellaneous fragmentary public-land surveys and examinations and Indian surveys in those States where the former United States surveyor general offices have been discontinued. The active work of the past year extended into nine States, as follows: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida,

Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Oklahoma, and Wisconsin. The commissioner, as ex officio United States surveyor general, performs all of the duties incident to authorizing and approving the surveys, ordinarily required of the surveyors general. (Sec. 88, R. S. 2219.) The field work in this surveying district is placed under the immediate charge of the associate supervisor of surveys, who reports both to the commissioner and to the supervisor of surveys. Surveyors are detailed to this district as needed, the number averaging from five to eight. One technical examiner and computer and one draftsman, both in the office of the supervisor of surveys at Denver, Colo., now prepare most of the plats of the surveys.

It will be noted that the Commissioner of the General Land Office acts as ex officio surveyor general for the nine States named, but he delegates the work to an associate supervisor of surveys who reports to the supervisor of surveys in Denver. There are none but fragmentary tracts of land remaining to be surveyed in these States and, at most, only eight surveyors are employed. One general commands eight privates in this instance. With over 70,000,000 acres of unsurveyed land in the 12 Western States and 375,000,000 acres to be surveyed in Alaska, is it not certain that numerous associate supervisors of surveys will have to be appointed?

"A rose under any other name would smell as sweet," and "One can not get something for nothing," are two proverbs which are as true as they are ancient. Congress may change the title of the office from surveyor general to associate supervisor of surveys, but money must be appropriated to pay good salaries if first-class and efficient men are to be obtained for the new positions. In my opinion the net result of this change will not be a retrenchment in expenditures. There will be no material reduction in the number of supervisory officials, but instead of having surveyors general appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, there will be selected by the Commissioner of the General Land Office about the same number of associate supervisors of surveys. Instead of being selected from the States where their offices are located and therefore anxious to give good service to their fellow citizens, as is now the case with the surveyors general, their successors, with a longer title, will be but cogs in a great governmental machine responsible to no one but a superior officer who occupies a desk in Washington two or three thousand miles away.

The enactment of legislation abolishing the offices of surveyors general is but another step in the direction of centralization in Washington of business which experience has demonstrated should be supervised in the field. When the office of surveyor general was first established in 1796 it was recognized by Congress that the settlers on the public domain were entitled to prompt service in the surveys of their entries which could only be given by an official in the vicinity clothed with authority to act. The Ohio and Mississippi Valleys and the Great Plains region were successfully populated by this method. If the people of Ohio and Indiana and Illinois and Iowa and Kansas enjoyed this advantage so long as there was public land to be surveyed in those States, why should the people of Arizona and California and New Mexico and Colorado and all the West be now deprived of equally good service and compelled to look to an official in Washington for relief?

The West is now suffering from too much control by the executive departments. Instead of further concentration of power at the seat of government many activities should be decentralized. Instead of attempting to coordinate and standardize every activity by arbitrary revolving-chair regulations with the resulting formality and crystallization there should be a greater dispersion of initiative and responsibility. By this method alone can the reign of bureaucracy be curbed and the perplexing and paralyzing effect of official obstacles and red tape be obviated. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with the earnest desire of the Committee on Appropriations and the leaders in the House to reduce appropriations wherever advisable to do so, but I think they should exercise better judgment in the appropriations that are to be reduced than that indicated in this instance. I do not criticize the chairman of the subcommittee for his determination to prevent changes being made in the bill reported to the House, but I do criticize the committee's plan to move to the city of Washington the records in the surveyors general offices concerning the public lands in the various public-land States. I also criticize his assumption and the assumption of other members of the committee that they know more about the western country than the men who are elected by the people there to represent them here in Washington. Now, what is the mode of procedure of the committee in reference to acquiring the information in the framing of this bill? The subcommittee convenes, composed of five members, and holds hearings, calling before it the executive officers of the departments to be affected, but so far as I can ascertain they do not make any inquiry of the Representatives in Congress coming from the sections of the country that are to be affected by these proposed reductions. The chairman of the subcommittee admitted on this floor that he had not called into consultation any Representative from that great western country concerning the plan of changing a policy affecting the survey of our public lands which has been in force for nearly a century. Ninety-eight years ago on the 3d of next March a law was passed establishing the office of surveyor general, and now it is proposed to change this policy to the great inconvenience of the people in the West and the retardation of the development of the resources of that great western country. If the gentleman had taken the trouble to have searched the statutes he would have learned that there is a general law under which transfer of records are made when the surveys are completed. In 1893 general authority was given to the Secretary of the Interior to take care of the records affecting the public lands in States where the lands have all been surveyed. The law provided that those records instead of being brought to Washington, as proposed in this bill, should be placed in the office of the secretary of state in the State where the lands are located. He would have found in the act of 1888 that the surveyors general offices in the States of Nebraska and Iowa were abolished and a provision was made that those records should be kept in the office of the secretary of state, so as to make them accessible to the people, and not brought to Washington, as proposed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I will.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The provision for the same purpose is the same in this bill for every one of those States.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Here is the provision to which the gentleman refers—section 2221 of the Revised Statutes. That section provides that those records can not be turned over to the secretary of state until the State passes a law making some provision for taking care of the records. Now I contend, Mr. Chairman, that it would be a very great inconvenience to the people of the public-land States who have business affecting titles to the public land transacted in Washington instead of at the State capital. When a number of settlers in an unsurveyed portion of the State desire a survey made they sign a petition and send it to the surveyor general, and he sends an agent immediately to inquire whether or not these are actual settlers who intend to remain there. If they are, he recommends a survey of those lands, draws up instructions to the surveyors who are to do the work, and transmits them to Washington for approval. They are generally approved immediately, because there is nothing more required than a formal approval, and the authority to survey the land goes back to the surveyor general and the work is undertaken. Immediately after the surveys are made and approved by the commissioner the settlers are able to file their claims in the local land office.

In the case with respect to mining claims, if a person develops a piece of mineral land which he thinks can be profitably developed and he desires to offer final proof, he does not have to take the matter up at Washington, but simply files an application for a survey, making the necessary deposit to do the work with the surveyor general, and he details a surveyor to do this work, the applicant for the mining claim pays for it, and it is disposed of directly from the office of the surveyor general——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER. I will yield the gentleman two minutes of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that it would not be a saving of the public money to bring these records here. On the contrary, it would cost a great many thousand dollars to move them to Washington. I venture to say it would take 50 box cars to bring the records from these various public-land States, which have been accumulating, some of them, for 75 years. It would also result in a suspension of public business, affecting the rights of title to public land during the time these records are being assembled and removed, and it would require a great deal of expense in the employment of laborers and other employees to take care of the records. They would have to be gathered in these various surveyors general offices and be classified, and at least six months would transpire before they could be assembled here. So I contend that the interests of the public would not be benefited but would be greatly injured by this proposition in the various public-land States by the adoption of this plan. It would be just as sensible, in my judgment, to remove all the records from every county in the State of Indiana affecting the title to land to the capital city at Indianapolis, the home of the chairman of the subcommittee, and put them in one great hall of records as to move all the records affecting the public lands in the various Western States to the city of Washington.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. What good is this two hours' talk going to do on this proposition when we have only about 30 men in the House now? Why not have this debate cut down and eliminated. We know how we are going to vote, and what is the use of wasting two hours' time?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I am perfectly willing to vote——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of this amendment of the gentleman from Idaho, and my people feel that this office of surveyor general in my State and the office of the surveyor general in all of the Western States are important to them. They are a great aid in the conduct of their business. There are millions of acres of land yet unsurveyed and yet to be settled. There are thousands of people who annually come and inspect those lands. There were perhaps more entries made last year than in the history of this country, or at least in the history of the western country.

It is important that these men have access to the records in order to find out about these surveys. I anticipate that the gentlemen on this floor do not know what the situation is about the offices of the surveyors general in the States. Surveys are made on the ground and plats are made there. They are perfected there. They are then sent to Washington and approved and returned to those offices. If some surveyor, or some attorney, or some applicant for land wants to know anything about it, he goes to the surveyor general's office, or he goes to his attorney, who goes to the surveyor general's office. And if these records should be sent to the General Land Office in Washington they will be 2,000 miles away. It will be an imposition upon those people to compel them to come to Washington or to send to Washington. Immediate contact can not be made between the individual who is interested in these matters that could be made if the records are kept in Montana or in the other States.

There is a growing disposition upon the part of this House and the people of the eastern countries to feel that the West is getting something that it does not deserve, perhaps. There is a growing disposition to take from us some of the things we have had for years. It has been only a week or 10 days since there was an effort to take all the public lands and put them in some sort of reserve for grazing purposes. That country will never grow until that land is opened up. Two-fifths of my State is in reserves. We want to build up the western country. No part of the country west of the Mississippi was built up except under the beneficent homestead laws that enabled the people to take up those lands.

This is a proceeding to abolish those offices and have the land surveyed from the city of Washington. As to the matter of expense, I dare say it will cost twice as much to have the surveying done from Washington. Take the records from the commissioner's last report, and he advised you that for the surveys made from Washington in all States where they have not surveyors general the cost was $4 a mile square and where they had surveyors general it cost about $2 a mile square to get the land surveyed. So I feel that an injustice is being done to my section of the country. I feel that there is a disposition to trespass upon it. I feel it is wrong to change the policy at this time, at least. It was not changed in Ohio, it was not changed in Iowa or in Nebraska, until the lands were surveyed. Why can not we follow the same procedure as was followed in those States?

Mr. EDMONDS. Did the gentleman think that an injustice was done when they took away the Subtreasuries of the East?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. If the gentleman asks me individually, I will say that I did not vote to take them away.

Mr. EDMONDS. Some of the gentlemen from your States did.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I relied on the statement of gentlemen who said that they were needed, and I voted to retain them. Will he rely on me now and vote with me to retain these surveyors general?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I thank the gentleman, kindly. If we can get some more, we will win this proposition.

Mr. Chairman, no one doubts the good intentions of the members of the Appropriation Committee who brought in this bill or the members of the subcommittee who framed the bill. The trouble is they are dealing with a subject on which they have little or no information, and in their effort to make a showing of economy they are doing a great injustice to all the public-land States of the Union and showing to the country and this House that they know little or nothing about the subject under consideration.

You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that while a Member who is leading the fight for this so-called economy was telling this House how the work of the surveyors general is now conducted and how it will be conducted when the State office is abolished and the records are all sent to Washington, and I asked if the map of survey of a given tract was made before the survey in the field or after the survey in the field, he insisted that the map was made before the actual survey on the ground. There are 2 men from public-land States on the Appropriation Committee and 30 more in this House, yet I am informed that the subcommittee who framed this provision did not consult a Member from a Western State where these offices are located. Any man living west of the Missouri River will tell you the absolute necessity for the continuance of these offices, and if he has lived there a year he will tell you that he wants home rule in the conduct of his local affairs and is utterly opposed to further concentration in Washington of the control of all governmental affairs that should be administered by local people for the benefit and convenience of the local people.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to see this bill cumbered by legislation that would make or retain unnecessary offices, but I do not believe the time has come when these offices should be abolished in these Western States. In Eastern States it was the custom to survey the land and settle the boundaries before the offices were abolished, and I can see no reason for changing the rule when there are only 12 States and 1 Territory left in which surveys have not been completed. The State of South Dakota, one district of which I represent, has approximately 30,000 acres of land that have not been surveyed. The homesteader has a right to be able to find that land when he files upon it and the Government says that he is entitled to it. He ought to be able to put his buildings and fences on it without unnecessary delay. At the present time there are 30 or 40 cases of surveys where lines are not run, and this will continue for approximately four or five years. At the expiration of that time I think the offices ought to be abolished, but there is no reason for taking the action while the offices are necessary. I think it would be false economy to transfer all these duties to the main office at Washington. A man who wants a survey run wants to be able to find the officer in his territory. And I oppose the feature of the bill which would make it necessary for a man to come to Washington in order to have that done which the Government ought to do for him without delay.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back three minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, there are other much more important matters connected with this proposition than the mere question of economy. Every Member from the West knows that if this change is made it will not save one dollar in expense to the Government. The work will have to be done by somebody. It will be done down here in Washington, the most expensive place on earth, where they have much shorter hours and very much higher pay and less efficiency. It will cost the Government more than it does to have the work done out in the field. It may not look that way now. But just wait until this work is all sent in and centered here. They will frantically insist upon having a thousand new clerks with expert skilled pay. But aside from that, even if there were some saving, which there will not be, there is no warrant or justification for this course. I feel that we ought to follow the policy that has been followed during the entire history of our country. Whenever the public lands of a State have all been surveyed and gone into private ownership, and no more work is to be done by the surveyor general, then, and not until then, is the office in that State abolished. Every State has had this office until all its surveys were made and completed and closed. Why change this policy now? And if there is any State in the Union now that has a surveyor general's office, with comparatively no public land left, this committee should abolish that particular office. This provision reported in this bill just wipes them all out by one fell swoop, without any attention whatever to the absolute necessity for them or to the work, that in many cases is far behind, and with no attention to the wishes or welfare of any of those States and without consultation with any of the Representatives in Congress of any of those States. The welfare and development of our Western States should be the first consideration, and not the mere saving of a few dollars, even if it would save anything. This committee just shuts its eyes and wipes us all out. That action, if enacted into law, would cost the western people hundreds of thousands of dollars and untold delays, disappointments, and hardships that would be outrageous. That is not economy or justice. It is wholly wrong in principle and contrary to common sense and fair dealing. We do not want to send any more of our affairs to Washington to be attended to than is necessary. Washington is too far away from the people. The committee ought to consider how their action would affect each State.

Take the State of Colorado, that I have the honor in part to represent. We have at the present time 2,724,490 acres of unsurveyed land left in our State. I think we have a great deal more than that, because there are some 14,000,000 acres in its forest reserves, and I will bet there is scarcely a corner stone in all that 14,000,000 acres. Let me tell you that the number of acres published by the department as being unsurveyed does not mean that that is all the land that will have to be surveyed by any means. It probably means that no one has ever triangulated over that land. During this past year they have resurveyed in my State 279,000 acres. The fact about the so-called surveyed land is that many years ago some of these contracts were made to survey the land, and they reported their surveys and plats and their surveys were approved and plats duly filed here in Washington and in the local land office, but when the homesteader wants to locate a piece of ground he very seldom can find any corners. And when he hires a local county surveyor to find the corners and give him his numbers and he files, he then finds the surveys are not correct, and the whole country is withdrawn for a resurvey and is held up, and no entries allowed and no one can get a patent or know where he is for years and years while the Land Office is getting around in resurveying it, and until they can get all this land surveyed and then resurveyed and the lines correctly and definitely and finally settled they have no business to try to abolish the surveyors general.

In Rio Blanco and Routt and Moffat Counties, in my district, there the Government surveys were made about 1881 and 1882, and there was not a corner stone within 30 miles a few years ago. If they were ever set, there was not one left, and Congress had to appropriate $50,000 to resurvey a large part of what is now two counties. There is a good deal of the early work where they put corner stones that are now all gone, and a large part of the so-called surveyed land in the State of Colorado will probably have to be resurveyed hereafter.

But, aside from that matter, aside from the ordinary survey of public lands which the Eastern States had, we of the mountainous West now have the mineral-land surveys, mining claims of all kinds, and those surveys will have to be conducted for a great many years yet. They are conducted by local United States deputy mineral surveyors who live out there; and if we had to have it done through supervision in Washington, and by correspondence between Washington and the field carried on, and the field notes checked up by correspondence in that way, it would involve a frightful expense and involve delay to the development of our country, and would be most awfully inconvenient and unsatisfactory. I do feel that the conveniences, welfare, and development of the West, after all, is of far greater consideration than this possible saving of $48,000, and that is the most that they claim it would save. It does seem to me that this is a very shortsighted policy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, under the leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I will insert a telegram that I received from the Hon. John B. McGauran, the United States surveyor general of Colorado, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., February 19, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

The discontinuance of surveys and resurveys of public lands and mining claims would be a great blow to the development of the West. This work must continue, and it is impossible from a practical standpoint to handle it from a central office in Washington. United States surveyors and deputy mineral surveyors must have records and instructions upon which field work is based readily accessible, to say nothing of the primary consideration of the convenience and necessity of records for use of local surveyors and the general public. Local offices for such purposes, and to be in close touch with field operations, are imperative. If the offices of surveyors general are abolished the Commissioner of the General Land Office must necessarily establish local offices. This he has already done through supervisory offices, such offices usurping to some extent the lawful functions of the surveyor general, resulting in duplication of work and unnecessary expense. Why not seek to properly limit this attempt at enlargement of bureaucratic authority and retain to the surveyor general his statutory rights which have operated so successfully for half a century.

JOHN B. MCGAURAN,
Surveyor General.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment or substitute. I am in hope that the members of this committee, which is dealing with this question, will lift up their eyebrows and look across the Rocky Mountains. There are some men who can not see the Rocky Mountains much less see what is west of them.

The State that I have the honor in part to represent here is eight times as large as the State of Massachusetts, and in that State two-fifths of the area of the State is unsurveyed Government lands, and, furthermore, the State of Washington is inseparably hooked up with the present and future of the Territory of Alaska, a Territory of 577,000 square miles. What benefits Alaska not only benefits the State of Washington, but benefits every State in the Union.

There is not only great agriculture in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, but there are mineral lands of great value there. If there are any two things in the world we ought to try to encourage production of now, they are agricultural products and the products of the mines. Every day we see that the money in the Treasury of the United States, the gold held for the redemption of our circulating medium, is decreasing out of safe proportion, and under these circumstances why in the name of all that is good are we not paying some attention to increasing the development of the mines of the West?

This subject of the surveyors general of the States of the West is intimately associated with the mineral output and the agricultural output of the West. I am astonished that a policy in vogue is this country for a hundred years should now be sought to be abolished at this critical time in the history of our country, when we are trying to increase our production in the directions I have mentioned. I hope the House will vote to adopt the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. GRIGSBY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GRIGSBY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened with interest to the statements of the Representatives from the Western States calling to the attention of the committee the number of millions of acres of unsurveyed land that they have in their respective States, and I must say that everything that they have said applies with a great deal more force to the Territory of Alaska, where we have over 300,000,000 acres of unsurveyed lands, and the most important office we have in that Territory, the office that is of most assistance to the people as homesteaders or miners seeking patents, is the office of the surveyor general.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIGSBY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that if this provision is adopted it will not take a single bit of the machinery away from Alaska or one of these States, so far as the surveys are concerned?

Mr. GRIGSBY. I understand from the reading of the bill that the entire machinery and all the clerical force will be removed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. All the machinery for the surveys now provided will remain there as long as there is any seeming necessity for it.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIGSBY. Yes.

Mr. MAYS. Why should the gentleman from Indiana treat Alaska that way and not treat other States in that way? If there is surveying needed, why not leave the surveyors there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It will not change the surveying in a single State.

Mr. GRIGSBY. Is there any difference in that regard between Alaska and the States?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. The surveyor general shall remain the secretary of the Territory.

Mr. GRIGSBY. The provisions of the bill are that the entire clerical force shall be removed to Washington, and all the plats and records shall be removed from the offices.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GRIGSBY. I understand that the bill is mandatory in that respect. I did not hear that question raised before when any other gentleman was talking.

I have had an office across the hall from the surveyor general of Alaska for two years, and his is the busiest office conducted in Alaska.

We have over 500,000 square miles of unsurveyed land. The business is conducted with that office. Whenever a man wants to get a homestead, whenever he wants to get a patent for a mining claim, he has to do business with that office. Almost all the business we have to-day up there is done in connection with the bureaus down here in Washington, and we have to come down here enough as it is. Now, if I want to get a survey for a patent for a mining claim in Alaska, I have to employ a deputy mineral surveyor. They are scarcer than hen's teeth. I can find a surveyor or a civil engineer in Alaska, but he is not a deputy mineral surveyor. I can make an application to the surveyor general of Alaska and get him appointed, but under the terms of this bill I have got to come down here to Washington to have it done. He has to apply to the Commissioner of the Land Office, and the commissioner does not know him or his character or qualifications. The surveyor general in Alaska knows every surveyor in the Territory, and can pass on his qualifications. We can not do business in Alaska 6,000 miles away with a surveyor general's office conducted here in Washington, especially in the wintertime, when it takes from two to four months for the mail to make the round trip. We must have a surveyor general there on the ground [applause]; especially since the passage of the oil-leasing bill it is necessary that that office be maintained. What we want in Alaska is more government in Alaska and less in the bureaus in Washington. The forest reserves are already administered here, the fish and game are regulated here; everything is reserved from entry except mining and homestead land. If the office of the surveyor general is to be transferred to Washington, the governor of Alaska, the Federal judges, and court officials might as well be removed here, too, and there will no longer be any excuse for anybody living up there.

The surveyor general is ex officio secretary of the Territory of Alaska. This bill continues the salary of $4,000 for the secretary of Alaska, but does not create such an office nor provide for filling it. A surveyor general is appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; the bill contains no authority for the appointment of a secretary of the Territory. The surveyor general of Alaska is also a member of the Territorial canvassing board, which canvasses the returns of the elections for Delegate for Congress and the Territorial officers. If you abolish the office of surveyor general you will leave us without a canvassing board; possibly the committee thought that, inasmuch as Alaska elections are generally decided here in Congress, we do not need any [laughter]; but we do need a surveyor general, and need him on the ground. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska has expired.

Mr. GRIGSBY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for one minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH]. I oppose the provision striking out the positions of surveyors general. The State of Washington and the Territory of Alaska for a long time have been looked upon by Federal employees, including chiefs of bureaus and divisions here in the city of Washington, as desirable places to visit in the summer time. Do away with the State surveyors general but leave the clerks and field men, and you will find a continuous round of inspecting surveyors or traveling generals out there every summer to join the array of Federal map makers, geologists, investigators, and so forth, already on our hands. You propose to save at the spigot and waste at the bunghole.

Mr. GANDY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS].

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the first point I wish to make in this discussion is that these mineral surveys do not cost the Government of the United States any money. This seems to be a movement toward economy, but the surveys in our State have been paid for by miners, by the claim owners, and we have now to the credit of the office in the State of Utah over and above all expenses of that office the sum of $13,948. These people who have this surveying done, who pay the bills, who put up the money, want to have the office there, so that their records may be there, and they are very anxious that this legislation should not be enacted. I read a paragraph from a letter just received from the Utah Chapter of the American Mining Congress:

UTAH CHAPTER,
AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS,
Salt Lake City, Utah, February 21, 1920.

Hon. JAMES H. MAYS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MAYS: Since I wrote you this morning regarding the proposal to abolish the office of the surveyor general of Utah I have conferred with Mr. Thoresen, the surveyor general, and the conversation developed a fact that I overlooked in my telegram and previous letter to you.

It is that so far as the mineral work of this office is concerned in Utah it is more than self-sustaining, as the mineral-survey work is all paid for by claim owners. Mr. Thoresen advises me that there is a surplus balance of $13,948 to the credit of the Salt Lake office at Washington to-day, this amount representing the profit of the Government from the mineral work in Utah after all expenses have been deducted. I also understand that several substantial balances, earned previously, have been absorbed into the National Treasury in former years.

I have not gone into the agricultural side of the question, as we do not assume to speak for the agricultural interests, and, as I understand it, agricultural surveys are made without cost to agricultural claimants. This is not the case with the mineral work, however, all of which is paid for by those who have the work done, and, as I have indicated, this activity shows an operating profit for the Government.

It seems to me that this is an additional and a potent argument, aside from the public necessity, for the continuance of this office here.

We sincerely trust you will succeed in retaining the office here.

Yours, very truly,

A. G. MACKENZIE, Secretary.

It has been stated here that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has recommended this change in the law. I do not believe that the Commissioner of the General Land Office intended to make any such recommendation. I want to read just a paragraph or two from the hearings on that particular point. In starting out on the subject of the surveyor general's office the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], chairman of the subcommittee, questioned the Commissioner of the General Land Office as follows:

OFFICES OF SURVEYORS GENERAL.

SALARIES, CONTINGENT EXPENSES, ETC.

Mr. WOOD. We will now take up the item, "Surveyors general." The appropriation you are asking under the first item, "For salaries of surveyors general, clerks in their offices, and contingent expenses," is $11,220, as compared with $11,100 last year. What is this additional $120 for?

Mr. TALLMAN. The work in the offices of surveyors general varies in the different offices from time to time, and under the system of making these appropriations there are three times as many appropriation items as there are offices, and we have to adjust these appropriations to meet the number of employees and the salaries in each office from year to year. The total appropriation for the 13 offices of surveyors general is $39,000 for their salaries, $171,340 for their clerical assistance, and $11,125 for their contingent expenses, amounting in all to $221,465. To meet the necessities of the work we have readjusted some of those individual items of appropriation, the result of the whole of which, however, is $2,405 less than the total for last year.

Mr. WOOD. How does the $120 increase figure in that readjustment, Mr. Tallman?

Mr. TALLMAN. The first is Alaska——

Mr. WOOD (interposing). I do not mean how it is distributed among them. It is not only a readjustment, but you are increasing some place in order to take up this $120. For what purpose is the $120?

Mr. TALLMAN. In some cases we desire to promote some clerks a small amount, in other cases where the work has increased we desire to put on an extra clerk, in other cases the work has decreased and we can take off a clerk.

After pursuing an item of $120 to its source and indicating a most penurious disposition toward the West, the gentleman from Indiana put to Mr. Tallman the question—

Can not you abolish these surveyors general and transfer these clerks here?

He replied—

Yes; that could be done.

This colloquy occurs in the hearings:

Mr. WOOD. How about the Montana office?

Mr. TALLMAN. Montana is a very large and very active public-land State. It is not advisable to consolidate offices of surveyors general. If there is any consolidation to be done they should be all consolidated and the work transferred to the Washington office.

Mr. WOOD. That would not hurt; all of these offices could be abolished without material detriment?

Mr. TALLMAN. Of course, I do not belittle that work. They are doing important work, but the organization is not altogether in harmony with the development of the field organization and the office organization.

Of course a man is willing to augment his own importance. He is willing to have more clerks under him here. He is willing to take this responsibility, and they are now proposing to transfer these offices from all these States.

We have in Utah 20,000,000 acres of unsurveyed land, and I want to read just one little paragraph from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which was in the hands of this committee when they put this provision into the bill and to which they gave no heed.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Did the gentleman say 20,000,000 acres of unsurveyed land in the United States?

Mr. MAYS. I said 20,000,000 acres of unsurveyed land in the State of Utah. The Commissioner of the General Land Office in his annual report says, with reference to the State of Utah—

In his annual report of operations in his district the surveyor general states that although the 20,000,000 acres of unsurveyed land in this State have been considered in the past unfit for agricultural purposes, much of it is now conceded to be adapted for dry farming and grazing purposes, and the present estimate is that more than one-half of the above amount can thus be used, and it is now being sought for by returned soldiers and sailors and other young men brought up on Utah farms. He is of the opinion that no work of more importance could be performed by the Government than having these lands surveyed as early as possible, so that this land would be brought under cultivation and made productive, and these citizens be thus engaged in useful pursuits and making permanent homes. As no entry can now be made prior to survey, the citizen hesitates to go upon and improve the public lands before making entry.

I read also a telegram from the Utah Chapter of the American Mining Congress and a telegram from the surveyor general:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, February 20, 1920.

Hon. JAMES H. MAYS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Discontinuance of surveyors general office here and transfer of records would be a calamity to us, and we hope the proposal can be defeated. Official surveys of all mineral lands of the State are kept in that office, and without these records deputy mineral surveyors would have no data available on which to base their surveys of claims and nobody to check and approve their work. Functions of this office must be discharged somewhere and can not be done elsewhere with same efficiency and convenience as here. We are unable to understand why it is proposed to remove this office and these records from the place where they are used. As many as a hundred persons consult these records in a single day, and there are more than 6,000 surveys on file in this office. About 45 are filed monthly now. The coming season promises to bring more work into this office than for years past on account of improvement in metals, especially silver and lead. If it be found impossible to prevent removal, can you get in a provision requiring duplicates of these records to be filed with some Government or State officer here and kept up to date, so that our people may have access to them? It is unthinkable to require reference or a trip to another place as a preliminary to every mineral survey.

UTAH CHAPTER AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, February 26, 1920.

Congressman JAMES H. MAYS,
Washington, D. C.:

Mineral division office self-supporting, with credit balance of $13,000 at the agricultural division, through sales of surveyed lands. Net income over $100,000 annually. Proof mailed Tuesday.

THORESEN.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment restoring the office of surveyor general offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], for the reason that I feel that the provision inserted in the bill by the committee abolishing this local office violates one of the cardinal principles of a democratic or a republican form of government, in that it takes the actual Government and the actual administration of the Government far away from the local people who are supposed to be benefited by its administration and execution.

Gentlemen talk about the economy of this change, a doubtful saving of less than $50,000 per annum, to be made at the expense of the West, at the expense of expeditous administration. We are not even assured of this saving; it is a doubtful matter. By a change in our policy of administering and executing the mineral land laws this Government is going to receive from now on $1,000,000 a year more than it has received in the past through the provisions of the mineral leasing law that we have just passed, the oil leasing, the coal leasing, and the phosphates law signed by the President Wednesday. We are going to get $1,000,000 more into the Treasury each year from this source. Now, that law is going to entail from year to year more surveying. Those interested in that legislation and interested in the West should not be compelled to seek in Washington those who have charge of the administration of this law and the surveying of those lands.

What are the duties of the surveyor general? The surveyors are sent out by the surveyor general into the field during the summer. After the surveys are made the surveyors repair to the State capital, or wherever the local office is, where the map makers are. The map maker and the surveyor check up their maps and their field notes at the office in the State capital. If a mistake or ambiguity is discovered it can be corrected or cleared up at once; but if a mistake is discovered here in Washington it will not be corrected until the next year or the year after that, or whenever the local surveyor can be located. Under the present system if they find in the field notes a mistake in running a line the surveyor general immediately sends a surveyor back to the field to check up his lines, or to tie them up. It is impossible to go over this matter in the five minutes allotted me, but what is the situation in my State? We have in Oregon over 7,000,000 acres of unsurveyed land. How does that 7,000,000 acres compare with the area of some of the Eastern States? That 7,000,000 acres would make more than two States of the size of Connecticut. It would make seven States of the size of Delaware. It would make a larger State than Maryland, much larger than Massachusetts, much larger than New Hampshire, nearly 3,000,000 acres larger than New Jersey, more than ten times the size of Rhode Island, much larger than the State of Vermont. We should have an officer like the surveyor general in the State, as we have had for years, to order and superintend these surveys.

The embarrassment of this proposed change in the law is that the settler upon these lands seeking to have his lines run out would have to wait for the survey ordered from Washington. He would be compelled to seek relief 3,000 miles from the State, seeking it here in Washington. Possibly a surveyor and a map maker would be sent from Washington to the State of Oregon and then return here to check up the work here in Washington, whereas in the winter following the survey, where the office work is done locally, the entire matter can be straightened out at that time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I have but five minutes and the time is too short. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in seeking for economy, as they are trying to with this item in this bill, they have gone on the principle of "see a head and hit it," regardless of the effect on the 12 States involved and Alaska. They have reached out into the dark and surely have not given this matter due consideration from the western standpoint, from the standpoint of the people who are really looking for relief against the already too greatly overburdened and overhead Government that we have in Washington at the present time. I sincerely hope that every Member having the interest of the West and Alaska at heart will vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho. [Applause.]

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, owing to the oil land, oil shale, coal, and gas there are hundreds of inquiries relating to this new legislation, known as the oil-land leasing bill. It is my hope that the surveyor general's offices will be continued as at present. Surely you will grant this small recognition to many really great Commonwealths whose honesty of purpose can not be questioned, who, knowing their own needs more than you can learn by letters, respectfully request that they be granted your trust and confidence in a vital form of handling these lands. Their whole life work is reclaiming arid lands, enduring extreme hardships, deprived of the many living comforts found here. It seems to them wrong to take away and center in Washington, directed by a bureau, the land records, but the greater point at issue is having those records at home. If located here, will require thousands of telegrams and tens of thousands of letters, requiring at least 30 days for reply, thus delaying business connected with lands. Imagine the expense of residents of Nevada, necessitating a continuous stream of our citizens to Washington upon land affairs. We are already overburdened with expense; we must have your confidence to leave the land records at home of easy access. We can not endure this additional load. This is not a question of retaining an officer within our State, but aiding the man whose hardships are already too great. You all realize what "at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior" means. It means concentration of those affairs in Washington. It means increasing appropriations every year. It means increasing Government bureaus. It means added expense, additional hardship, and delay to the pioneer, who deserves your consideration. [Applause.]

As it is, our State of Nevada is 89 per cent Government owned; there are more than 100,000 square miles of Government-owned lands. It vitally affects our State; in fact, more than it affects any other State in the Union. I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen speaking on the bill may have unanimous consent to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen speaking on the bill may have unanimous consent to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE. Reserving the right to object, if it is confined to this section of the bill or to the amendment I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, there is no Member on the floor of the House who is more interested in the economy program that am I. It seems to me that at this time we are approaching a false economy program. Take my own State of Washington; we have in the public domain more than 8,000,000 acres of land, an area larger than the State of Connecticut and Delaware combined, an area larger than Massachusetts and Delaware combined. We have an area something like half the size of the State of Ohio or half the size of the State of Indiana.

Can anyone believe that it is going to be more economical or more satisfactory to do all the necessary work to be attended to by an office 3,000 miles away rather than that the surveyor general's office should remain in that State where prompt attention can be given to all necessary surveys?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Suppose it is demonstrated that none of the surveying instrumentalities and activities will be removed, but all of that will be kept there until there is no further use for it; would the gentleman then think it necessary to keep the surveyor general?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The bill definitely provides for all these things. The instruments, documents, and all furniture shall be transferred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in this city.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. At the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior; but we have the word of the Secretary of the Interior that all the instrumentalities, so far as the surveys and records are concerned, will be kept there, so I can not conceive that anybody is going to be hurt.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It seems to me that centralizing of these forces 3,000 miles from the necessary field of action is not wise. If there is anybody that needs encouragement it is the poor homesteader endeavoring to make a home out of what has been left after 100 years of culling. He has not the time nor the money to put in in making investigations or waiting for the reports from the East. It would be similar to the situation that we have had in the War Risk Bureau, where there is great congestion and delay in reference to small problems.

The chairman contends that field men and all necessary records will be left in each public-land State; but let me read the bill:

SURVEYORS GENERAL.

After June 30, 1920, the offices of surveyors general in the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and the Territory of Alaska are discontinued, and the several surveyors general shall, on or before that date, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, deliver into the custody of the Commissioner of the General Land Office all field notes, maps, records, and other papers, and all furniture and equipment of their respective offices; and the commissioner is authorized, whenever the surveys and records of any surveying district are completed, to dispose of such field notes and plats of survey as are duplicates of records in his office in accordance with sections 2218 and 2221 of the Revised Statutes, and from and after June 30, 1920, the authority, powers, and duties in relation to the survey, resurvey, or subdivision of lands and all matters and things connected therewith, heretofore vested in and exercised by the several surveyors general, including the use in his office of deposits by individuals for office work, the like use of funds arising under the acts of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., p. 937), and June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 834), and the employment of personal services thereunder and for office work on Indian surveys, shall be vested in, and devolve upon, the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, That so much of the clerical force in the offices of surveyors general as may be needed and such records as may be necessary may be transferred to the General Land Office in Washington, and the Joint Committee to Assign Space in Public Buildings shall provide the necessary additional space in the Interior Department Building.

For per diem in lieu of subsistence, salaries, freight and expressage on records, instruments and equipment shipped from the several offices, and the purchase of additional stationery, supplies, and equipment required in the General Land Office by reason of such transfer, $175,000, including $4,000 for salary of the secretary of the Territory of Alaska.

Here I find that after June 30, 1920, the surveyor general's office of my State of Washington "is discontinued," and that on or before that date he "shall deliver into the custody of the Commissioner of the General Land Office all field notes, all maps, all records and other papers, and all furniture and equipment" of his office.

Under this language there can be no mistake as to the meaning and the intent of this provision. It abolishes the office of surveyor general, the field men, and all of the records so far as my State is concerned. It either discharges the men or it transfers them, bag and baggage, down to the city of Washington to become cogs in a great machine which is bound down with red tape, and which moves too slowly for the purposes and the convenience of my constituents.

There is a possible saving, on the face of the committee report, of $48,000, but we know that frequently these presumed economies do not come out as they have been figured in advance, and it is very probable that instead of being an economy this will be an additional expense, with the additional delays and annoyances and all those things incident to having much of the work done and the records stored 3,000 miles from the locality where the lands are situated and the records are most needed.

I sincerely hope that every Member on the floor of the House, not only those from the States of the West but from all the States, will support the amendment that has been offered to this bill by the gentleman from Idaho. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is little use, in the first instance, of this amendment. Section 2218, United States Revised Statutes, directs the Secretary of the Interior to complete the surveys as rapidly as they can be completed, and section 2219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States directs that when the surveys are completed on the unsurveyed lands in the several States all records, maps, and plats are to be turned over to the several States, and then the Commissioner of the General Land Office is given full power to administer and continue the law as to the surveys, and so forth, that the surveyor general now has.

Section 2221 provides that the State must first provide by proper legislation proper archives for the protection of the records.

So that if there was any necessity now for transferring these offices, if there was no work to be done at the present time, the Secretary of the Interior, under direct mandate of the law, would now direct the records to be transferred. Not having done so, it shows clearly that it ought not to be done. There are large tracts of unsurveyed public land in all these States running into the millions of acres in each State. In addition to doing the general work of surveying for the Government, everyone knows that the office of the surveyor general performs the additional function of making surveys, so that conflicting claims in respect to title can be settled. This proposition is to take the officer from the State and transfer him to Washington. To perform those duties some one would have to be sent from Washington at a very great traveling expense and at an annual salary unquestionably as large as the present salary of the surveyor general. In addition to that, it would cause considerable delay and a great deal of inconvenience and there would be no saving to the Government. The surveyor general keeps in close touch with the situation in the various States. In addition to the survey, he goes over it upon the ground to see that the records are properly made, that the returns are in proper form, so that the records may be as nearly correct as records of that kind can be. Instead of a man going right from the local office in the State, under this provision he is to be sent from the General Land Office at Washington, as I say, with a salary as large, if not larger, than the present surveyor general receives, and in addition to that at a large, enormous traveling expense. So that there is no economy in the amount of work to be done. There is enough work in all these public-land States, and there has not been a word to show to the contrary.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LONGWORTH). The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am of course delighted that there is no opposition apparent to the amendment, but if there is any opposition I think gentlemen in control of the time ought to yield to those who are opposed to the amendment instead of letting the time accumulate.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I was about to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], but he does not seem to be present.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I think he concluded that the amendment is a proper one.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. WELLING].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt there to ask if the gentleman has anyone who is opposed to the amendment?

Mr. SISSON. No one has asked me for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, something was said in the early stages of this debate with reference to the elimination of these surveyors general offices because their functions had all been performed as in the older States. It must be borne in mind that in almost all of these Western States there is a great deal of unsurveyed land. In the State of Utah we have nineteen and one-half million acres of such land. Obviously it would be the poorest policy in the world to remove the agency for surveying that great quantity of land from the very locality where the land lies and bring it 3,000 miles away and establish a bureau here in Washington to transact that business. What is true of the State of Utah in connection with this matter is true of every other Western State. As a matter of fact, the survey of the public lands of those States is only fairly well begun, and it would be very poor policy when it comes to a question of economy to concentrate all of that work here in Washington, 3,000 miles away from the seat of activity.

I assert now that the Department of the Interior did not recommend the change. The individuals there who have had supervision and control of this matter did not recommend it. They expected that the offices would be continued as they had been in the past. It was upon the initiative of the Committee on Appropriations, a committee that confessedly knows absolutely nothing about the business in the office of surveyors general, that this is sought to be done. The members of the subcommittee have none of these offices in their particular States, but if they had wanted to obtain advice from some one on the Committee on Appropriations who did know something about the unsurveyed public lands they might have had that advice from the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations. Apparently he was not called in or consulted with reference to the change that was made. Yet, going against the recommendations of the department, these gentlemen of the subcommittee have felt that in the interest of false economy an obligation rests upon them of coming here and asking for the disruption of this entire organization for the surveying of the public domain and the bringing of all its offices and officers and clerks here to Washington. In my judgment it violates every principle of democratic government, of distributing the functions of government among the people of the country. It closes up offices that have been established by the Government at great expense in Federal buildings and brings them here and multiplies the expense of administration here in Washington, whereas those offices are not costing the Government of the United States in the buildings where they are now located anything to-day. I sincerely trust that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho will be adopted and that the committee's provisions will be defeated.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELLING. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman referred to nineteen and one-half million acres of public land in the State of Utah. Would he be good enough to tell us the character of that land in the main, whether it is tillable or otherwise?

Mr. WELLING. It is public land, and probably a great percentage of it will be redeemed. Put water upon it, as will be done in the future, and it is the best land in the world. There are thousands of acres of oil land and mineral and coal land included in this area.

In my State applications for the survey of approximately 3,000,000 acres are now pending, all requested by the State of Utah and private citizens.

Applications for the survey of from 40 to 60 townships have been made annually during recent years, and only 20 to 30 townships have been surveyed. There is a great accumulation of demands for surveys not complied with.

Besides the above agricultural surveys, there have been 6,600 mineral surveys, embracing approximately 35,000 mining claims, completed, and 20 such surveys, embracing 93 locations, are now pending in the Salt Lake office, with an average filing of 45 applications for such surveys per month.

Relative to these surveys and the methods by which they can be secured, there are from 25 to 50 personal inquiries made daily at the Salt Lake office, besides numerous written requests for similar information. The United States mineral surveyors are constantly compelled to consult this office relative to the initiation, execution, and completion of mineral surveys, and the same is true of the regular United States agricultural surveyors.

Therefore if this office work was to be transferred to Washington, it would incur very expensive hardships and long delays to both miners and agriculturalists, if it could be accomplished at all by correspondence with Washington. From experience it has been learned that many applicants for information are unable to define just what they require without extensive assistance from local officials. Hence it would be impossible for them to write to Washington for such information.

The delays in securing information, especially by surveyors in the field, would also be aggravating and expensive, as surveying crews would be prevented from proceeding with their work pending receipt of required information and instruction.

All surveys are made by instructions issued from the Salt Lake office, and during execution special detail instructions are often demanded and furnished the surveyors, which in many cases must be obtained before the work can proceed. If this information should be furnished from Washington it would cause much delay and expense in the execution of surveys. Agricultural surveyors are required to submit progress or advance returns of their work, which are checked in the local office and corrections or additions immediately ordered, if found necessary, while the surveying crews are on the ground. If these returns were to go to Washington, necessarily by mail, and such instructions returned to the men in the field, they would be miles away from the location in question; time would be lost and expense incurred in returning to complete the survey.

The applicants for surveys, especially mineral surveys, would be compelled to employ attorneys in Washington, through whom they could operate in securing necessary information, and so forth, regarding surveys required, which now is obtained by their personal application in the local office without expense.

I presume that it is not the intention of the committee to abandon entirely the making of surveys of the public domain, and therefore if the work should be continued in Utah with only a limited force of surveyors for agricultural lands, averaging for the past few years about six crews, they would necessarily have to maintain a supervisor of said field work and also a disbursing agent to pay their salaries and the expenses incurred by them, with necessary offices in Salt Lake City.

The extensive records and files in the Salt Lake office, both of agricultural and mineral surveys, from the beginning would necessarily have to be retained in some office there, and one or more qualified custodians would have to be maintained in charge of those records for the benefit of the public, and especially for the extensive mining industries of the State, as all basic information relative to titles of the vast amount of valuable real estate is confined, in many cases, exclusively in these records and files. The law provides that they shall be maintained there by the Interior Department until all the public lands of the State are surveyed and at such time deposited in the archives of the State.

Therefore, besides the salary and expenses of a disbursing agent, salaries of the custodians of the records and files would have to be paid by the department.

I feel certain that the experienced employees there, without exception, would rather leave the service than to be transferred to Washington; hence new and inexperienced persons would have to be employed to continue the work, under which circumstances the supervision and execution of the work would increase its cost far beyond the salary of the surveyor general that would thus be eliminated.

For these and numerous other reasons I deem it inadvisable and detrimental to the public welfare and more expensive to discontinue this work and transfer the same to Washington.

I am aware it is difficult to make our eastern representatives, whose lands have been surveyed long ago at the expense of the General Government and given them by merely residing thereon, to understand that the great West ought to receive equal rights, or any rights whatsoever; but it appears to me that they ought to know that money expended in the development of our national resources, even of the West, will redown to the general good of the entire country and, even beyond that, to the whole world. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make some remarks upon this bill, and I would like to have some gentlemen here aside from those who have been speaking on the other side, for I do not expect to be able to convince any of them. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If the gentleman wanted to be entirely fair, why did he not ask for that when we started in on this debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred Members present, a quorum.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in the time I shall occupy in discussing this measure I am going to try at least to bring some information to the committee in reference to the manner in which the business will be conducted if the proposed proviso in the bill is adopted. I wish to say at the onset that the history of the surveyor general discloses that he is purely a political creation, and for the first half century of the Government we did not have any surveyors general at all. Some time after the establishment of general land offices, and it was determined that some political places were needed, some patriot conceived the idea of creating this office.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Wait until I can finish this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In 1823.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it was before 1823. The surveyor general was created, as I say, purely as a political proposition, and he is yet a political reward, and, so far as the good of the service is concerned, he can be as easily dispensed with now as he was unnecessary at the time that he was created. Now, let us see the manner in which this work is conducted and see whether or not there is to be a saving of time, which is money, for, it is said, time that is saved is money earned. Now, let us see if we can save to the western people, those who are immediately interested, time or money or both. If the information which we have from the Department of the Interior is correct—and I do not think that anyone will say that the present Department of the Interior has any design or desire to undertake to cripple this work—as the plan now is if a survey is wanted the one desiring the survey has to first submit a plat to the surveyor general. The surveyor general, after a certain examination, takes and sends it to the city of Washington. Every one of these things have to come to the city of Washington for final approval. Now, if the surveyor general is wiped out there would be that time, at least, saved that the surveyors general has this plat or application under his examination and supervision before he sends it to Washington.

That is not all. If the operation as proposed by the Department of the Interior is correct, it will save time, because it will get immediate action at the time it is sent to the city of Washington and sent back to the one interested. Now, much has been said here about the great inconvenience that will result to the people of that country because of the fact that they will have to send to Washington to get a surveyor. The gentleman from Washington said——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; do not misquote me, but let me tell you what will happen: Just as it does in other great bureaus when they can, they will send specially favored men on a junket. See if it does not turn out that way.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman may be correct; but the information we have—and I think we have the right to rely upon it—we take and place responsible men at the head of these bureaus for the purpose of advising the Congress. Sometimes they may not give us the best possible advice, but I think it is the exception when they do not.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It certainly can not be said in my attempt of the abolishment of these offices that I have any partisan consideration in view, for the gentlemen asking for this thing to be done and who advise that it be done for the greater efficiency of the service are not of my political faith. So I can not be accused of that; but I do wish to submit to the Congress—to the Members upon that side as well as upon this side—that whenever we discover an opportunity to save money by the abolishment of useless offices, and especially when we do not interfere in any degree with the efficiency of the work that is to be performed, that it is the sworn duty of every man in this House to abolish such offices.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. MILLER. Who in the department has recommended the abolishment of these surveyors general?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman would just content himself for a moment I will take pleasure in advising him.

Mr. MILLER. I have read the hearings.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish I had time to read all of the memoranda I have received from Mr. Tallman, under whose supervision this work finally comes. I wish I had time to read all of it, especially that part which details the manner in which the work is done now and all the steps that have to be taken from start to finish before one of these surveys is finally completed. I will content myself, however, by reading the manner in which it will be done if this new scheme is adopted. He says:

As to the method by which this work would be handled in case of a transfer and consolidation of the work in the General Land Office at Washington, it may be stated first, that it will be necessary to maintain in each State, as at present, the field surveying organization with headquarters where necessary for the conduct of the work, presumably in the same offices, or a part thereof, now occupied by the surveyor general. The field surveyors, instead of submitting their field notes of surveys to the office of the surveyor general, would transmit same direct to Washington.

This shows that there will be a saving of time. It will save not only the time that is necessarily employed by the surveyor general in passing upon it, but it will save the additional time of passing upon whatever he may have to say concerning it by the General Land Office when the plat comes here.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. SINNOTT. Now, under this proposed change the field notes will be transmitted to Washington. Under the present system the field notes are sent to the State capitals and they are there taken up by the surveyor general.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Now, if the gentleman is going to ask a question——

Mr. SINNOTT. Now, just a moment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Ask the question.

Mr. SINNOTT. I am—and the map maker goes over the matter with the surveyor and if a mistake is found in the field notes it is corrected there at once without any delay, but under this system that the gentleman proposes the field notes are sent to Washington and if a mistake is found the surveyor general——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I absolutely refuse to yield further. The gentleman rose to ask a question and he has asked no question.

Mr. SINNOTT. The question will be on the end of my statement. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The trouble is there is no end to the statement.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not yield further.

Mr. SINNOTT. I want to make the interrogation point.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question? I want to get some light on it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that under the system that is now in vogue no survey can be made even by the direction of the surveyor general until after he has been instructed from Washington?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, instead of sending the application, then, through the surveyor general, there is a survey, if the committee recommendation is adopted, and people send the application direct to Washington, and an answer will go directly back, and save time and money perhaps?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct. I will read further from the statement of Mr. Tallman.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will not. I will read. Now, listen:

Instructions for surveys would likewise be prepared in the Washington office and sent to the field surveying organization direct—

Now, listen. There has been much talk here about the removal of the field notes. I want to put that forever at rest, showing again how time will be saved by eliminating the surveyors general:

There would be no necessity of moving the official field notes and plats now kept in offices of surveyors general from their present location. It will be desirable to keep them where they are for reference by the field surveying service, in which case they could also be made available to the public as they are now, and such files would very properly be kept up to date, with additions of transcripts of field notes and plats of future surveys. Mineral surveyors would be appointed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, instead of his approval of their appointment by the surveyor general, as now. Applications for mineral surveys would be made direct to the Washington office, and the order for the survey issued to the proper deputy, who, in turn, would make return of his survey direct to the Washington office.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. FRENCH. I want to call attention to the mineral surveys. When they are initiated they are not referred to the Washington office, but upon application and deposit of fee by the applicant the surveyor general directs the survey. Numerically they are greater than all other surveys.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That may be true. I will read further:

The instructions for surveys, instead of being prepared in the office of the surveyor general and submitted to Washington for approval, would be prepared and approved in Washington and sent out to the surveyor.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Do you understand from the commissioner's statement that a surveyor or engineer here in Washington, who knows nothing about local conditions, could prepare instructions and submit them to a surveyor out there as well as a surveyor in the surveyor general's office could?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The plat has to come here in the first instance, and the plat has to contain all the preliminaries, and a surveyor could do it here as well as at any other place. These gentlemen are desirous of keeping this one officer, who is just as useless as it is possible for a man to be useless and whose removal will not in the least cripple this work. I presume it has always been so. Kansas has had them, Nebraska has had them, and all of the Western States have had them, and yet they were finally removed, and I dare say there were gentlemen here contending, as gentlemen are contending to-day, for the absolute necessity of continuing them. And the time will never come when a Representative from one of these States will be here to advocate their abolishment.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I would like to ask the gentleman if the plat is sent here after the survey is made or before the survey is made?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. After the preliminary survey is made.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. The plat is the evidence of the survey?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The plat is the evidence of the preliminary survey that is now submitted to the surveyor general.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. There is no plat of preliminary survey. The surveyor takes his field notes after going over the field and makes his plat and sends it for approval to Washington.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The notes are originally taken and sent to the surveyor general and from him to Washington, and there can not be any action taken in any individual case until final approval is had by the General Land Office. The gentleman need not try to delude other Members, because they know that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is the last man to pass on it and give his approval to the proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is not all that red tape and rigmarole one of the reasons we are getting along so poorly in this matter, particularly in Alaska?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that is true. I believe that you can get along much faster by discharging than by keeping these useless officers.

I will read further:

In case of public-land township surveys, when the field notes and plats are found to be in satisfactory condition, they will be approved and accepted by the same operation, instead of being first approved by the surveyor general, then examined, and accepted by the General Land Office and the plats returned to the surveyor general.

The field surveying organization would have to maintain its own disbursing officers and financial clerks to keep their accounts, which would probably be concentrated in the one office of the supervisor of surveys at Denver.

Consolidation of the offices of surveyors general in one office would undoubtedly result in a saving of overhead expenses and also in the development of a single standard of efficiency for the entire force. The only disadvantage that occurs to me which might result from the proposed change would be the removal of the more localized source of information for the public, principally in the case of mineral surveys within the State, and, as above stated, it is thought that the matter can be handled in such a way as to obviate, if not eliminate, this disadvantage. It will be noted that the existing law and also a provision of the pending legislative bill provides that the official field notes and plats of the offices of surveyors general shall be turned over to the States when the surveying work in such States is completed. This has already been done in the older public-land States.

It is under a law that is now established, so that the train of box cars which the gentleman says would be necessary to take and remove the records of these offices would never be called into use, because those records never would be removed. The only purpose of this proviso is to eliminate this useless office of surveyor general; just as useless, if you please, as the Subtreasuries of the United States were, and we removed them.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Under this bill the records are to be transferred to the custody of the Commissioner of the General Land Office here in Washington, and pending that and before they are turned over to the States how are you to get a certified copy of these records if they are out in the State of California? He has to send a deputy out there to do that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. That is a mere small matter of detail. There will be no trouble in regulating that.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. If they are never to be transferred to Washington, why is this appropriation of $175,000 proposed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It would be because the clerical force, being under the supervision of the surveyor general, would be under the supervision of the department here in Washington. We are appropriating $172,000 now to pay for this clerical force. That money is now disbursed by the surveyor general. The only difference would be that it would be disbursed by the home office if this new proposal is adopted.

Mr. MAYS. Is the gentleman informed whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office has spare office space for all these clerks?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There would be no occasion for any great amount of office space. These clerks very largely, as I have tried to impress upon you gentlemen, will remain where they are, doing the work that you say is essential for them to do, and we would save the time now uselessly wasted in sifting the thing through the surveyor general.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that it is not proposed to transfer the clerks from their present local offices to Washington?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Only such clerks as may be necessary to carry out the administrative part of it at this end instead of at that end.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman propose to keep the clerks still there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. All the force necessary to complete the surveys, as is now done.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it part of the gentleman's plan to divide this force and still have a force, but without a head, in all these localities, and then transfer part of them here? Is that the plan?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is not the plan, and nobody has said that it is the plan to divide the force.

Mr. MONDELL. Has not the gentleman stated that it is the intention to retain some of the clerks there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have repeatedly said—and I hope the gentleman will not misunderstand me—that, so far as the working of the service under this plan is concerned, it will not be crippled in the least.

Mr. MONDELL. I was not raising the question whether it would cripple the work or not, but I was trying to get an idea as to the modus operandi. I supposed the gentleman was proposing the closing of the surveyors general offices and transferring all the work to Washington. Now I get the idea from the gentleman that what he proposes to do is to send a certain number of clerks here, and to retain a certain number without any head in the field. I was wondering how that could be done.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The way it is now, as Mr. Tallman said in his testimony before the committee, which I included in my general remarks upon this bill, is that they are all officers and no privates. That is the trouble about the business. There is not that cooperation that is requisite to efficiency, and because of that condition, in the opinion of the Department of the Interior, the work can be better directed from this central office, and we therefore propose this change.

I wish to state, further, that your committee, in order that we might know if this work could not be best done by consolidating some of these offices in the West, so as to dispense with some of them, made inquiry, and Mr. Tallman said that would not cure the evil at all, but that when one was abolished they ought all to be abolished, so that they would all be under one central control, and that should be in the parent office here in Washington.

Mr. RAKER. As I understand the gentleman, the records and the office force and all would remain in their present location. Is that correct? I understood from the gentleman's statement, quoting the commissioner, that the force as it now exists, together with the plats and records, will remain where it is in the various States, for the convenience of the people and for the efficiency of the work. Is not that correct?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. But the commissioner does add this, that he will have a man in charge to take care of them?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely.

Mr. RAKER. That being the case, I want to be frank with the gentleman and ask him this question: While the man in charge will not be called "the surveyor general," yet he will cost more than the surveyor general costs now and not give as good results, will he not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; he will not, because the work now for the most part is purely supervisory, and it will be none the less supervisory then. We are trying to get rid of a useless officer, not that anyone is trying to cripple this work out there. It was certainly not the intention of the Department of the Interior to cripple it. They have advised us that the work will be more efficiently done and result in the saving of time and in the saving of some expense to the very men who are most interested in it.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman explain this: As I understand, the chairman says there will be field notes and records left there for the convenience of the people of the States. Is that right?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Then it says here that all field notes, all maps and records, and all other papers and all furniture and equipment of the respective offices shall come to the General Land Office.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is in the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I fail to find that. I find that "so much of the clerical force in the offices of the surveyors general as may be needed and such records as may be necessary shall be transferred to the General Land Office at Washington." It does not say anything about leaving any behind. I can not quite understand that word "all."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This whole business, as I take it, will have to be left in the discretion of the General Land Office, which is primarily interested in this work and of necessity must be charged with its responsibility. Now, I have no interest in the western land offices. I dare say if there was one in Indiana I would be here, like these other gentlemen are here, trying to point out some reason why it should be retained. That is inseparable from human nature, and, as I said before, the time will never come when there is a single individual who will be willing to admit that his land office or surveyor general should be abolished.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. If one-third of the State of Indiana was still unsurveyed, as one-third of my State is, and one-third of other States unsurveyed, the gentleman ought to be opposed to its abolishment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As against that proposition I submit the statement coming from a source that is absolutely disinterested and impartial, from an official who, if he had any leaning at all, would have a leaning toward the work being done out there; but he tells us that the work you are talking about, the surveying of the land, can be more expeditiously done and more economically done, resulting in the saving of time and expense, under direction from the home office rather than by local supervision.

I would not be here advocating the abolition of these offices if I was not convinced that the Department of the Interior, which is charged with this responsibility, knows what it is talking about. I do not believe that department would advise the Congress or any committee of Congress to do either a foolish thing or an unreasonable thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Has all time on this side expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There were three minutes yielded back, and I have not used that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Indiana was given credit for the three minutes. The gentleman from Mississippi has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. SISSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to talk on this subject, and I certainly do not desire to discourage the intention of the committee to economize. If I thought there was the slightest possibility of economizing under this legislation I would welcome it and vote for it; but in my opinion it would increase the cost and delay the execution of the surveys in a way that would be very harmful.

Our first surveyor general was appointed in 1823 for Florida, and since that time every public-land State, one after the other, has had its surveyor general, who has served until the surveys were completed, until the land was settled, and then the office was closed and abolished. It was so in Kansas, in Nebraska, and in Iowa, and so eventually it will be in all of the States. But until recently nobody has had the idea that you could properly dispense with the office that has to do with the surveys until the surveys were executed. What is the modus operandi? The surveyor general sends surveying parties into the field. They execute their surveys, and in the fall they bring their field notes into the office of the surveyor general, where they are written up and where the plats are made. At the time the plats are being made by the skilled drafting mapmakers of the surveyor general's office, the man who made the survey is frequently there to answer any questions that may arise as to any obscure matter in the field notes. After the plat is made, if there is anything faulty requiring a return to the field, they are within a day's travel or mail dispatch of the man who did the surveying, and he can return to the field and make the correction. Now, imagine that instead of having that facility everything had to await the sending of the field notes to Washington and the return to the field every time there was any correction under or any uncertainty or obscurity in the field notes, the distance to be covered being 1,500 or 2,500 miles each way, when it was found that a return to the field was necessary.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes, and I have quite a bit to say. More than that, these trained draftsmen out in the States are getting an average of $1,600 a year. The same class of skilled employees here are paid $2,000 or more, and quite likely these same people by promotion would be paid that within a year after they arrived at Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Or else they would not stay here.

Mr. MONDELL. Being scattered out through the States, their salaries are lower than they are here, because there is nobody constantly urging an increase.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. In answering a question which I propounded to the chairman of the committee he said—I think he is in error—that the map was made before the survey was made. Will the gentleman tell us about that?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman did not intend to say that. There is no map until the surveyor, at the order of the surveyor general, has gone into the field and made the survey and come back with his notes indicating directions, distances, and topography. From those notes the men and women skilled in transferring to the plats the information contained in the field notes do the work in the surveyor general's office, and the office here has little to do except the largely formal function of approving after it is all completed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 79, noes 39.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. WOOD of Indiana and Mr. FRENCH to act as tellers.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. I want to know whether this is pork or economy. I notice the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is voting for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 50.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE. A request was made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] that all gentlemen who spoke upon the amendment should have the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD. I notice the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] butted in. Will he have the right to extend his remarks? That is what I want to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not advised as to the parliamentary definition of the phrase "butted in" and is, therefore, unable to answer the gentleman's question. The gentleman from Texas was recognized by the Chair to speak upon the amendment, and the Chair assumes that he would have the right to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Was permission given in response to that request?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at that time and he is unable to answer that question.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It has been held time and again that the committee has no power to give such permission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has not the power to give such consent as the Chair is informed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] it did give, but the present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the Chair the parliamentary situation was this: The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] submitted a request for unanimous consent that all members of the committee who spoke upon the pending amendment should have the privilege to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SISSON. Confined to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair would have held that that request was not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No objection was made on that ground.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not present at the time.

Mr. BURKE. But the Chair was present when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] interrupted the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to relieve the situation I will state to the gentleman that I have no intention of extending any remarks in the RECORD. That will relieve the gentleman's mind.

Mr. BURKE. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence, salaries, freight and expressage on records, instruments and equipment shipped from the several offices, and the purchase of additional stationery, supplies, and equipment required in the General Land Office by reason of such transfer, $175,000, including $4,000 for salary of the secretary of the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the paragraph is not authorized by law and therefore——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled on the main proposition and overruled the point of order, and the Chair for the same reason will overrule this point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph because clearly it provides for the transfer——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, page 114, all of line 19 up to and including line 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 114, line 19, strike out all of lines 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, inclusive.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES.

Territory of Alaska: Governor, $7,000; four judges, at $7,500 each; four attorneys, at $5,000 each; four marshals, at $4,000 each; four clerks, at $3,500 each; in all, $87,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of line 5 the sum of "$87,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, line 5, strike out the figures "$87,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, much has been said here about retrenchment and economy. I do not know what is in the mind of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE], who seems to be much afraid that I may say something on railroads or extend my remarks in the RECORD. If he is present, he is going to hear something from me——

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I am in favor of economy and striking out these big amounts of money. Mr. Chairman, am I recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask the Chair kindly not to take this interruption out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania make the point of order?

Mr. BURKE. That the gentleman is not speaking to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I think I know the rule, and I will confine myself to the rule. The Chair will not take this from my time. I am seeking to strike out these unnecessary sums of money from this bill. Now, in this bill are unnecessary sums. I want to ask the chairman of this committee if he knows exactly how many messengers he is providing for in this bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say offhand I can not tell.

Mr. BLANTON. Approximately, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The report will disclose exactly.

Mr. BLANTON. I can tell the chairman exactly how many are provided for. You provide for 1,076 messengers, and I can tell you exactly how many watchmen are provided for, and I am sure the gentleman does not know that. He is providing for 515 watchmen, and this does not include the guards, of whom there are several hundred provided for in this bill. Now, on the Agricultural bill the other day, that distinguished committee of economy provided for 754 messengers for the Department of Agriculture, and they provided for 76 watchmen for the Secretary's office, so stipulated in the bill, and now this great committee of economy goes them one better and runs its number up to 1,076 messengers. That is why all of this so-called economy of theirs is "lip economy," as I have said before. That is why, when it comes to appropriating an additional $35,000 in one item for feeding the elk out in Wyoming, you find the distinguished gentleman, the leader of the other side of the House, takes the floor and brings his fellows in here to keep that money in there, because it is spent in Wyoming, and that is why, even after the gentleman from Wyoming went to this committee and, insisting on economy, told them that he would stand by them, as stated by Mr. SISSON, and when the committee, acting on his advice and suggestion, attempts to cut out of this bill unnecessary offices and asks that the promise of the gentleman from Wyoming that he would stand by them be carried out you find the gentleman from Wyoming taking the floor and defeating the committee's action, under rather peculiar circumstances it is true, because I happened to be over here when he came to the chairman of the committee, and he said, "Mr. Chairman, I want some time"; and the chairman said, "You will not get any time here to speak against the bill"; and he had to go to the other side of the House to get it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished ex-United States Senator from Illinois ought to know that even in the other end of the Capitol there is at least some latitude allowed in debate.

Mr. MASON. I ask a ruling by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Texas will confine himself to the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I will now get back to it. I moved to strike out the sum of $87,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that that is an appropriation for the Territory of Alaska. The gentleman will confine himself to Alaska.

Mr. BLANTON. May I not enlarge upon the subject of economy—striking out money from this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. If any gentleman makes the point of order, the Chair is bound to sustain it, because the gentleman is not discussing the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the precedent established in this House some years ago when a very distinguished gentleman moved to strike out the last word, which happened to be "dollar," from an appropriation bill. The precedent was then established that upon the motion to strike out the last word, which was "dollar," even made as a pro forma motion, the Chair held that he could discuss the subject of an American dollar and everything that it embraced. I moved here, if the distinguished Chairman will recollect, to strike out the sum of $87,000 from this bill. In the latitude that is usually allowed in debate—that is, which used to be allowed—when the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] was a Member of the United States Senate, I ought to be permitted to show why it is necessary to strike such sum of money from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The paragraph to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] makes the point of order is a paragraph providing for the salaries of the governor, judges, and attorneys in Alaska. The gentleman is discussing the messenger service in Washington. The Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois, and informs the gentleman from Texas that his time has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve my further remarks until the subject of messengers is reached.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 115, line 2, to insert a semicolon after the figures "$7,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Page 115, line 2, after the figures "$7,000" insert a semicolon.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the correction. The Chair overlooked putting the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it. It was a pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, clerk hire, not to exceed $2,500; janitor service for the governor's offices and the executive mansion, not to exceed $1,200; traveling expenses of the governor while absent from the capital on official business; repair and preservation of executive mansion and furniture and for care of grounds, stationery, lights, water, and fuel, in all, $7,500, to be expended under the direction of the governor.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question. What is the salary of the members of the legislature in Alaska?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The salary of the members of the legislature are paid out of the Territorial treasury, and they are paid a per diem, I think, of $15.

Mr. McARTHUR. How much mileage?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That comes later. The salaries of members amount to $21,600; and the mileage is $9,250.

Mr. McARTHUR. That is in here; but what I wanted to get at was the per diem.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is $15 per day, and the traveling expense is 15 cents a mile, I think.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Office, Postmaster General: Postmaster General, $12,000; chief clerk, including $500 as superintendent of buildings, $4,000; private secretary, $2,500; disbursing clerk, $2,250; appointment clerk, assistant to chief clerk, confidential clerk to Postmaster General, and chairman, board of inspection, at $2,000 each; chief inspector, $4,000; chief clerk to chief inspector, $2,000; purchasing agent, $4,000; chief clerk to purchasing agent, $2,000; assistant attorneys—1 $3,500, 2 at $2,750 each, 1 $2,500, 1 $2,000; bond examiner, $2,500; law clerk, $1,800; clerks—116 of class 4, 170 of class 3, 268 of class 2, 297 of class 1, 138 at $1,000 each, 26 at $900 each; skilled draftsmen—1 $2,000, 3 at $1,800 each, 8 at $1,600 each, 5 at $1,400 each, 7 at $1,200 each; map mounter, $1,200; assistant map mounter, $1,000; blue printer, $900; assistant blue printer, $840; telegrapher, $1,400; typewriter repairer, $1,200; 3 telephone switchboard operators; 6 messengers in charge of mails, at $900 each; 30 messengers; 20 assistant messengers; captain of the watch, $1,200; additional to 3 watchmen acting as lieutenants of watchmen, at $120 each; 34 watchmen; 2 engineers, at $1,200 each; 9 assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; 2 blacksmiths or steam fitters, at $1,000 each; 3 oilers, at $840 each; 16 firemen; 20 elevator conductors, at $720 each; chief engineer, $1,600; assistant electricians—2 at $1,200 each, 3 at $1,000 each; 2 dynamo tenders, at $900 each; carpenters—1 $1,600, 1 $1,200, 2 at $1,000 each; plasterer and mason, $1,200; awning maker, $1,000; painters—1 $1,200, 1 $1,000; plumbers—1 $1,200, 1 $1,000; laborers—foreman $900, assistant foreman $840, 2 at $840 each, 78 at $720 each, 4 at $660 each; female laborers—1 $540, 3 at $500 each, 7 at $480 each; 58 charwomen; actual and necessary expenses of the purchasing agent while traveling on business of the department, $500; in all, $1,691,770.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, economy, after all, means self-denial. Nobody can economize in private life without denying himself something that he might want if he did not have to economize. Retrenchment means, after all, cutting off and drawing in and cutting down expenses. Every time we attempt to cut off an appropriation in this House we are going up against the will and the wish of some one. We might as well make up our minds to that. We are going directly against the will and wish of somebody. There is somebody who does not want us to do it. We can not retrench here unless we make somebody mad. We can not cut off these big expenditures unless we will go up against some of our best friends in this House.

Every time an attempt is made to economize here the word is passed around, "This colleague of ours wants this; he is a good fellow; let us help him out; we must not go against him"; or "The West wants this done, and we must help them out"; and the word passes around, and enough fellows will be brought in to stand up by him, because he is our colleague. Every time we vote to cut down an appropriation we are voting against somebody's pet scheme to spend money in a district.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia, because I know he believes in economy.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] informed us that the members of the Legislature of Alaska——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I can not yield for that. I thought the gentleman was going to talk about economy. I am on the live subject of economy now. I want to say that 1,076 messengers, contained in this bill, are entirely too many messengers. You know that as well as I do. I want to say that 515 watchmen in this bill are entirely too many watchmen, and you know that, too, as well as I do.

Take the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the distinguished leader of the majority party. Do you not know that if he wants to keep any matter from passing he can do it? All on earth he has to do is to get my friend from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] to go to the telephone and ring up "the boys" and they will obey. They will be in their seats here and they will carry out his wish. If he wanted to economize, he could do it. If my good friend from Wyoming had wanted to stand by his promise made to this committee, that he would economize and stand behind that committee's acts of economy, he could have gotten in enough fellows a little while ago to have defeated that amendment which put back into this bill the surveyor general out in the West. He did not want to defeat it. I want to say that there are several million acres of land out in Wyoming yet unsurveyed and he does not want that service withdrawn out in the West, as the employees spend money there.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I can not yield. I have not the time. I would yield if I had the time.

I want to tell my friends why my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] was so stirred up a while ago for fear I would extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman from Texas is not speaking to his amendment, which is pending before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair indicate what particular part of my argument was not pertinent to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment which the gentleman offered was to strike out the paragraph, and that paragraph refers to the pay of the employees under the Postmaster General. The gentleman will confine himself to that subject.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair indicate what part of my argument was out of order? I want to find out, so that I can keep in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Everything outside of the discussion of the employees under the Postmaster General's department.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair rule that way when I say there are 1,076 messengers included in this bill and quite a number in this paragraph? Outside of this paragraph, we carry more than a thousand. I was undertaking to show that they were not necessary in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's argument must be confined to the provisions of the paragraph which he moved to strike out.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand the Chair. Now, if the Chair will kindly not take this out of my time [laughter], I will ask how many of you are going to begin to economize over here? You have got to make a beginning some time. The people of the United States demand it. They are going to require it. I want to tell you something. This applies to both sides of the House—to my side as well as yours. If we do not begin to economize, possibly it will be our last chance. Perhaps next year there will be somebody here in our places who can economize for the people, when the new Congress comes in. Are you going to wait until the election? I want to tell you right now, my good colleagues, that the people of this country are stirred up on this question of economy and of proper reconstruction and getting back to normal conditions. You had better do what they want done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, Mr. Chairman, outside of interruptions and points of order I have not had much more than a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. I see there is no use to make any attempt to economize; there seems to be no chance in this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question. For what purpose do they use the 34 watchmen provided in this paragraph? Do they need that many?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There are three buildings occupied by the Post Office Department, and they need a certain number of watchmen there in the daytime, but most of them are employed there at night. There is a great amount of very valuable property which belongs to the Post Office Department and a great amount of valuable property going through the mails, and it is necessary to have watchmen to safeguard this property. If we could get along with proportionately as few watchmen in the other departments of the Government as we have in the Post Office Department, where it occurs to me there is very great necessity for them, we would be very well satisfied.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Are there any more employed under this item than are needed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think so.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Are these watchmen selected through the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing, fuel, lights, foreign postage, labor, repairs of buildings, care of grounds, books of reference, periodicals, typewriters and adding machines and exchange of same, street car fares not exceeding $200, and other necessaries, directly ordered by the Attorney General, $35,000.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Out of what fund are the operatives in the Department of Justice paid who are scattered throughout the country?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are paid out of the fund known as the fund for the detection and prosecution of criminals, which fund is provided in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MILLER. Who has the fixing of the salaries of these men?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The Attorney General.

Mr. MILLER. He has arbitrary power as to the number and the amounts that he pays?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is a part of the Secret Service. The subcommittee on the legislative bill make no appropriation for it and have no information on it.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman give any idea what is the amount of the appropriation that is made?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Some gentleman on the subcommittee having in charge the preparation of the sundry civil appropriation bill can tell that.

Mr. MILLER. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Solicitor of the Department of Labor: Solicitor, $5,000; law clerk, $2,000; clerks—two of class 4, two of class 1; messenger; in all, $13,840.

Mr. SISSON. Is the gentleman willing to rise now?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under considertion the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD presented a conference report on the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand the Chair has ruled that the time to reserve points of order on a conference report is after the report has been read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so decided, and the gentleman was present.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

On February 26, 1920:

H. R. 8819. An act to amend the Army appropriation act for 1920, and for the purchase of land and to provide for construction work at certain military posts, and for other purposes.

On February 27, 1920:

H. R. 12351. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C.

H. R. 6863. An act to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 28, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HUSTED, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12724) to declare Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 682), which said bill and report were referred to the House calendar.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained from the Senate by the death of a member of his family.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is absent on account of illness in his family.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is detained on account of illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

As in legislative session,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3037) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer, free of charge, certain surplus motor-propelled vehicles and motor equipment to the Department of Agriculture, Post Office Department, Navy Department, and the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service, and certain other surplus property to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KAHN, Mr. MCKENZIE, and Mr. DENT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COLT. I have a short telegram from the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Woonsocket, R. I., which I should like to have read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

WOONSOCKET, R. I., February 27.

Hon. L. B. COLT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Copy of resolution adopted by board of directors February 25:

Whereas the progress and the safety of the world demand it; and
Whereas in order that the vital interests of the United States and its nationals in Europe may be fully protected and the attention of our Government and our people may be concentrated upon our domestic problems it is essential that the peace treaty be ratified immediately: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Woonsocket hereby urge the President and the Senate to take prompt action with respect to the treaty of peace with Germany, with such reservations as will fully safeguard every fundamental principle of the Government of the United States. Letter follows.

WOONSOCKET CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Mr. NELSON. I have here a short resolution from the American Legion at St. Cloud, Minn., protesting against the $50 a month bonus. I ask that it may be read. It is very short. It is such a wholesome resolution under present conditions that I think it ought to be noted.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

"Whereas the executive committee of the American Legion, believing that the rank and file of the organization was favorable to a bonus and has therefore suggested that a bond of $50 be given to each service man and woman for each month of service; and

"Whereas the Government of the United States already is burdened with excessive war debts, causing great public unrest: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Wallace S. Chute Post, No. 76, of the American Legion, express itself as opposed to the American Legion being put in the position of asking for such bonus, thereby imposing a great burden on the rest of the people of this country at this time; and be it

"Resolved further, That we are opposed to the matter of a bonus or adjusted compensation being brought up this year, thus making the ex-service men and women the tools of selfishly ambitious politicians; and be it

"Resolved further, That copies of these resolutions be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to our national headquarters, to our State headquarters, and to our Minnesota member of the national executive committee."

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution from the American Legion Post at St. Cloud, Minn., protesting against the $50 a month bonus be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the Aero Club of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a department of aeronautics, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Pomona, Great Bend, Emporia, Park, Tonganoxie, Ford, Montezuma, Buffalo, and Humboldt, all in the State of Kansas, and of College View, Nebr.; Rich Hill, Mo.; and Tacoma, Ohio, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Local Lodge No. 331, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, of Atchison, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Sterling-Graham sedition bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Southwestern Millers' League at Kansas City, Mo., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for extensions of credit to encourage foreign trade, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. McLEAN. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 3958) to amend section 14 of the Federal reserve act, and I submit a report (No. 457) thereon.

I wish to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to consider this bill next Monday, and I hope that every Senator who is interested in the measure will avail himself of the opportunity to read the report of the committee, which contains the reasons assigned by the Federal Reserve Board for this legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ANNIVERSARY OF LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS.

Mr. HARDING. As chairman of the joint special committee appointed under the provisions of House concurrent resolution 14 to confer with officials of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or any political subdivision thereof and with officers of any organization or societies or with individuals relative to the contemplated observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims, I submit a report accompanied by a joint resolution providing for the appropriation recommended, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on the Library.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 165) authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown and Plymouth, Mass., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3990) placing Lieut. Col. Charles C. Teare, of the Judge Advocate General's Department, upon the retired list and to retire him with the rank and pay of a lieutenant colonel upon the retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HENDERSON:

A bill (S. 3991) for the relief of Fred E. Jackson; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3992) authorizing the exchange of certain lands in the State of Nevada; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3993) for the relief of the heirs at law of Jacques Clamorgan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3994) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 3995) providing for the relinquishment of certain described property by the United States to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT—CONFEREE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is necessarily detained from the Chamber on account of illness. He is one of the conferees on the water-power bill and has asked to be relieved from service upon the conference.

Therefore I ask unanimous consent that he may be relieved from further service on the committee of conference, and that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] be appointed in his place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Alabama will be relieved and the appointment of the Senator from Florida will be made accordingly.

MAGNA CHARTA.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, on Monday, I believe, I obtained consent of the Senate to have the Magna Charta printed as a public document. I omitted at the time to ask that my remarks in making the request be printed with the document. I now make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

CLAIM OF GOVERNMENT OF NORWAY (H. DOC. NO. 664).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and on motion of Mr. LODGE was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Acting Secretary of State and accompanying papers in relation to a claim presented by the Government of Norway against the Government of the United States based on the action of the authorities of Hudson County, N. J., in holding for their appearance as witnesses in a criminal case in that county, in violation of treaty provisions between the United States and Norway, as the Norwegian Government alleges, three members of the crew of a Norwegian ship called the Ingrid, and I recommend that, as an act of grace, and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, an appropriation be made to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
28 February, 1920.

DISTRICT PUBLIC-SCHOOL SYSTEM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the suggestion and under the authority of the Vice President, the Chair appoints the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] as the select committee provided for in Senate resolution 310 to investigate the public-school system of the District of Columbia.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] for a moment while I make some suggestions about his substitute for reservation No. 4.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not reverse its action and adopt this proposed reservation. It not only is opposed to the action of the Senate for four months, but after the treaty has gone into effect as to other nations it is a proposition to amend it as between those nations and make it absolutely impossible for ratification or for the other nations to accept it and admit this country on the terms of the Senator's reservation.

Mr. President, the principal object of adopting reservations instead of amendments, which I voted against from the beginning, was that the reservations should apply to this country alone and might be accepted by the other powers without disturbing the relations between those countries. After that battle has been fought and that principle has been settled the Senator from Nebraska now offers a reservation which amends the treaty not only as to ourselves but as to every party to the treaty.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If it would not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator if the process of accepting an amendment, now that the other signatories are operating under the ratified treaty, so far as they are concerned, does not require the unanimous vote of every Government which has membership on the council and a majority vote of all the other members of the league in order to get the treaty amended?

Mr. KELLOGG. It undoubtedly does, except as to this country, which is not a party.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But I mean if we adopt this alleged reservation, an actual amendment, which, as far as we are concerned, it is, you could not accept it by mere diplomatic notes. It would have to be an amendment of the treaty under the terms of article 26 of the covenant.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator is quite right, and I will come to that point later.

Mr. BORAH. In this connection may I ask a question? By what process did they accept the reservation or amendment which Switzerland put on the other day with reference to reserving her historic policy of neutrality? I read in the press dispatches that the amendment of Switzerland had been accepted by the council of the league.

Mr. KELLOGG. Undoubtedly. I will state to the Senator from Idaho that if it applied to Switzerland alone, as the Senator from Connecticut said, of course they would accept it, but if it applied not only to Switzerland but to all the other countries which had already become parties to the League of Nations and the treaty it could only be amended as provided for by the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but did the council of the league undertake to assume an acceptance even for the purpose of binding Switzerland?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know as to that. Undoubtedly it did not have authority, because the other countries would be the ones to determine it.

Mr. BORAH. It occurred to me that it did not have any authority, but it was a fine illustration of what it is going to do without authority.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I may say, if the Senator will permit me, that the press reports stated that the supreme council of the league had accepted it.

Mr. KELLOGG. The reservation proposed by the Senator from Nebraska provides:

That no member nation is required to submit to the league, its council or assembly, for decision, report, or recommendation, any matter which it considers in international law to be a domestic question.

Therefore, as I said, it would be necessary to amend this league and this treaty as between all the other nations parties to it, and the only possible effect it could have would be absolutely to prevent ratification and destroy the treaty so far as this country is concerned.

I have believed for a long time that it was the intention of the Senator from Nebraska to defeat this treaty, to defeat it with Republican votes if he could, and with Democratic votes if he could not accomplish it any other way.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me that the Senator from Nebraska is not making very much headway in furnishing votes for the business.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I congratulate both Senators upon their new alliance, and while I can not wish them success I wish them all the pleasure they can get out of the alliance.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If there is any alliance it is at least in the open; it is not in a secret, nonpartisan, bipartisan compromise, tentative committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that so far as the irreconcilables are concerned, if we may call them that, or the "bitter enders," or whatever we may call them, they have made no secret of the fact that they intended to defeat the treaty in any event, if possible; but I will further say that even the Senator from Connecticut rather hesitated to undertake to defeat the treaty now by putting an amendment on it which he knew would mean its certain death.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am in favor of direct action, honestly in the open, Mr. President.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think so. Now, I hope the Senator from Nebraska will come to the same conclusion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not understand. Was a question addressed to me?

Mr. KELLOGG. I was simply congratulating the Senator upon his new alliance; that is all.

Now, Mr. President, as to subdivision 4, if I may have order in the Chamber——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let there be order in the Chamber.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has created a disturbance; we are hunting for new allies.

Mr. KELLOGG. I can not even hear what the Senator says, there are so many Senators who wish to speak.

Mr. BORAH. I said the Senator had created a disturbance; we are hunting for new allies.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator will please wait until I get through before he hunts any more allies.

Now, Mr. President, so far as reservation No. 4 is concerned, if the treaty is to be ratified—and I hope it will be—it is going to be with reservation No. 4, which protects this country as to all its internal policies, its political policies, and domestic questions.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is not the Senator from Minnesota an irreconcilable?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I will let the Senate judge what I am when I get through.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator to state an ultimatum.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why, everybody knows that there is not a member of the council or a party to this treaty who would intentionally submit their domestic questions to the decision of any tribunal. So far as I am concerned I have no objection to striking out the word "commerce," but I do not see that it really makes any difference. The council and the league would not have any control and could not decide in arbitration any question as to foreign commerce unless that commerce came under some treaty or rule of international law now existing or existing when the question arose.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator just made a statement——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield for a question, but not for a speech. I want to make a speech myself.

Mr. REED. I wish the Senator would tell us why what he has just stated is true.

Mr. KELLOGG. Because as to whether we shall trade with Argentina, Germany, Australia, or any other country is a question between the particular country and this country, and the league has no jurisdiction over it. If we have a treaty whereby we are granted equal privileges and we are denied them, or we grant equal privileges and then refuse them, that would be a question arising under a treaty and could therefore go to the League of Nations.

Mr. President, for those who are earnestly in favor of the ratification of the treaty the entanglement over the Adriatic question is a rather discouraging feature. I am not going to discuss the merits of the dispute about the boundary between Italy and Austria-Hungary and Serbia. My position is that it is none of our business; that this country ought not to try to settle the boundaries of all of the aspiring nations, new or old, in Europe, which have emerged from the war with some degree of autonomy. I do not think it is our place to do so, and I do not believe the President is justified in attempting to dictate the adjustment between Italy and her neighbors.

Why, Mr. President, it certainly more intimately interests the countries of Europe than it does us; undoubtedly that is true; but the idea that because we took part in the war we are now going to try to dictate the settlement of disputed boundaries and meddle in all the quarrels which follow such a great war as this is unthinkable. If we are going to do this before we have any treaty at all, what will we get into if we do not have an adequate reservation to article 10 after the treaty is signed? I say, therefore, that the Fiume or Adriatic incident does not afford a very encouraging outlook for the smooth operation of the treaty.

Mr. President, I do not know on the face of it why Italy should not protect herself as to her frontier. Austria-Hungary is the ancient enemy of Italy. For generations, yes, for centuries, Italy has lived under the shadow of Austrian and German domination. She went into the war and made great sacrifices. Austria has been defeated, we may say dismembered and humbled, but she may rise again. Why should not Italy protect herself by acquiring the territory inhabited principally on the north by Italians and also protect herself by taking the territory around the head of the Adriatic Sea? Austria's control of that territory has been a menace to the peace of Italy.

I am not going to discuss the Serbs or any other race that inhabits this particular territory, for since the days of the Roman occupation, Roman, Venetian, Italian civilization has had its foothold upon the eastern shores of the Adriatic, and a Roman emperor was born there.

But, Mr. President, let us for a moment consider the ground on which the President undertook to dictate the boundaries between Austria-Hungary and Jugo-Slavia and Italy.

Let me read what the President said in his note of February 24, 1920, to the prime minister of Great Britain and the prime minister of France. I invite the earnest attention of the Senate to the statement. Mr. Polk, speaking for the President and in the name of the President, said:

He—

believes it to be the central principle fought for in the war that no Government or group of Governments has the right to dispose of the territory or to determine the political allegiance of any free people. The five great powers, though the Government of the United States constitutes one of them, have in his conviction no more right than had the Austrian Government to dispose of the free Jugoslavic peoples without the free consent and cooperation of those peoples. The President's position is that the powers associated against Germany gave final and irrefutable proof of their sincerity in the war by writing into the treaty of Versailles article 10 of the covenant of the League of Nations, which constitutes an assurance that all the great powers have done what they have compelled Germany to do—have foregone all territorial aggression and all interference with the free political self-determination of the peoples of the world. With this principle lived up to, permanent peace is secured and the supreme object of the recent conflict has been achieved. Justice and self-determination have been substituted for aggression and political dictation.

Mr. President, let us consider for just a moment how far self-determination, which has been applied to prevent the protection and the aspirations of Italy, played a part in the settlement at the peace conference at Versailles. The declaration of self-determination seems to be the central point on which all the other considerations rest in the determination of the Italian question.

What part did self-determination play in the settlement of the Saar Valley question? It played no more part than it did at Versailles in 1871, when Germany demanded and forcibly took from France Alsace and Lorraine. Nobody pretended that self-determination determined the taking from Germany of the Saar Valley. I am not disputing the justice of that action; it was the result of war; it was just retribution, we may say; in fact, I know of no reason why France should not have taken the territory to the Rhine, if it was necessary to protect her. Germany did not hesitate to take French territory in 1871. But to say that the high and altruistic principle of self-determination ruled in the settlement of the Saar Valley question is to say that which is an absurdity.

What part did self-determination play in the Shantung matter? Was China consulted? Were the people consulted whose territory and rights were handed over to Japan? Not at all. What part did self-determination play in the establishment of the modern Serbia? Everyone knows that Bosnia and Herzogovinia are simply remaining as a part of the Serbian Government while the shadow of Austrian indemnity is hanging over them, and no longer. What part did it play in the case of Montenegro? Everybody knows that that hardy people, living in their mountain fastnesses, independent for many years, are to-day seething with revolution and rebellion against the control of their country by Serbia. Self-determination had nothing to do with erecting this new nation, which I believe, or fear, is held together by a rope of sand.

I may pause to ask, Are we to pledge ourselves for all time to furnish our manhood, our money, and our resources to maintain those nations which have been erected without regard to the principle of self-determination? I am not saying that they should not have been established, but I am saying that they were parceled out and were not built upon the principle of the self-determination of their people.

Mr. Lloyd-George naïvely asked the President how much did self-determination have to do with the 3,000,000 Russians who were taken into Poland and the 3,000,000 Germans into Czechoslovakia?

Mr. President, I am not inveighing against the establishment of Poland or of a modern Serbia or the other nations which have come out of the storm and the crucible of war. I am saying that self-determination has not been the rule and was not the rule in many cases in the settlements at the Versailles conference. That peace conference, which I believe did honest work as far, perhaps, as it was possible, was actuated by the same motives, the same ambitions, the same hopes and aspirations which have actuated great conferences following other conflicts in history. To say that they were actuated only by the highest motives, and established nations only on the high principles of self-determination and liberty, is to say that which is not true, and I have no doubt it was impossible. You can not surround the peace conference with any such sanctity, nor can self-determination be made the real basis for the settlement of the disputed line between Italy and Austria.

Why, Mr. President, it was the ordinary peace conference. True, this country did not ask anything. We were the most disinterested, and therefore occupied the highest and the most powerful position; and I think we should have said to those nations: "Fix your own boundaries and settle your own disputes. We have helped to vanquish Germany, and we are now willing to withdraw, to act with you in bringing about peace in every way we can, but will not attempt to dictate all of the boundaries and the disputed questions of Europe."

Mr. President, I sometimes think it is a pity that we have not the genius of a Shakespeare to-day to throw around this peace conference the golden halo of romance and lift it from its sordid base. I do not know that they were to blame; but when we attempt to justify all the things that were done as having been along lines of high altruistic motives it can not be done. The members of the conference were human, as we are.

On these grounds I am not opposed to the treaty—not at all. I am not opposed to the League of Nations—not at all. I am in favor of it. I am in favor of taking them both and making the best of them and using our influence to help pull Europe out of the slough of despondency and ruin where the war has placed her, but I do not favor the United States becoming the dictator of Europe. I believe it is therefore all the more important that in the ratification of this treaty—which I hope and believe will be ratified—we should adopt reservations to protect this country in the exercise of all its powers of government and in the settlement and adjustment of all its domestic questions.

I earnestly hope that the reservation offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] will be defeated and that the one adopted by the Senate at the last session of Congress will be again adopted and that upon that principle this treaty will be ratified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gronna	Kirby	Poindexter
Beckham	Hale	Knox	Pomerene
Borah	Harding	Lenroot	Ransdell
Brandegee	Harris	Lodge	Reed
Capper	Harrison	McKellar	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Henderson	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Colt	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Smoot
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sutherland
Dillingham	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Elkins	Kendrick	Owen	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Kenyon	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	Keyes	Phelan	Watson
Gerry	King	Pittman

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], in making his attack upon the reservation which we have presented as a substitute, has gone far afield to argue matters that have nothing whatever to do with this reservation, and I refer to them only for the purpose of stating very obvious answers to the criticisms which he makes upon the President.

I assume that he is criticizing the President and the representatives of other countries because they turned the Saar Valley over to France for 15 years.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Did not the Senator hear me say that I did not criticize the transaction?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator spoke in such a voice that I lost a part of what he said; but if he was commending the act, then, of course, what I say does not apply. The Saar Valley was turned over to France for 15 years for the stated necessity of giving to France reparation for the damage that Germany had done in destroying the coal mines in the Lens region of France. If Germany had not turned over to France the Saar Valley, with its coal mines, for 15 years it would have been necessary for Germany to make payment in cash or some other means; and it was as much for Germany's benefit as for the benefit of France that the coal mines of the Saar Valley were placed at French disposal for that period of time.

When the Senator intimates that the principle of self-determination was violated in turning over the Saar Valley to France he forgets that at the end of that time a plebiscite is to be taken, and the people of the Saar Valley themselves are to be permitted to decide whether they shall come under the Government of Germany or the Government of France. Thus, instead of the policy and principle of self-determination having been violated, it was distinctively vindicated in the Saar Valley matter, and it was done very largely through the influence of the President of the United States.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator means, of course, the people who may happen to be in the Saar Valley 15 years from now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course; I mean just that thing, and I so stated.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the senior Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I can not entirely agree with either Senator. I think the Saar Valley was turned over to France by way of compensation for the coal fields that had been destroyed in France. It was to give France an opportunity to use that coal in place of the coal that had been destroyed in the coal fields of France.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That was exactly my statement, Mr. President.

Mr. KELLOGG. And in answer to that I said in my speech that I entirely approved of it. I should not have objected if they had given the entire Saar Valley to France for all time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; but the Senator was instancing that as a case in which the policy of self-determination was violated, and I am stating to the Senator that that presents a case in which the principle of self-determination was vindicated, because the people of the Saar Valley—a valley which for centuries has been a source of quarrel and dispute between Germany and France—are to be given the first opportunity in their history to decide to which country they shall belong; so that instead of being a source of criticism of the President for abandoning his principle of self-determination, it vindicates that principle.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator tell us what the racial population of the Saar Valley is?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I am not able to state that offhand. It is a mixed population. Probably at the present time it is more German than French.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator tell us whether France has held it since the Napoleonic days?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I think not. I think it is probably as far back as that time.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator tell us how long it was held at that time by France?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, I do not remember that; and I do not care, because it is immaterial to my discussion.

Mr. REED. I only ask because the Senator stated that for centuries the valley had been a source of dispute between the two countries.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have stated that the reason for turning over the Saar Valley to France was one of reparation. France was in a desperate condition for need of coal, and the reason she was in a desperate condition for need of coal was that Germany had very largely destroyed her coal mines in northern France.

It was a matter almost of necessity to recompense France in this way, but the French claim to the Saar Valley, so far as it was a permanent claim, was denied, and it was limited to 15 years; and at the end of that time the people of the Saar Valley were given the right to decide for themselves to which allegiance they should adhere.

The Senator again questions the statement that the principle of self-determination was violated when the nation of Poland was reconstituted, because within the boundaries of that nation so reconstituted there are said to be about 3,000,000 Russians. That presents one of those difficult questions which the council in Paris had to deal with. Everyone knows that when you come to the border lines of those countries races and nationalities intermix, and it is not possible to draw a geographical line which shall be absolutely accurate from ethnological standards. You are bound to include some of two and sometimes of three nationalities within the same area. But Poland was once a nation, and when Russia and Austria and Germany divided Poland among themselves it was a natural thing that Germany as well as Russia should induce and encourage their people to come into what was purely Polish territory.

The same is true of Czechoslovakia, the reconstituted nation of Bohemia. There, also, will be found to-day an element of Germans, but that constitutes no reason why the old nation of Bohemia, which for so many years has been held in subjection, should not be allowed a resumption of the government of her own people, even when there may be a certain per cent of the foreign element within her borders.

The questions of geography and ethnology were difficult questions for the council to decide, and it comes with poor grace, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], from Senators on the other side of the aisle, who did all they could to destroy the influence of the President of the United States when he was laboring in Paris to maintain the principles of his 14 points, when they sought to destroy his influence in Paris, to charge that he did not entirely succeed in all his altruistic efforts and all his devotion to the ideals which are embodied in the doctrine of the 14 points.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What did you do to uphold the hands of the President in those days? What did you do to strengthen his arms? You stood here in the Senate of the United States and by speeches and by votes did all you could to discredit him and to let the people of Europe believe that he did not represent the public sentiment of the United States; and now you assume to come here and twit him with not having succeeded in all that he undertook to do.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator state anything that I did to hamper the President in Paris? Apparently he scorned any assistance from anybody.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will state some things the Senator did. The Senator joined in a conspiracy on that side of the aisle to stuff the Committee on Foreign Relations full of enemies of the treaty, Senators who were pledged to vote to defeat the treaty when it came here.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is one thing the Senator did. The Senator supported that plan, and that was the initiative, it was the beginning, of the effort made here in the Senate to destroy the treaty.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, the Senator knows that that is not true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And the Senator from Minnesota has done other things. While always assuming to be a friend of the treaty he has joined his colleagues over there in preventing every effort at compromise. He knows just as well as we know that you have succeeded in producing a solidarity of support for these reservations, a solidarity of support for yielding to the enemies of the treaty on that side of the aisle. How have you succeeded in getting a majority of the Senate to support these reservations? Have you done it by getting the votes of friends of the treaty? I ask the Senator from Minnesota, if he will give me his attention, whether it would have been possible to secure a majority of the Senate for the pending reservations without the votes of the 14 enemies of the treaty and the League of Nations? Will the Senator answer me that question?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think it would have been possible to get any reservations to protect this country without the entire Republican vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And the Senator knows that when he agreed to those reservations under the assertion that he was a friend of the treaty, he voted for the very reservations that the enemies of the treaty supported because they thought it would kill the treaty.

Mr. KNOX. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. Two or three times lately the argument has been made that has just been made by the Senator from Nebraska, that Senators on this side failed to uphold the hands of the President while he was in Paris molding this treaty, and not only failed to uphold his hands but attacked him in the measures which he was trying to put through. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska, with the wires centered in the hands of Mr. Creel and the censorship that could not be overcome, what information did we ever get as to what was to be put into the treaty or what was put into the treaty until the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] procured a copy of it through a newspaper and had it put into the RECORD here?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There never has been a time in the history of the world when the Senate has been advised in advance what the representatives of the President were doing in their negotiations. The Senator knows very well that the power to negotiate treaties is an Executive power, and I assert that the President had a right as the Executive to go there and make his treaty with the executives of the other nations.

Mr. KNOX. I am not challenging that at all, Mr. President. I recall very distinctly that before the President went upon this mission he took this case outside of the ordinary case and told us that all he would know we should know, and we sat here in expectation for months hoping that we could get some knowledge; but we got none. I am not saying that the President was not within his rights by secretly negotiating the treaty, because as the negotiator he could select any method that he saw fit; but I do not want this side of the Chamber to lie under the unjust accusation that we were attacking the measure which he was trying to put through when we had absolutely no information about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not said that you were attacking the measure. What I said was that you were attacking the President and endeavoring to discredit him in every way and weaken him in the efforts he was making there in Paris; and when now you find here and there a flaw, as you see it, in the treaty, comparing it with his ideals, you are taking advantage of your own wrong. After having done all you could to weaken him, you are trying to point out that he did not succeed in some of the things he aimed to do. That is what I am asserting.

But, Mr. President, this is not very germane to what is now before the Senate. The question before the Senate is the reservation which I have presented, and which I presented last November, known as reservation No. 4. It has been criticized by the statement that it involves an amendment of the treaty, an amendment of the League of Nations. Mr. President, that comes certainly with poor grace from Senators who have been voting for amendments, from Senators who have been supporting reservations, which do change the treaty in vital and essential particulars. It is rather remarkable that they, after a record of that sort, in which they have sought to tear the treaty to pieces and amend the League of Nations and nullify the provisions of the League of Nations, should now charge that I am engaged in that enterprise.

Mr. President, this reservation, which had the support of Senators on this side of the aisle last November and which I hope will have their support now, is an interpretative reservation, and it is such a reservation as we think proper to attach to the treaty. It covers substantially——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Who does the Senator speak of when he says "we"? This proposition has never been approved, so far as I know, by any Democratic conference or Democratic steering committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know that the Senator was present, but early in November a Democratic conference was called and these reservations were read to them, and they agreed to stand by them and they did stand by them, including the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to correct the Senator. I did not stand by them. A motion to direct the Committee of the Whole to report the treaty with certain reservations does not mean that you stand by the reservations, for at the time I cast my vote I called attention to the fact that no one would be bound by the report, but it would come to the Senate with the right to amend the report, and that is entirely true. Voting to bring it again to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole did not mean an indorsement of this reservation, or, rather, this amendment to the treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am rather surprised that the Senator from Georgia should make that statement. He made that explanation a few days ago, and I called his personal attention to the fact that he not only voted for my motion at that time, including this reservation among others, but that on a previous occasion he voted for this reservation itself as a separate proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not recall that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be glad to enlighten the Senator. On November 15 last I presented in the Senate the following reservation:

> That no member nation is required to submit to the league, its council, or its assembly, for decision, report, or recommendation, any matter which it considers to be in international law a domestic question, such as immigration, labor, tariff, or other matters relating to its internal or coastwise affairs.

That is almost identically the same reservation. The only change I made at this time was in striking out the words "international law," which, I think, was an accidental inclusion and which does not change the meaning of the reservation in any respect. On the roll call the yeas were 43 and the nays were 52, and among the Democrats who voted for that reservation I find recorded "SMITH of Georgia."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the language was different; but even were the language the same, the effect will be different. The Senator can laugh, but he is now fighting the treaty. The language was different and the effect will be entirely different. At that stage of the procedure on the treaty last November it might have been practical to adopt an amendment to the treaty, but at this stage, when we know that no amendment can be put to the treaty, after so many countries have acted, we know it will defeat the treaty, and I think the course of the Senator can only be accounted for upon the ground that he is ready to defeat ratification of the treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is welcome to his own conclusion. I think probably the Senate and the country will be able to decide whether I have been for the treaty or against it. There are some Senators you are hardly able to identify as to whether they are for it or against it, but I believe it will be generally agreed that I am for it.

But, Mr. President, this is not an amendment of the treaty. It is an amendment offered to the reservation of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], because it is a substitute. I desire at this time to read my reservation:

> That no member nation is required to submit to the league, its council, or assembly, for decision, report, or recommendation, any matter which it considers to be a domestic question, such as immigration, labor, tariff, or other matter relating to its internal or coastwise affairs.

Is there any Senator here who claims that a nation is required to submit to the league, its council or assembly, for decision a matter which is a domestic question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator wish to have me answer?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be glad to hear the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Under the League of Nations the question whether a matter is a domestic question or not may be decided by the league, and therefore the league may have jurisdiction over domestic questions. This says "that no member nation is required to submit," and so forth. That would include England, France, Italy, and Japan, who have already ratified the treaty, and would release them absolutely from the obligation of that provision of the League of Nations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Any intelligent man knows that the League of Nations is formed for the purpose of dealing with international and not with domestic questions, and any intelligent man knows that no member of the league, the United States or any other, will ever submit to have its domestic questions passed upon by the league.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I never have thought that any reservation on this subject was necessary. I never thought that the league, formed to deal with international questions, would ever attempt to assert its control over domestic questions. The only reason why I ever introduced it, and when I introduced it last November, was in the hope that it might secure the votes of some Senators on the other side of the aisle who have become obsessed with the idea that their reservations are more important than the league itself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Do you mean by this amendment that the council of the league shall still determine what are and what are not domestic questions? Do you mean by this provision—I will not call it an amendment—to take away from the council of the league the right to determine what are and what are not domestic questions?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean that no nation is required, just as the language says, to submit to the league or any of its organs the power to pass upon a domestic question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand, but the league covenant provides that the council shall determine in case of a dispute whether it is or is not a domestic question. Article 15 provides that "if the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them, and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report." Does the Senator intend by his substitute to change that provision in the league covenant and take away from the council the right to determine what are and what are not domestic questions?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the council may report that, but no nation is required to submit to it. That was not necessary. It was put in there because Senators of the United States, when the first draft of the league came over here, stated that there ought to be a reservation on the subject. They stated that it might be interpreted to mean that the league might take jurisdiction over domestic questions, and so this additional paragraph which the Senator has just read was inserted, but it is not exclusive. That still exists; that is not changed. The council can still do so, but no nation is required to submit to it, and never was required to submit to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me ask the Senator, Does not the league covenant expressly provide that we will submit all disputes to the council and that the council shall continue to handle them, unless the point is made that a dispute is a domestic question, and then does it not provide that the council will still handle the question, though we claimed that it was a domestic question, unless the council found that it was domestic? So has not the Senator left in the council the privilege of determining what are and what are not domestic questions, or else has he not changed the covenant by his provision?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the claim that this reservation changes the covenant is no stronger than to say that the reservation presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] changes the covenant. The only difference between the two reservations is that the reservation presented by the Senator from Massachusetts asserts a right of the United States, while my reservation asserts that same right but declares it is a right which belongs to all members. If we assert the right as to ourselves the provisions of the covenant are just as much affected as if we said that other nations shall be upon the same basis.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, I want to ask the Senator, does he change, by the proposition which he has offered, the paragraph of article 15 which declares that the council shall exercise control of all controversies unless the council finds that they involve domestic questions? Does the Senator mean that the United States shall determine whether or not a question is domestic, or does he mean that the council is still to determine, under the league, whether a dispute is domestic? Which does the Senator mean?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In the first place, this does not put everything under the control of the council in the broad manner the language of the Senator implies; and, in the second place, I assert that my provision makes less of a change in the league than the reservation presented by the committee, and for this reason: The fundamental principle of the League of Nations is that all members of the league are upon an equal basis; that one is bound just as another is bound. It is provided in the committee reservation that the United States shall be placed in a class by itself; and I judge from what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has said that he avers that we shall be placed in a class by ourselves, that we shall not be bound, but that the other nations shall be bound to submit to a certain thing. That is a violation of the fundamental principle of the League of Nations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall yield in a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Whereas my reservation provides that the right which we claim for ourselves is a right which belongs independently to every other member of the league. The relative positions of the nations are in no wise affected by my reservation, whereas the reservation which Senators on the other side of the aisle are supporting makes a distinct and emphatic difference between the United States and other nations, and that is out of harmony with every principle of the league.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only want to ask the Senator one more question, and then I will quit. Will he tell us whether he means by his substitute to take away from the council the right to determine whether or not a question is domestic or international? Does he mean that we shall determine that for ourselves, or that it shall be left to the council?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean to say that no nation—the United States nor any other nation—shall be compelled to submit to the council a domestic question nor to permit the council to decide what is a domestic question.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the Senator if a dispute comes before the council, and the council determines that it is an international question and not a domestic question, does the council have jurisdiction of the dispute?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Under this reservation——

Mr. LENROOT. I mean under the treaty as it stands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Under the treaty as it stands the council has power to act, but I have no doubt that the nations need not recognize the act.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Then what becomes of the agreement that where the council has power to act and acts unanimously the nation does bind itself to stand by the award?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator, I am sure, in his fair moments will not claim that the nine members constituting the council are going to establish a principle which will enable the council at some time to go into their domestic affairs. It was never intended that the league should mix in domestic affairs, and I do not think even the Senator from Wisconsin will say that the council would ever undertake to usurp functions that were not properly intended it should exercise.

Mr. LENROOT. No; but supposing one of the parties to the dispute makes the claim that it is not domestic but international, who is to decide the dispute under the treaty as it stands?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, it would not be a dispute.

Mr. LENROOT. Why not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The nation would have the right to say: "That is a domestic question, and not for the consideration of the league."

Mr. LENROOT. But one party to the dispute claims it is not a domestic question. Who then decides?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Nobody. [Laughter.]

Mr. LENROOT. Then what was the purpose of the treaty in providing that, if the council finds that the question is a domestic one, it shall not take jurisdiction?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It provides that it shall not take jurisdiction in that event; it does not provide that it shall.

Mr. LENROOT. It says that in that kind of a case it shall not make a report; and the Senator from Nebraska, although he may not be a lawyer, well knows that where they are denied the power to make a report in a given case, it implies the power to make it where that condition does not exist; and then we have bound ourselves to abide by the decision.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I disagree with the Senator entirely. It is simply a limitation on the powers of the council, and the reservation which is presented from the Republican side of the Senate proposes an additional limitation that makes it apply only to the United States. Now, I say it is a violation of the very principle of the league to give something to the United States which we are not willing to accord to all members of the league. My reservation is framed on the line of interpreting the treaty to mean, as I believe it does mean, that no nation shall ever be required to submit its domestic questions to the decision of the league.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator what, in his mind, is the difference between a reservation and an amendment? I am sure it will be interesting to the Senate to know.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I observe the Senator from Wisconsin and a number of other Senators on the other side of the Chamber are very anxious to probe into the workings of my mind on these questions; but I have stated before that I am not disposed to split hairs with them on these subjects. There has been entirely too much of hairsplitting since we began the consideration of this great document; there has been too little disposition to accept its principles and to accept its objects and entirely too much disposition to split hairs on the fine meaning of words, on the theory that we were entering into a contract with a lot of bandits and were likely to lose our rights.

Now, what are the facts, Mr. President? The facts are that in common with the other democracies of the world we are undertaking to enter into an agreement to preserve the peace of the world. We ought to enter as equals, one being bound no more than the other is bound. We are not dealing with the murderous and criminal element of the world; we are dealing with the great democracies of the world that are governed by public opinion; and those democracies have an interest, as we have, in agreeing to do those things which will work for peace and agreeing not to do those things which will produce war; and yet we have spent nearly a year here in considering reservations on the theory that we were dealing with a lot of criminals and cutthroats and confidence men. Can not we, the greatest Nation in the world, enter into a compact with the remainder of the world to preserve its peace without haggling over reservations supposed to be in the interest of protecting our rights?

What reservation has been offered on the other side of the aisle designed to strengthen the league, designed to improve its efficiency, designed to preserve the peace of the world, designed to reduce the armaments of the world, designed to do justice to the subject peoples of the world? Those which have been offered are all petty, hairsplitting reservations, written on the theory that we are an innocent lamb about to go into a menagerie of wild animals and that we have to protect ourselves.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Nebraska thinks it is very unfair for some of us to ask him to disclose what is in his mind on these important subjects; but I wish to ask the Senator, when he asserts that our reservations are amendments, is it not fair and is it not due to the Senate that he explain what in his mind is the difference between a reservation and an amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. An amendment is something which destroys the very purpose and spirit of the league, and such an amendment is found in the reservation to article 10. I will give the Senator an illustration.

Mr. LENROOT. Before the Senator does that, if he will yield further, I rather thought that was the Senator's idea of what an amendment was.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; that is my idea.

Mr. LENROOT. But nobody else agrees with the Senator from Nebraska as to that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course, I deny that conclusion of the Senator; but it is immaterial whether they do or not; the fact is that as to article 10, which is an agreement that all members of the league shall respect the territorial integrity and political independence of all other nations, members of the league, and preserve them against outside aggression, you write a direct repudiation of that obligation into a reservation; you repudiate in the strongest language any obligation to do that thing, and you call it a reservation.

Mr. LENROOT. How can we repudiate something until we have assumed it? The reservation referred to merely declines to assume the obligation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is an amendment; that is what I say; that is what I am claiming, that the Senator is endeavoring to change the league, and he is not only endeavoring to amend the league in one of its most important covenants, but he proposes to have the United States stand out by itself and say to the remainder of the world, "You are bound to preserve as well as respect the territorial integrity and political independence of the other members of the league, but we are not bound; you are bound to do that thing, but we are not; you assume the burden, but we do not." That is the position of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator what rights, duties, or obligations of any other member of the league are affected by these reservations, and what rights, duties, and obligations are affected by his substitute? Then we will get the difference.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have just stated to the Senator that the President of the United States went over there and negotiated a treaty that led to the formulation of a covenant for a great league of all the democracies of the world, designed to preserve peace. The nations were to come in as equals; they were to be equally obligated to do certain things, one no more than another. He brings it over here and the Senator from Wisconsin, while sometime described as a "mild reservationist," becomes the strongest advocate, perhaps, of a reservation which absolutely repudiates and refuses to accept an obligation which the other nations of the world not only agreed to accept but which they have ratified. He takes the position that we should now enter the league relieved from the obligation which the nations that fought the war with us, and which with us are obligated to maintain the peace of the world, have assumed. I say such a reservation is miscalled; it is an amendment; that is the reason that the Senator from Idaho and his colleagues, as they frankly avow, support these reservations; that is the reason the Senator from Connecticut supports these reservations; they go to kill the league, and that is what those Senators want to do. They are frank; they are fair; they are candid; but those Senators who, like the Senator from Wisconsin, support these destructive reservations on the theory that the league will still live, are either very much misguided or something worse.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not the Senator's difficulty that he assumes that the President of the United States in negotiating this treaty bound the United States? Of course, he did no such thing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; that is not my difficulty. The President exercised a constitutional authority. You can reject the league; you can reject the treaty, if you have the votes to do so, but when, under the pretense of making a reservation, you destroy our participation in it, you have done a contemptible thing; you have entered a league in which we are to have the benefits but only a part of the burdens.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator kindly tell us what benefits we are to get out of this league? I should like to have a bill of particulars right now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In the first place I know of no country more interested in preserving the peace of the world than the United States; I know of no country where the sentiment against militarism is stronger than in the United States. If the league covenant goes into effect, the peace of the world is going to be preserved. The United States is enormously interested in Europe——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will ask the Senator not to interrupt me until I finish my answer. The United States sells most of its surplus products to Europe. Aside from any sentimental reason, Europe when facing destruction, Europe whose civilization has been actually in danger by this war, is a field in which we have deep interest. If we in the United States look over to Europe in times of prosperity and peace, we look upon the part of the world that is our greatest customer. Europe buys our surplus farm products, Europe buys the products of our mines, and Europe has begun to purchase in a large degree the products also of our factories. Now, if civilization is to go to wreck in Europe and by constant wars Europe sinks, as it may, to the state of Asia, we lose our greatest customer. So, aside from any altruistic reasons, aside from any ideals, the United States is interested not only in restoring peace to Europe for material reasons, but in keeping the peace in Europe.

Again, in this war, in which the United States has accumulated a debt of $26,000,000,000, she has incurred also the enmity of a large part of the people of Europe, and, if no device of civilization is formed to preserve the peace in the future, the United States must necessarily prepare to defend herself some day from the people whose enmity we have incurred—not only Europe but Japan.

There seems to have been a perfect madness on the part of Senators in this Chamber to offend and antagonize every nation in the world. Japan has been denounced in the most bitter and extreme terms, and Japan has been given to understand that the people of the United States view her with enmity. We have heard speeches here in this Chamber in denunciation of Great Britain and in criticism of France and in denunciation of all the peoples of the world, even those that have been associated with us. So I say, Mr. President, that if we are not ready to go into the league to help the world to maintain peace, we must prepare for war.

When the Senator from Missouri asks me what benefit we get out of it, I ask him, What benefit would we have had out of it if the league could have been established 10 years ago, before this war began? We would have escaped the expenditure of thousands of millions of dollars and the loss of fifty or sixty thousand men dead upon the fields of France and Flanders. The United States has much to gain by an arrangement of this kind.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, since the Senator asks me——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not asking the Senator anything. We have much to gain by entering into an agreement to maintain the peace of the world. The United States is the greatest nation in the world—the greatest in commerce, the greatest in wealth, the greatest in credit-giving power, the greatest in population—and the United States is interested in the peace of the world; and when the Senator asks me what benefit we have to derive from it, I say there are many benefits—much more than ideals—that we can derive if we can devise a plan to maintain the peace of the world.

I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator says that we are interested in the peace of the world. We are; but he then asserts that this League of Nations will give us that peace. There is the bone of contention. He assumes that it will; we assume that it will not; and when his assertion that it will give us peace is taken out of his syllogism there is nothing left.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yielded for a question. I hope the Senator will not make a speech in my time.

Mr. REED. The Senator did not say that he yielded merely for a question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator can take his own time to reply. I want to conclude what I have to say.

Mr. REED. Just let me say this, and I shall be very brief about it:

The Senator's main argument—and I just want to get that clear—is that we have incurred the enmity of all of Europe through this war, and that if we do not have the League of Nations all of Europe will come over here and conquer us.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, I did not say that.

Mr. REED. I think that was a fair construction of what the Senator said. If he did not mean that, then I think he will have to revise his remarks. Does the Senator think that, if we enter into a combination with our enemies, that will make them our friends—that we will be safe with men inside the house who are ready to attack us from the outside?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have not said what the Senator attributes to me. I have said that the time has come in the world's history when it is governed by democracies; that if by forming the league at this time we can maintain the results of the war, the world will remain in the hands of democracies; and these democracies, governed by public opinion, are entirely capable of making a contract with each other not to do the things that work for war and to do the things that work for peace.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question? He says the world is governed by democracies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I said so.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator think that Japan is a democracy?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is rapidly becoming a democracy.

Mr. REED. Oh, I may be rapidly becoming an angel, but I have not yet arrived at that stage.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I know whereof I speak when I say that Japan is rapidly becoming a democracy. The change that has come over the world represents the passage of the world from one stage to another. We are entering into a new era, just as much as the world entered into a new era when the Dark Ages passed away.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I decline to yield now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is just simply a question whether the United States is going to do its part in reorganizing the world for peace as it has always been organized for war. Heretofore the world has been organized for war. Every nation has used probably more than one-half of the revenues of its government for destructive purposes; and possibly there was no way to put an end to that condition until the fall of the German Empire and the Russian autocracy and the Austro-Hungarian Empire, all of which were bent on conquest; but that time has passed away. Great Britain is a democracy. Her Government responds more immediately to public opinion than the Government of the United States. Her cabinets rise and fall as the public opinion of Great Britain changes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I decline to yield.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. France has become a republic, and her government is in the hands of her people. Italy is a limited monarchy, ruled by a cabinet, not by a king, and that cabinet comes and goes in accordance with the public opinion of the people of Italy. The same is true of Spain. The same is true of Holland. The same is true of Belgium. The same is true of the Scandinavian countries to the north, and it is going to be true of Russia. Russia is going through the welter and the strife of a revolution, just as France did, and Russia will emerge into a republic, just as France emerged.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there? If Russia is emerging into a republic, will the Senator tell us why the fathers of the League of Nations sent their armies in on that republic?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will not insist on interrupting me when I have asked him not to do so.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have been good-natured in yielding to questions.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. NEW. Is it required of the members of the cabinet in these foreign nations that they shall have minds that track with that of the monarch?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I regret that the Senator from Indiana is not disposed to take seriously what I say. I am trying to make an argument to the effect that the world is now controlled by democracies, and that those democracies are controlled by public opinion; that Russia, which was an autocracy, is developing into a republic; that Germany has already become a republic; that in all those countries hereafter the power for war and for peace, instead of being in the control of a handful of men, is going to be in the control of the people; and that we can safely make a contract with those democracies, governed by those people, when we perhaps could not have safely made such a contract in the days when conquering empires ruled the world.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COLT. I understood the Senator to say that he thought it was dishonorable for the United States not to accept this covenant as it stands. This covenant comprises, I think, 26 articles. Is it not the duty of the Senate of the United States, as a coordinate branch of the treaty-making power, to examine into these articles, to see what they mean, and how far the interests of the United States are affected thereby? And if, upon examination and discussion, it should be found that one of those articles, in the opinion of the Senate, is detrimental to the United States, is there anything dishonorable in the United States saying that it refuses to be bound by that article, and that it excepts itself from that particular provision?

I should like to ask the Senator, further, if it is not the common practice, where a treaty embraces numerous articles, and where there are numerous contracting parties, for one of the parties to say that it will not be bound by a particular article or articles, and thereby make a conditional ratification, asking the other members if they choose to admit it into the contract upon the conditions which it imposes?

There can not be anything dishonorable, can there, for the Senate of the United States, in a treaty of this magnitude which was negotiated by the President, upon full review and consideration, to say that the United States ought not to be bound by some of the provisions of the treaty? Would the Senator's position be that we must practically take this covenant as it stands, and that we should not, under the circumstances, except ourselves from any of the articles? I do not take that view.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator has to some extent misunderstood me. I did not say it would be dishonorable for the United States to express dissent from a certain article. What I said was that it would be dishonorable for the United States, as the greatest and most powerful Nation of the world, to go into a league with other nations to do a certain thing, and then shirk our share of it. It is just the same as if the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Connecticut and I should sit down at a table and draw up articles of agreement under which we united to do a certain thing for the good of the community and for our mutual good, and then, when the three—the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Connecticut—had signed the agreement, if I should lean back and say, "Well, I am going to sign this on a little different basis. I am going to provide that I will not agree to do that which you have already agreed to do. I am going to release myself." I say that in a case of that kind I would be doing a dishonorable thing. I say that I would be a shirker in the great work of redeeming the world. I say that I would be putting upon the other nations of civilization the burden of maintaining the peace of the world, and running away from my duty myself. That is what I call dishonorable.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, the Senator is using general phrases. When France excepted herself from certain articles in the slave-trade treaty it was not regarded as dishonorable on her part; and, of course, if she took herself out from certain articles she took herself out from the responsibility of those articles. I maintain that it is not dishonorable for the United States to take herself out from any article in this covenant if she thinks, under the circumstances, it is proper for her to do so, leaving the other nations the right to pursue the same course or not, as they please. The principle is what I am contending for.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Carrying out the simile that I have used here, if I was not ready to assume an equal obligation with the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Connecticut I had better stay out of the league altogether and not get the benefits of it; and so I am in favor of the United States staying out of the league unless it is ready to go in as an equal and assume equal obligations with other members of the league.

Mr. COLT. That involves the proposition that the United States must take the league just as it stands. It involves the proposition that where a treaty is made between numerous parties involving many articles it is dishonorable for any one of the parties to take itself out from a certain article, thereby relieving itself from the responsibility of that article. No such principle exists with regard to treaty making. No principle exists permitting the President to negotiate a treaty and then throw upon the Senate the burden of ratifying that treaty as it stands. The effect of such a practice would be to relieve the Senate of all responsibility as a coordinate branch of the treaty-making power.

I maintain that in this great treaty, which calls for a certain departure on the part of America from its traditional policy, the Senate has a bounden duty to examine every article, and if we reach the conclusion that the United States should not be bound by that article it is our duty to take ourselves out from that article; and such a procedure is not dishonorable. This is the common practice that is pursued in every treaty embracing numerous articles and having numerous signatories.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, like the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], I have gone far afield. The question before the Senate is this reservation:

> That no member nation is required to submit to the league, its council, or its assembly for decision, report, or recommendation any matter which it considers to be a domestic question, such as immigration, labor, tariff, or other matter relating to its internal or coastwise affairs.

That reservation is clear and specific and no man can claim that under it the United States is in any possible peril. The only difference between it and the reservation presented on the other side is that this reservation of mine leaves the United States an equal with the other nations. It claims no rights exclusively for the United States, but accords to the others the same rights which we claim for ourselves over our domestic matters.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] made an accurate statement in the closing part of his remarks when he stated that he had traveled far afield and discussed a good many questions which were not strictly relevant to his amendment. But the Senator has not seemed to me from the beginning either to have had a clear conception of the difference between an amendment and a reservation, or if he has, he has not been able to convey his idea of the distinction between them to me. I prefer to think that he has not a clear conception of the fundamental difference between the two things, because I do not charge him with any lack of sincerity or any incapacity in the use of the English language.

The Senator in a somewhat inconsistent way charges us with having voted for some amendments to the treaty, and then, congratulating himself upon his present attitude, he offers an amendment to it himself. I voted for every amendment that the Committee on Foreign Relations recommended to this body, but the majority of the Senate at that time, led by the valiant and chivalric Senator from Nebraska, slaughtered them on the ground that they would defeat the treaty, that it would necessitate resubmission to the peace conference and reconvening the peace conference, although the peace conference sat there perfectly tranquil in Paris ready to receive and deal with anything that came before it at the time.

Now, however, it must be obvious to anybody, it seems to me, who wants to look at the question in its true aspect, that all the other signatory nations having ratified the treaty as it was written textually, having entered into the execution of the treaty and now operating under it in its original form, for us to offer a change in the text of the treaty making a change in the duties of all the parties who signed the contract, and are now in the performance of it, without their knowledge or consent, as well as a change in our own duties in respect to the treaty, of course it is, as the lawyers say, irrelevant and impertinent, not to say impossible and foolish.

This is the difference, if I am able to understand it, between an amendment and a reservation to the treaty. An amendment changes the text of the instrument as it was submitted to us. I suppose that statement is intelligible. Changing the text means striking some words out of it or inserting some additional words into it, or both. No reservation that the Senate has adopted to the treaty does any such thing. We realize that we can not change the text of the treaty now because as to other parties it is all accepted and in operation, and they have plainly said so. They have ratified it and approved it as it stands. We do not approve it as it stands and by reservations we say that the United States in ratifying the treaty understands that it shall not be bound to do certain things, or that it understands that the treaty in using certain words shall, so far as we are concerned, be construed to mean such and such a thing. That is, any reservation which we adopt, we adopt in our own proper right and authority, as we have a perfect right, and there are innumerable precedents for so doing. We are not meddling with the affairs of the other nations. We are defining our own duties if we ratify this thing and if the other powers are willing to receive our instrument of ratification without protest. We are saying: "We are willing to form this limited partnership with you if you want to have it on that basis. It is entirely optional and voluntary with you. If you do not like our construction of certain parts of the treaty, if you do not like the reservations of understandings that we have adopted as defining our own responsibility, you need not have us for a partner. We do not attempt to influence you; we do not attempt to tell you what you ought to have said was your duty to each other, and which you have said by ratifying the treaty. That is none of our business; but it is our business, and our exclusive business, to say what contract we will make with you; and it is your exclusive business to say whether you want us to make that contract with you or not. We make open profert and tender before the whole world of our understanding of a paper negotiated by the constitutional authority of this country, the President, to negotiate a proposition and present it to his constitutional and equal partner, the Senate, for its approval." We tender that paper with our conditions affixed, made in accordance with the Constitution of the United States in the performance of our constitutional duty thereunder; and if the powers want to say to us, "That is perfectly satisfactory to us," how in the world does it lie in the mouth of either the Senator from Nebraska or any other American citizen to stand here in the American Senate and charge us with being dishonest?

So overwrought and to such high tension of blood pressure do some superheated temperaments become when they throw off all restraint, both physical and intellectual, in their ravings about this chimerical instrument of world power that I am not astounded at any charge that they make. Their sublimated imaginations have run along with, so to speak, the minds of Don Quixote and the faithful Sancho Panza so long that they think the new order of things, the special dispensation of which they have just enjoyed, is already in operation, and that certain of them have attained a new state of holiness and sanctification which utterly removes their immaculate presence from the contact of viler things, and that they have liberty to fulminate, belch fire, denounce, and hurl their anathemas upon the unregenerate even before they see this thing more or less through a glass darkly and without ultimate vision. Heretofore no restraint has been able to control their imaginings and vaporings.

But, Mr. President, the earth is still on its axis and inclined at the regular angle to the ecliptic and is spinning around the sun at the usual rate in spite of the covenant of the league, though I do not doubt that in its operation the covenant of the league will make certain unexpected changes in our daily lives if we become a party to it.

There is one thing that makes a doubting Thomas sometimes sit up and pinch himself and see if he is awake, and that is to see how the original embryo, and what might be called the model upon which the thing has been founded, is now "demonstrating" in actual operation. They have the league over there, and our allies and associates, Great Britain, France, and Italy, have a little difference of opinion with Jugo-Slavia about a little place called Fiume. The league, in its omniscience, is now fulminating. It is operating, not through its apprentices or its dummies or its hired men, whose minds run along with the people who appoint them, but it is operating through the master minds themselves. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning for three pages is filled with an account of the sweet harmony which is now existing between Mr. Lloyd-George and M. Millerand and the President as to the treachery with which they have dealt with each other in repudiating their most solemn agreements which they had jointly entered into.

Mind you, this is just in starting the sacred league that is to insure tranquillity and harmony and justice all over the universe. Before they have opened Pandora's box, right on the inside of the box, these gentlemen are accusing each other of bad faith and are using language that really hurts my feelings.

The President has frequently advised us—I will omit the preamble—that a "new day having dawned," no longer do these wicked nations view each other with suspicion, and so forth, but have all engaged in a mission of service to pure philanthropy, and are desirous of exhibiting their lofty ideals to each other when nobody is looking; that they are simply engaged in altruistic enterprises, not mentioning Egypt or Persia or Syria, or anything on the side that they got away with and openly "arrived at." The President, in rebuking these people who have not attained to the proper state of holiness and sanctity, says:

It is a time to speak with utmost frankness. The Adriatic issue as it now presents itself raises the fundamental question as to whether the American Government—can on any terms cooperate with its European associates in the great work of maintaining the peace of the world by removing the primary causes of war.

That is "him" [laughter]—

My God! That is what they get first. They wheezed two or three times when they received that. Then the President went on, lest they should forget, and said:

The President—

I say the President went on. This is signed by a gentleman who spells his name L-a-n-s-i-n-g. He wrote the letter—

The President desires to say that if it does not appear feasible to secure acceptance of the just and generous concessions offered by the British, French, and American Governments to Italy in the joint memorandum of those powers of December 9, 1919, which the President has already clearly stated to be the maximum concession—

Not the obtaining of justice, but the maximum "concession"— that the Government of the United States can offer, the President desires to say that he must take under serious consideration the withdrawal of the treaty with Germany and the agreement between the United States and France of June 28, 1919, which are now before the Senate, and permitting the terms of the European settlement to be independently established and enforced by the associated Governments.

You notice the word "allied" has been dropped therefrom. Just think of that!

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. There is a suggestion there of the immediate withdrawal of the treaty, which of course can be done now. But assume that the Senate had approved the treaty and it had been delivered, he could not then get it out as it is now proposed, by stopping it. We would have to stay in for at least two years, would we not?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. REED. It is well enough to remark in passing that the Senate has left the President in a happy position where he can withdraw it up to the present time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We would only be eligible to withdraw, then, if we had performed all our duties under the covenant and all our international duties of every kind.

Mr. REED. To the satisfaction and approval and with the unanimous vote of all of the members of the league.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what it would be but for what the Senator from Nebraska is pleased to designate as our "destructive" reservation. These elements of destruction that offend the Senator from Nebraska are what the Senate considers to be necessary to protect this country and its constitutional institutions from utter destruction and this country from denationalization; and they are said to be "destructive."

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, there has been some discussion by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] with reference to the great benefits the United States would obtain under the treaty. Would the Senator from Connecticut consider those benefits to be of incalculable value if they were all to be thrown away on account of a few Italians on the Adriatic coast?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The President, of course, has stated from the beginning in his intense desire to have us ratify the covenants of the league and the treaty that the heart of the world would be broken if we did not do it; that Europe would lapse into chaos; that it was our plan duty and our Christian moral obligation to enter this thing; that we ought not to suspect anybody of ulterior motives, but that we ought to take the lead in the chivalrous mission to maintain the spiritual leadership of the universe, to jump right into this thing and take the league and hurrah for a new revelation, a human nature newly sanctified and rid of all its mundane attributes; and now at the very first intimation of a difference of opinion between him and the very gentlemen with whom he sat for six months in a dark closet in Paris, demonstrating the virtue of open diplomacy openly arrived at, he denounces them and says the league can go hang for all of him, that the heart of the world can break into its different valves and lobes and pulsate for themselves, because he can not have his way about some little thing that on the map of Europe would look about like the dot of a red pencil on it; the whole business is to be wrenched apart and he will withdraw the thing, and they can not only establish their own order but they can enforce it themselves at their own expense.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator referred to the place where the makers of the treaty sat as a dark closet, which I think describes it very accurately.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. En camera, I think the French is.

Mr. LODGE. I only call attention to the fact that Mr. Keynes, in his book, which most of us have read, the Economic Consequences of the Peace, speaks of finding them in a small and overheated room.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There was another one there into which they withdrew on proper occasions.

Mr. LODGE. It is highly probable.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Senator while cataloguing the evils which would result if we withdrew from the league, that the heart of the world is to be broken if we do not have our way about Fiume, that the civilization of Europe is to be wrecked, forgot to name the more important thing from my viewpoint, just mentioned by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. He told us that all the European countries are now at enmity with us and that they are likely to come over here to conquer us, and we might as well prepare for war if we do not adopt the covenant of the League of Nations. So it appears that we are about to plunge ourselves into a great and destructive war with all the world, according to the Senator from Nebraska, over the right of some Italians in a city on the Adriatic, a city which most of us never heard of until it came up in the treaty. I hope the Senator will not overlook that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I do not overlook it. That is what we would be about to-day if we had put our foot into the trap. But we have not done so yet. If we do not put our foot into the trap, if we are liable to get into war with the rest of the world which wants to drag us in, at least I shall console myself with the consciousness that I am fighting under my own flag and for my own country and for something that I know something about!

I venture to say that the American people, for whom this Government is supposed to act, whether it represents them or not, are absolutely ignorant about the technical issues that are contained in the first four pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to-day, embracing the state papers interchanged between the President and the British and French premiers on the Fiume-Italian question. When the President tells them that it is the attitude of America that this, that, or the other shall be done, and that it is a fundamental and indisputable sine qua non of any participation of this Nation in the affairs of Europe that they should take his view of it, why, he is simply saying what he thinks personally.

There is no way of ascertaining what the views of America are on that question at all. Nobody here on the floor of the Senate, although we are pretty intimately associated, knows what the Senate itself would say if that question were submitted to it as an independent, unprejudiced tribunal to arbitrate the question. There is nobody who has the slightest idea what the United States Senate would say about that question or as to what was just and right. Here a voice issues from America, is heard in London and Paris and Rome, asserting all sorts of things with the greatest assurance, not to say cocksureness, as to what America thinks about this controversy. I have no doubt that, inasmuch as there are many millions of Italians and Jugo-Slavs in this country, America may be viewing this question with mixed emotions; at least, I think the ballot box would be somewhat mixed on it if anybody were running on the issue in one of our big metropolitan cities.

That is the sort of thing that is going on. I shall not quote at length from the State papers, but on page 3351 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 27, 1920, is the reply, signed Millerand, D. Lloyd-George, and Davis, to the President under date of London, February 17, 1920, which reads, in part, as follows:

> The Governments of France and Great Britain, therefore, view with consternation the threat of the United States Government to withdraw from the comity of nations because it does not agree with the precise terms of the Adriatic settlement. The difficulty of reconciling ethnographic with other considerations is certainly not greater in the Adriatic case and does not produce more anomalous results than in the case of other parts of the general treaties of peace difficulties which were recognized by President Wilson and his colleagues where they agreed to the best settlement practicable at the time because their machinery for peaceful readjustment had come into being; also ethnologic reasons can not be the only ones to be taken into account is clearly shown by the inclusion of 3,000,000 Germans in Czechoslovakia and the proposals so actively supported by the United States delegation for the inclusion within Poland of great Ruthenian majorities, exceeding 3,500,000 in number, to Polish rule. Though the British representatives saw serious objections to this arrangement, the British Government have not thought themselves justified in reconsidering on that account their membership in the League of Nations. The Governments of France and Great Britain, therefore, earnestly trust that whatever the final view of the United States Government as to the Adriatic settlement may be, they will not wreck the whole machinery for dealing with international disputes by withdrawing from the treaties of 1919 because their view is not adopted in this particular case. That would be to destroy the hopes now entertained by countless millions of people all over the world that the most enduring and most beneficent part of the treaty of peace was the constitution of machinery whereby the defects of treaties could be remedied, and that changing conditions and requirements of mankind could be adjusted by processes of reason and justice instead of by the balancing of armaments and resort to war. The Governments of France and Great Britain can not believe that it is the purpose of the American people to take a step so far-reaching and terrible in its effects on a ground which has the appearance of being so inadequate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know how the Senator from Connecticut views that statement on the part of the premiers of France and England wherein they seem to place so much confidence in this league. To my mind it is a very remarkable exhibition of insincerity upon the part of both of them. It is a matter of history that neither Lloyd-George nor Clemenceau nor Millerand have ever had any confidence in the league and over and over again have expressed themselves to that effect, privately and semipublicly. I simply call the Senator's attention to the manner in which propaganda is being constantly put out by those in Europe who want to accomplish certain purposes and undertake to accomplish them by eulogizing the league because they think the American people believe in it. The statesmen referred to do not believe in the league; they never have believed in it. They were unwilling to accept it as a guaranty of peace in Europe; they were unwilling to go into the league until certain prerequisite conditions were fulfilled which, to their mind, made it more safe for them. I do not, therefore, accept the statement of those gentlemen as being made with any degree of sincerity whatever.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think I take the same view of that subject as does the Senator from Idaho. I had not commented on the language which I read. The Senator took the proper occasion immediately upon its quotation to call attention to his view about it.

Of course, when these gentlemen say to Mr. Wilson that they can not believe that the American people will "wreck the whole machinery for dealing with international disputes," and so forth, they are using the lingo of Mr. Wilson to him; they are appealing to him in the well-known vernacular in which he appealed to them. It is the kind of talk that is prevalent upon this subject. Everything is going to wreck unless the league and the covenant go through.

Mr. THOMAS. It is diplomatic reciprocity.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is diplomatic reciprocity, or comity that exists between comrades, "hands across the sea." [Laughter.] They understand it all right; but this is a public document and it must keep up the superheated temperature of the crusade. It was a crusade, and the crusaders, having learned the international volapuk by which they communicate their spiritual emotions to each other, find it difficult to discard it now.

But, Mr. President, the world did get along for I do not know how many hundred thousand or millions of years without any league, and some of us thought we had arrived at quite a stage of civilization. At any rate, we have become advanced and intelligent enough in this country to establish a Government of constitutional guaranties; a Government by which the people, through their representatives, could carry out their will; a Government in which law and order and life and property were fairly well secured; a society in which every man, rich or poor, learned or ignorant, can act with equal force and effect at the ballot box; a Government in which whatever revolution existed consisted of simply "turning the rascals out" and putting the honest victors in their places until they in turn were subjected to a similar fate; but there was no blood letting or throat cutting about it. However, that evidently is no longer sufficient, and that Government of free men, which our fathers established in a bloody revolution against one of the very gentlemen with whom we are now interchanging this uplift talk, is now to merge itself, according to this league and covenant, in a supergovernment, and all these things that are embarrassing to any nation in the world are hereafter to be cared for by this supergovernment in the manner indicated by the judicial temperament which is manifested by these great world-powering statesmen, who have filled four pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning with an interchange of drolleries.

There may be Americans who think "that is a consummation devoutly to be wished." As I have said from the beginning, this treaty and its constitution for a League of Nations—it was somewhat imprudently, although more correctly, named in its first edition as a "constitution for a new world order of things"—that constitution for a new world order, now called a covenant for a League of Nations, with what will be established in it and what it will acquire by its rotary movement in operation, like a snowball rolling down hill in a wet snow, with its permanent secretariat, now so beautifully filled by a British duke, and all its minor positions occupied by foreigners, in continuous operation, with its hordes of paid emmissaries, inspectors, and trouble makers of various kinds, will constitute a new and hitherto undreamed of political unit of power in the world; and that is what it is intended to do.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. REED. In that connection I should like to call the Senator's attention to the London Times of February 11, quoting Lord Curzon, as follows:

> And I believe most profoundly that in the seriousness in which the council of the league approaches the problems before us, in the authority which it acquires—and everybody ought to lend a hand to magnify that authority—and in the spirit which characterizes its debates and its action will be the one real hope, not of Europe alone but of the world, that we are to advance into a new era.

I call attention particularly to the expression "and everybody ought to lend a hand to magnify that authority." So that already, before this league is formed, at least before we are a responsible party to it, the proposition is to "magnify its authority," and that coming from a responsible British statesman.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes, Mr. President; I thank the Senator. The more people dream about this covenant and this league and the functions which it is to exercise the more it ought to repel free American citizens who have been brought up upon the doctrine of home rule and minding their own business and avoiding entangling alliances and the more should it incline them to keep out of this thing.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. While the Senator is discussing the official correspondence between our Government and the representatives of Great Britain and France, as printed in the RECORD, I should like to ask him his idea as to what the authority of these representatives is? In what capacity are they acting in the settlement of this particular dispute in Italy? As I understand, the League of Nations, under the treaty, has been actually put in force, but it is not the League of Nations that is functioning in this instance. Who gives to the representatives of Great Britain and France, and now the President in connection with them, the authority to settle this particular dispute? And if they settle this dispute between Jugo-Slavia and Italy without anybody selecting them, without having been selected by those Governments to settle it, why can they not be self-appointed arbitrators to settle any other dispute between any other nations? When are they going to cease and let the League of Nations, that has already been organized, get into operation and function?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, Mr. President, we get no information at all from the State Department or the White House about any of these matters, so that in answering the Senator's question I am left to my own guesses, so to speak, as to what is going on and why. I assume that the peace conference which framed the German treaty is functus officio; I do not know, but I assume so from the fact that the treaty has gone into operation among the European powers, and I suppose that the peace commissioners, so far as their duties in regard to the German treaty are concerned, are out of office, although I do not know, because I have no word of the President resigning to himself or disbanding any of his fellow commissioners, except his late Secretary of State. I assume that what is going on is that the various peace commissions of the different principal allied and associated powers, at the head of which in each instance except our own was the premier of the Nation, are still in operation upon the Austrian treaty, which involves the boundaries between Austria and Italy, and so forth, and also in relation to the Turkish treaty. As to the Bulgarian treaty, I do not remember, although it may be in the same category.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. How can that be true as far as the Austrian treaty is concerned, because that has already been signed and is in the possession of the President here, and a copy, although it did not come directly from the President, has been printed as a Senate document? But, even if that were possible, why is it that the representatives of only two nations assume to act? Why are not the other belligerents taken into consideration if that is one of the things to be settled in making a treaty, let us say, between Austria and Great Britain and France and Italy and Turkey and Bulgaria and Greece? Where are the representatives of the other belligerent nations?

The point I want to get at is, Why are these two representatives, one from France and one from Great Britain, assuming to settle this dispute, and where do they get their authority, and whom do they represent in such a settlement?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I can not answer by the card, as I stated before.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. If I correctly understand the situation with regard to the Fiume dispute, France and Great Britain, each having a treaty made heretofore with Italy for the purpose of inducing Italy to enter the war, are trying to compose the conflict between the terms of that treaty and the requirements of the Jugo-Slavs, and they therefore have upon themselves, or have assumed the burden of making, if possible, some disposition of that impasse which the recognition of the Jugo-Slav nation has brought about. I do not vouch for that, but such is my understanding.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Connecticut will be kind enough to permit me, I am only asking for the purpose of getting information and elucidating the question; but if we assume that the Senator from Colorado is correct, still there must come a time before this can become a part of some treaty—and I do not see how it can be effective unless it does, so long as the League of Nations is not acting—there must eventually come a time when the nations themselves must at least give their approval.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; and I presume that time will come, if it is possible to suggest something that will be acceptable to the two contending nations.

Mr. NORRIS. Then we must assume, I take it, that the settlement of these two nations, although only representing themselves, and joining now with the President of the United States—the President having objected because he was not in, so that will take Great Britain, France, and the United States in on it—we must assume that their settlement, whatever it may be, is going to be formally approved by the nations that are interested in the particular treaty of which this must be a part.

Mr. THOMAS. Why, certainly. No other nation would have the temerity to question the settlement which was agreed upon by the three principal parties to the treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. That is interesting to know. In other words, some other nation which technically, at least, had the same right to be heard, and whose signature was necessary for the approval of the treaty, would probably get into disrepute with these great powers if it presumed to have anything to say about what had been settled for it in advance and failed to put its name on the dotted line.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator's conclusion is a perfectly logical one.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there can be no question that the weaker powers whose rights and properties are being dealt with by those who are negotiating this series of treaties will have to submit. They are helpless. When the principal allied and associated powers, who won this war and beat the great Triple Alliance which had been the terror of the world for nearly a quarter of a century—they had their armies and navies intact, greatly enhanced and increased in power. They had added thereto the entire German Navy and shipping, the disposition and operation of which could absolutely put an embargo and blockade upon the products of other nations and starve them to death, if necessary, to enforce the decrees of the great powers who are settling the disputes and determining the rights of these people who have a right to self-determination under one of the 14 points. What can Jugo-Slavia do if they are dissatisfied with the boundary between themselves and Italy or Austria? Why, immediately the league notifies its members that here is a matter concerning the peace of the world, and they make recommendations to the members of the league as to what shall be done about it. They will decide it. The treaty says they shall recommend, and they will recommend the quotas of ships and of troops and of money which the members of the league are to bring forward in the peaceful and benevolent promotion of the decision arrived at by the league in secret, star-chamber proceedings; and when our friends who are trying with honeyed words to toll us into this well-baited trap come to those articles of the covenant which, so far as they dare in cold type, set down that the star-chamber council is to apportion the quotas of death-dealing force to be furnished by each constituent member in promoting the reign of peace on earth and good will toward men—when the covenant itself sets that down, and the league is to decide how they are to be used to enforce its decisions, how much of self-determination by the poor and defenseless peoples of the world is there to be in actual practice?

If Jugo-Slavia does not accept the terms prescribed by these gentlemen who are writing state papers to each other, Jugo-Slavia had better look out; that is all there is to that. That is the way peace is to be established on earth, and to be maintained. But when article 10 is submitted to us for our approval in the name of the American people—for we represent the people, and not simply what these state papers call "the Government"; it sounds big and looks big when written with a capital "G," but it is written by one man—when we hesitate to say that we approve of the contract contained in article 10, by which we are to be made parties, and the principal parties, to an agreement by which we undertake to respect and preserve not only the territorial integrity but the political independence of every member of the league; when we hesitate and want to know what that means, and say that it is prudent for us to understand what obligation we, as the representatives of our respective States, are saddling upon the people of our States, before we do this, we are charged by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] with dishonor.

Mr. President, the dishonor would come if we adopted the other course. The dishonor would come to this country and to that flag if we agreed to article 10, assuming any such contract as that. Then, when the emergency arose, and the council called upon us for our quota of troops and our billions of treasure, if we, the Senate of the United States and the great House of Representatives, should enter into a debate as to whether we were morally bound or legally bound or actually bound to do what the council said, it would be claimed that we were dishonored if we did not "go along" with what would be declared to be the unanimous voice of civilization!

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator speaks of the council calling upon the United States to furnish a certain quota. The Senator, of course, will admit that the council does not call.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will use the word "recommend," if the Senator prefers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the council advises.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, what is the difference?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There never has been any question but that that is merely advice, which each Government is free to accept or reject. The Senator also admits that the council can not even give the advice unless it is unanimous, and that the United States in perpetuity has a member of that council, and the United States can control the action of the member of the council, so that the United States is in a position to prevent the council even giving the advice. How, then, can the Senator become so alarmed as to what advice the council may give?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not particularly alarmed, because we are going to keep out of this thing, Mr. President; but it has taken nearly a year to inform the American people of what they were trying to stampede them into. If we were in it, I would be alarmed, and so would the people; and I will tell the Senator how it would operate.

The Senator brings up again the specious plea that we can not be hurt, because there must be unanimity in this "advice"—think of it!—the "advice" of a council that is to rule the world! You might call it "the friendly aid and succor," if you wanted to, or if you wanted to put a little more honeyed candy on the operation. He wants to know how we can be hurt by it if it has to be unanimous and we have a delegate there.

Well, this is the way it would be done:

The President would appoint Col. House, or Mr. Bainbridge Colby, or George Creel, or some of those people whose minds "run along" with his sufficiently, as our delegate on the council of the League of Nations, and he would be there because his mind "ran along" with the President's, and if it did not he would not be there very long. He would get what they call in diplomatic language his "exequatur," his ticket of leave. It would be an indefinite leave, too. He would be home on leave, but with about the same reputation as an ordinary "ticket-of-leave" man has. Suppose the dispute between Italy and Jugo-Slavia about Fiume comes up. Nothing could be done wrongly, the Senator claims, because it all has to be unanimous. Well, while Col. House, with every sensitive tentacle stretched to intercept the most delicate agitation of the ether waves by wireless, was sitting there quivering with the anticipation of hearing his master's voice, suddenly there would be two or three clicks of the instrument operated by Mr. Tumulty en camera in the White House, and Col. House would assume a virtuous attitude and say, "I cast my vote on this great question in the interest of the plain people. I make it unanimous."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not finished with it yet. I have just started.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut further yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is aware that this side has expressed its entire willingness to have any delegate appointed either to the council or to the assembly confirmed by the Senate and his powers defined by the Congress of the United States. Under those circumstances, how can the Senator still claim that such a delegate would be under the exclusive control of the President?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why, Mr. President, I do not claim that he would be under the President's dictation if Congress should say that he should not do anything without an act of Congress; but what sort of a league are you going to have if our participation in the spiritual leadership of the universe is to consist in having a puppet over there controlled by Congress, like a bear dancing around a hand organ with a chain around his neck?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator if that reservation has yet been adopted and made a part of our resolution of ratification?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why, the Senator argued with us in the Foreign Relations Committee that it was one of the most abhorrent and destructive of all of the reservations that we had proposed; that it was a reflection upon the President and an attempt to hinder and minimize the participation of this great country in this great international body.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, does the Senator refer to me?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why, certainly; and to the Senator's colleagues also.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On the other hand, I have from the first taken the position that the powers of the delegate of the United States upon the council and in the assembly should be defined by Congress. I have at all times advocated the idea that such a representative should be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and that his powers should be outlined by an act of Congress. The Senator must know that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would the Senator be willing to say that our delegate, sitting 3,000 miles away from us in conference with the other delegates, our fellow members of the league, should not cast a vote upon any subject without instructions from Congress?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not say that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. Unless the Senator does say that he leaves the man loose to bind us.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have said that these powers could be defined, and ought to be defined, by Congress, and when it comes to voting on a question which involves possible war and the advising of nations to raise an army, he certainly should be under the control of an act of Congress. I hope the Senator will not again put me in the position of claiming that the delegate of the United States should be exclusively under the control of the President of the United States, because I have never believed it, I have never said it, and I have always advocated the idea that his powers should be defined by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator would not vote for a resolution of ratification which contained a reservation that this delegate might not cast a vote except by authority of an act of Congress, because it would render him impotent. Of course, we might say that he shall not vote to put this country into war, but nobody expects him to vote for any such thing, and I have not claimed that he would vote for such a thing. All I claim is that the advice which he would give, the advice in which he would join, would be advice which, if it were accepted, would put us into war many times; and when that advice has been arrived at, under direction of the President who appoints his delegate, and under the direction of other delegates appointed by the premiers or the heads of the various Governments, our fellow members of the league, and a decision has been made unanimous to advise a certain thing and they all agree to it, when the matter comes before Congress, the President having agreed to it in advance, the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, with his party here in Congress either in control or in a minority and in either case solid behind him pressing for it, with the whole great emergency staring civilization in the face, I want to see the puny, pigmy-minded Congressman who would rise in his place here and defy the views of civilization. Compared with the pressure that has been put upon this body for now over a year demanding that we should sign this paper without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" and merely mumbling a few interpretative reservations, which mean nothing at all, about our understandings, with nobody else saying they agree to them, the pressure that would then be put upon us to carry out that advice would be a thousandfold more than it has been at this session of Congress, and which has already been nearly enough, in view of the suppliant attitude of some Senators, to accomplish its purpose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has shifted his position.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will shift back again.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He now claims that the Congress of the United States would not have enough independence so to define the duties of the American representative in the council of the league or in the assembly of the league as to keep us out of war; but what the Senator said when I rose to interrupt him was that we were likely to be embroiled in a war against our will, because the council might call upon us to furnish soldiers.

I called the Senator's attention to the fact that the council does not make the call in the first place; that all it does is to advise; that we are free to accept or reject that advice, like any other nation; that that advice can not even be given until the representative of the United States concurs in it; and that that representative can be bound by act of Congress in advance, so that he can not do it without consulting the views of the United States. Can the Senator get away from that conclusion?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have gotten away from it twice, but the Senator comes right back to it. I will get away the third time.

The situation is this: If you bind your delegate effectually, so that he is responsive only to Congress and not to the President, you destroy the efficiency of the league, because it can not operate; it can not act in emergencies, where a rush is to be made by what the Senator is so fond of calling a predatory nation upon its neighbor. It is a council of nine and can meet and advise something quickly; but if the representative of the greatest and richest and most powerful nation member of the league, the pack horse of the league, who is expected to pay most of the expenses and do most of the work in its passion for service and altruism, can not say yes or no until a special session of Congress is called, if we are in vacation, and we organize and debate upon how much our moral obligation weighs at that time, it will not have a very serious deterrent effect upon the nation whose troops are then crossing the bridges of the international river which divides it from its victim.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There may be some force in what the Senator says, but he has been compelled to abandon the position which he took a few moments ago that the council could involve us in war without our consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; it would not involve us in war, because we would dishonor ourselves and not go into war. What I want to do is to get away from the "juggling fiends"—

> That keep the word of promise to our ear
> And break it to our hope!

I want either to assume the obligation or to refuse to assume it. The Senator wants to adopt article 10, by which foreign nations are going to be made to think that they can rely upon us as their ever-present help in time of trouble; just to sign it, guaranteeing the political independence and territorial integrity of every European and Asiatic member of the league, and when they call for help then we are to enter upon a casuistical debate upon the extent of our moral obligations, in parentheses, if any, to save civilization again. It is because, having had experience in the debate of being denounced as dishonorable people, we do not want to sign a dubious contract, as a result of which anybody can say in the future that we have made a scrap of paper of this. Is that fair to America or is it not? Our fellow members of the league are entitled to know what we are going to do if they make this international treaty with us.

Lord Grey, who is a great statesman and has had great experience in diplomacy, as we all know, came over here and waited for months for some purpose or other which was never fully revealed, to me at least, and then he sought his island home. Within a few days the Thunderer, Lord Northcliffe's vox populi, had a lengthy communication from Lord Grey, who is an observant gentleman and learned several things in this country even if he did not get into the White House. In that paper he said that he had been on the ground here, that he had talked with many Americans of all beliefs in relation to the treaty, and that he was there to say to them that if they proposed to have any dealings with this country the basis of their dealings and the basis of the obligations that would be assumed by this country were contained in the reservations which the Senate had already adopted concerning the treaty.

He knew perfectly well what the reservation was on article 10. That reservation was that we declined to assume any obligation to protect anybody's territorial integrity or political independence. We do not ask anybody to protect ours. We do not ask this European or Asiatic league to protect the political independence of Uncle Sam nor to protect his territorial integrity. We do not protect our own territorial integrity along the Mexican border. Any bandit is free to kidnap an American citizen and string him up until he can find the resources of his friends and then name his price per head, and the Army and the Navy and the air fleet are daily ransomed in their uniforms from the agents of our great and good friend Carranza, the first chief.

But we have not called upon Europe to do it. We have called upon our own Government without success, but we never yet have demanded that Europe should do it. I believe Germany did come to our aid once and take off our distressed people from a Mexican city—I think it was Vera Cruz—when our own people would not do it. But we never yet have asked Europe to protect us.

Why do they want to drag us into protecting their political independence? Just think of it! Is it so that no government in Europe or Asia or South America is to be allowed to do anything that tends to overthrow the political independence of some other government in which we have only the most remote influence without our being summoned, under our guaranty and international undertaking, to maintain that existing status? Is it true that the people of this country actually, when you put it right up to a matter-of-fact, brass-tack vote, want the Senate to sign a contract so that if the people of Russia shall take it into their heads to march across the boundary of East India to aid an East Indian uprising against their British—what shall I call them—"benefactors" we have got to go in and put conscription back into force and summon from East, West, South, and North our military array and re-create the Shipping Board—which I hope by that time will have been abolished—to commence to build ships of mortar and steel and wood, and to have a new crusade for Liberty bonds and the Red Cross to raise money to go over and help Great Britain to keep East India, a member of the league, under the control of the British Empire? Is that what the royal American farmer wants? If he does not want it he had better keep shut of this thing, because we shall be lectured and bothered and badgered and denounced by the peoples with whom we are now on friendly relations if we do not come in to settle their troubles for them when they hoist the danger signal.

How does the unanimous requirement of the covenant protect us? You should remember this: Our delegate who sits on the council of the League of Nations engaging in these secret proceedings sits in an atmosphere to which he is not accustomed. It is a highly rarified and charged atmosphere. The delegate who sits upon the assembly to which cases can be removed from the council, and must be removed upon the mere request of any party in interest, is a gentleman who a year or two before the crisis arises left his country and has from that time lived in foreign parts. He is surrounded by the atmosphere of Europe. He reads the European newspapers. He talks several European languages or else he would not be capable of conversing with his colleagues. Every morning when he gets up he is confronted by the interests and the incidents that have happened in the capital where he is temporarily sojourning. His whole environment is that of Europe. He is under the control of the President of the United States, who appointed him. The President of the United States gets his information from his representative delegate over there.

Instead of selfishness and greed having been eliminated from human nature by the mere resolution of the Senate ratifying the treaty, human nature will go on just as it always has, and there will be just as much opportunity within the league and within the council and within the assembly for nations to look after their self-interest as there was without it, and unless selfishness has been abandoned and nations no longer look after themselves our delegate there—our one lone delegate—will be subject always to his local atmosphere and environment, to the entertainment and the numberless arts which are practiced so successfully by the diplomacy of the Old World upon our one American delegate.

He goes into the chamber alone. He is there with eight foreigners. As I said, all the President knows about what goes on behind those closed doors, in which there is an eight-to-one foreign majority, is what our delegate tells him. Our delegate and the President, having corresponded by wireless, determine the attitude of America, and every man from Alaska to Florida and from Maine to the Hawaiian Islands under the jurisdiction of the American flag is bound by that action.

When our representative, under the instructions or the advice of the President, unless there is such a reservation or act to deprive him of his legitimate powers and render him an impotent figure, sitting there as an emblem of the impotency of this country, makes that verdict unanimous, it means something to us. You can not get away from that. There is no use to talk about it being a debating society or that it is only advice, which we can repudiate. It was upon a subject that was of sufficient international gravity to enlist the most careful thought of the ablest men of all the members of this great League of Nations, and our delegate certainly can not cast his vote except as directed by the President. If the President wants to make the vote unanimous and our man declines to do it, what becomes of him? He is not a free agent. The other men are. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is eternally right when he says that it is impossible for this country to enter into a combination providing for a council and an assembly, to be in continuous session in Europe, and appoint an accredited representative to take part in its proceedings and then to repudiate his decision.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's last statement is equally applicable to Part XIII. Once we appoint our representatives, we are in, are we not, and at least morally bound by the conclusion of the majority, or the two-thirds, which under some circumstances is made necessary in their proceedings?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; the Senator is entirely right. There is no getting away from it as a practical thing, and every American knows it. I have said repeatedly, and the more I say it the more I am convinced by my own repetition of the truth of it, that you can not half enter into an international alliance. The thing involves good faith or bad faith. It involves entire cooperation or else charges of betrayal.

There are some, and I have no quarrel with them—I am grateful to them for coming as far as they do, and I know they are acting in good faith—who believe that we have rendered America safe if we put on the reservations that the Senate has adopted. I agree with them that we have rendered the part we take in the operation of this great international machine for the enforcement of its will upon the rest of the world as safe as we can render it by the use of language; that we have protected ourselves by these reservations so far as mere words can do it. But, Mr. President, when this foreign assembly, utterly without any warrant from the people of America, have sat for a week or a month, being drawn from one position to another, and our delegate, being operated upon in various manners, drawn from one admission to another, finally take their view of it, what do our reservations amount to really?

It will have been demonstrated that they are mere paper reservations; that they can not control the practice of the thing; that they can not control the operation of it. We can say that our domestic questions shall not be under the jurisdiction of either the council or the assembly. Well, we can say it, but in the great interweaving of the commercial and other transactions of the world, the blending of interstate into foreign commerce, the mutual interplay of all the great financial and commercial relations of the nations of the world, these reservations and the things with which they deal will fade into "innocuous desuetude"; they will be worth nothing in practice. When our delegate wants to repel the overpowering strength of the eight foreigners who are forcing him into a corner to secure that one vote necessary to unanimity, when he hunts through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of to-day or yesterday to pick out the little reservation which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has now pending before the Senate, in order to hold it up to these Europeans, I can see the look on their faces. They will simply laugh at it. "Why, yes," they will say, "that is what the recalcitrant Senate thought back in 1920, but the world has moved; it is now 1924, and you have been associated with us, going along with us, and our great international bankers have made all these interlocking, guaranteed poolings of the debts of the war, and their commissions are all based upon your voting to go along with us. My God! you are not going to desert us now; the crack of doom will impend, and we shall hold you up as a 'hermit nation,' and there are the provisions for boycotts in this league, and all sorts of horrible things will happen to you." And the President will order him to vote with them.

There is nothing to it. This is either a good thing or it is a bad thing. Those who think it is a good thing ought to be perfectly willing to vote for it as it stood, as 38 Democrats did; those who think it is a good thing ought not to put on any reservations, because it does not need them; those who think it is a bad thing ought, if they have sense enough to see that it is a bad thing, to have sense enough to know that a bad thing can not be made a good thing by a few reservations. Here is a great international trust to be organized, and we are a little leery about trusts; we think they are against public policy and against democracy, and we do not like to go in; but we will say, "Well, if you will let us in in a limited liability kind of way, so that we can claim that we are not really in the trust, and will put in some things to save our faces in case we are indicted for a criminal conspiracy, we will join."

It does not "listen good" to me, Mr. President. I believe that America, if it wants international leadership, if it wants to establish its ideal of morality and fair play and justice, if it is higher than that of other nations—and we think it is—will stand an infinitely better chance of accomplishing those objects by staying out of the intricacies and concealed and half-visible doubts and entaglements of this league. Standing clear, America can be of a thousand times more influence for justice and for international good will and for peace and good order upon the earth as the free, independent America, which we were founded to be and hitherto always have been, than we can as the internationalized and denationalized partner of this new internationalism.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the pending controversy over Fiume is very prominent just now, because of the publication of the correspondence between the President and the two principal members of the supreme council, of which we have just been informed. It presents a situation which seems to be fraught with tremendous possible consequences and affords a graphic illustration of the perils which I fear will beset the United States in the event it becomes a partner and associate in the proposed League of Nations.

The extent of the territory involved is trivial, but the consequences which may flow from its forcible adjustment or even from a peaceful solution seem to me to be very serious and far-reaching.

The insistence of the President upon the understanding which he approved during the closing days of the last year and which he now maintains must be observed, unless the two nations which are directly in interest shall otherwise agree, which is highly improbable, will in all likelihood encourage and stimulate the Jugo-Slavic nation to an insistence upon all that is involved in that agreement. It is but natural that, having the sanction of the greatest Nation in the world behind them, they should feel indisposed to yield anything, whereas without that sanction the difficulty might be adjusted. In the event the solution becomes impossible—and I fear that will be the situation—the result is obvious, and war may again make its appearance between two great European nations.

Italy has behind it the sanction of her treaty of 1915 with France and England. Jugo-Slavia has behind it the sanction of the Government of the United States, and, in the event of hostilities, the moral obligation now imposed upon the United States would certainly require its recognition of her cause. That means but one thing—our participation in another European war, or our refusal to sustain our present attitude by force. In the one instance we may be involved in a conflict which may be precipitated between ourselves and some of our recent allies; in the other we will be justly charged with a repudiation of a doctrine upon the strength of which one nation was encouraged to persist in its demands, and which has a consequent right to depend upon us for aid, should appeal be made to the sword.

On the other hand, any settlement resulting from the position the United States now occupies, whatever that settlement may be, will necessarily arouse in the disappointed nation a feeling of resentment toward the United States, national in its character, and which may, in the course of time, develop into serious controversy. All of which indicates the contingencies confronting us as a member of the league in conjunction with every dispute in which we may be called upon to participate and which our potent influence may determine.

It is the most obvious thing in the world, it is a matter of our daily experience. that the individual involved in a controversy seldom loses, whether by arbitration or by the judgment of a court, without feeling that injustice has been done him, and without inwardly resolving to take advantage of any opportunity which may be offered in the future for his satisfaction. That which the individual feels because of his controversy, the nations, which are collections of individuals only, entertain perhaps in much greater degree. I can not, therefore, but regard the incident as in some respects providential, should we give it due heed, since it reveals with the utmost clearness the responsibilities which we are about to assume, not for one year or two years, which is a contingency, but for all time.

The very fact that the United States is the greatest Nation in the world and isolated from the other great powers will naturally make it the arbiter of arbiters in all disputes between European and Asiatic countries. We must assume the responsibility, therefore, of deciding those disputes or, at least, of shifting the equilibrium between the two sides in the one way or the other, and in every instance where we settle the dispute we create another enemy. Instead, therefore, of contributing to the harmony of nations, it would seem, if we are to take this incident as an illustration of what we shall encounter, that harmony will be obtained at the expense of American popularity and leadership. Such a price no nation, however powerful, can afford to pay.

There is another thought which has occurred to me, Mr. President, in connection with this controversy. However much we may attempt to safeguard the Monroe doctrine, either in the text of the treaty or by reservations, we can not both enter the league and also preserve the integrity of that policy. Our union in a great family of nations will prove entirely inconsistent in practice, although it may not in theory, with our reservation of that great policy which has shaped the destiny of the Western Hemisphere ever since its announcement and whose continual recognition is admittedly essential to the welfare and the future of the American Republic.

This contention can be illustrated by a situation on the Western Hemisphere which is analogous to that of Fiume. I refer to the dispute now and for some time existing between Peru and Chile over two provinces which, at the close of the war between those two countries, were taken over by Chile to be held for a certain number of years.

Chile contends that her right to those provinces is permanent; Peru contends that the terms of the treaty having been complied with, they should be restored to her, while Bolivia insists upon one of them, that she may have an outlet to the sea. Here are the conditions of a grave international controversy, first, between two nations claiming the same territory, and, second, between these and Bolivia, once the owner of one of the provinces, shut off from the sea, and entitled by all the principles of economic justice to access to the highways of the sea for her foreign trade.

When the league is established, this controversy must go to it for solution, if the nations parties to it belong to the league, or if it threatens the peace of nations, whether they belong to it or not.

Now, let us assume, Mr. President, that the league disposes of that controversy, after due consideration, in a manner unsatisfactory to the United States, albeit the decision may have been assented to by our representative. It certainly will not be satisfactory to the nation or two of the three nations whose interests are adverse to the ultimate decision. But the league, having made the decision, must enforce it whether satisfactory or not. The sympathies of the United States—indeed, the interests of the United States—may be with the disappointed party; and yet, the Monroe doctrine to the contrary notwithstanding, our membership in the league would preclude us from doing otherwise than recognizing the decision and contributing the forces of our Army, our Navy, and our Treasury to its establishment.

We can, if my illustration be reliable, decline to do anything; but that would involve a condition not compatible with the integrity of American agreements. We might protest, but our protest might be unavailing. If we should resort to the principle of the Monroe doctrine to vindicate our attitude, we would repudiate the covenant of the league. If we acquiesced in the decision of the league, although inimical to ourselves, we would abandon the Monroe doctrine pro tanto. Sooner or later that controversy will become acute, league or no league. It is even now of serious proportions. It would seem to me, therefore, that the Fiume incident offers a striking example of the dangers involved in the League of Nations and a solemn warning against our entry into it.

I may be prejudiced regarding this subject. It may be that the situation is otherwise than as it appears to me; yet so serious is it that the President of the United States justifies his insistence upon its adjustments in harmony with his own view that he contemplates a withdrawal of the treaty, which means its abrogation, unless his demand be complied with. I can not therefore overemphasize its importance or draw too somber a lesson from the consequences which it forebodes once we enter upon this new and untried experiment and take what Lord Grey happily calls this "plunge into the unknown."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Knox	Sheppard
Ball	Gronna	Lenroot	Shields
Borah	Hale	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Harding	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Capper	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Chamberlain	Harrison	Myers	Spencer
Colt	Henderson	New	Sterling
Culberson	Hitchcock	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Thomas
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Trammell
Elkins	Jones, Wash.	Page	Underwood
Fernald	Kellogg	Phelan	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Kendrick	Phipps	Warren
France	Kenyon	Pittman	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Poindexter
Gay	King	Pomerene
Gerry	Kirby	Ransdell

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to read to the Senate the construction given to-day by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] of the substitute which he has offered. I read it to show that his own statement construes it as being an amendment to the treaty. I congratulate him that he has gotten away from interpretative reservations:

> Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean to say that no nation, the United States nor any other nation, shall be compelled to submit to the council a domestic question, nor to permit the council to decide what is a domestic question.

There we have his declaration that this substitute is to prevent the council from deciding what is a domestic question. Here is the treaty. It declares that the members agree either to arbitrate every dispute or to submit them to the council. Now, I will read the provision of the covenant on disputes when one of the parties claims it is a domestic question:

> If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report, and shall make no recommendations as to its settlement.

So that the league covenant expressly provides that the council shall pass upon the question as to whether a particular dispute falls within the class of a domestic dispute. The substitute of the Senator from Nebraska, according to his own interpretation, takes away from the league the right to decide what is and what is not a domestic question, and it takes it away not only so far as the United States is concerned, but as to all nations members of the league. It changes the substance of the league covenant.

I am glad that the Senator realizes that there are provisions in the league covenant that can not be handled by interpretation and that require change. I have insisted for some time that there were provisions in the league covenant to which we should not submit and that by reservations we should take ourselves out from under objectionable provisions. That can be done, leaving other nations to stay under the terms of the provisions if they wish.

Only a few days ago Switzerland went into the league, reserving to herself freedom from the obligation of article 10 to put her troops behind the countries, members of the league, that might be involved in war, and also reserving to herself the right to refuse to permit armies to pass through Switzerland, making two distinct reservations taking Switzerland out from under two distinct provisions of the league covenant. So we can take our country out from under provisions if we wish.

I object to this amendment, not because I object to freeing the United States from the objectional provision as to domestic questions, but because, if we amend the treaty, it must go back to the conference in Paris. It must go back to the countries that have already ratified it. It is a change of the substance of the covenant; not merely a refusal, so far as we are concerned, to submit to the particular provision.

This amendment by the Senator from Nebraska would greatly delay if it did not defeat acceptance by the other countries of ratification by the United States. It is more objectionable than the reservation reported by the committee. I am opposed to it because I favor ratification with reservations and not with amendments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would like to have a vote upon this matter this afternoon. I have no particular desire to delay the matter unduly, but I wonder if the Senator would be willing to have unanimous consent given to vote upon it on Monday not later than 1 o'clock, and permit the vote to go over until that time?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means on the reservation and the two pending amendments?

Mr. BORAH. I mean on reservation 4 and all amendments which may be offered to it.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; there are two pending.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether that request would contemplate that there should be no debate beyond 1 o'clock if substitutes should be offered for the pending reservation?

Mr. BORAH. Of course I contemplate that, but I would be perfectly willing to modify it to a later hour if the Senator thinks he would want some little time. My opinion is that this matter can be voted on immediately upon coming in; and then if we said "not later than 1 o'clock" the Senator would have time to present his amendment.

Mr. KING. I shall take only a moment or two to submit the substitute which I shall offer for the reservation offered by the Senator from Massachusetts; but there may be a number of other reservations offered in the form of substitutes or there may be amendments offered to the reservation offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is now late on Saturday afternoon. I should be glad to make such an arrangement; but if Senators on the other side are going to insist that more time than two hours shall be given to discuss a subject that we have been discussing now for 48 hours, of course I shall feel bound to hold the Senate in session as late as I can.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would suggest that the Senator make his request for 2 o'clock. A number of Senators are out of the city, and if the matter is not to be voted on to-day it is just as well to let it go to that hour, so as to accommodate them until their return. If the Senator will make it 2 o'clock, that will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to make it 2 o'clock, but if that is to be done I shall have to ask that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday. The Military Academy appropriation bill ought to be taken up and disposed of promptly, and I should like to have an hour extra for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. If it is understood that the hour extra will be used for that purpose, that will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. LODGE. I will ask the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] if he thinks the bill can be disposed of in that time?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think it can be disposed of in an hour.

Mr. BORAH. It was not the limit of time upon the Military Academy bill to which I referred, but it is the understanding that that bill is to be taken up the first thing?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; immediately upon the convening of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I will ask the Senator if he will prefer a request for unanimous consent to vote on this reservation at 2 o'clock?

Mr. LODGE. I will. I must ask now for a brief executive session. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that without further debate the vote be taken on reservation No. 4 and all pending amendments at 2 o'clock on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will reduce the proposed agreement to writing and state it.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, March 1, 1920, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon reported reservation No. 4 to the treaty of peace with Germany, any amendment that may then be pending or that may be offered thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed agreement? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

EXECUTIVE SESSION WITH CLOSED DOORS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business with closed doors.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After 10 minutes the doors were reopened and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 1, 1920, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 28 (legislative day of February 27), 1920.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 28, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Omnipotent, Omniscient, Omnipresent God, our Father, ever ready to uphold, sustain, and guide Thy children.

If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;
Even there shall Thy hand lead me, and Thy right hand shall hold me.

Help us to conserve our intellectual, moral, and spiritual gifts against the day of disaster and sorrows, when the earth seems to be slipping from beneath our feet and all that we hold dear seems lost.

Teach us that the fairest temple we can build out of the material Thou hast given us is a patient, honest, pure, noble, generous soul—fit temple for the indwelling of Thy spirit.

The man who goes ahead and tries
To do his level best
Has little time to criticize
The failures of the rest.

So help us to live, and aspire, and pray, after the similitude of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Richmond, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments Nos. 17, 22, and 34, had asked the House for a further conference on the part of the Senate, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. UNDERWOOD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 152. Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood therefrom to the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on February 27, 1920, approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 3654. An act to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE AT SUNDAY SESSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] to preside at the memorial exercises to-morrow.

PILGRIM TERCENTENARY.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report from the Joint Special Committee on the Pilgrim Tercentenary Observations and ask unanimous consent that it be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts presents a report from the Joint Special Committee on the Pilgrim Tercentenary Observations and asks that it be printed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed and referred to the Committee on the Library.

CORRECTION.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, in the RECORD of February 25, 1920, page 3481, I am quoted as follows:

I remember the Director of the Mint two years ago was the only man who recommended that this office be abolished, and he stated that it was only a gunshot distance from Denver. Since then he has studied his geography, and has found out that Salt Lake City is as far from Denver as New York is from Chicago in point of time, and that would be the nearest place to which these prospectors would take their samples.

The present Director of the Mint, Mr. Raymond T. Baker, telephones me that the statement just quoted does him an injustice, as he is not now and never has been in favor of abolishing the assay office at Salt Lake City, stating that no one acquainted with the practical benefits of the Government assay offices in the mining regions would so recommend. I desire to do no injustice to Mr. Baker, and upon looking up the record I find that the recommendation to which I alluded was made three years ago by the then Director of the Mint, a gentleman named F. J. H. von Engelken.

The SPEAKER. This does not seem to be a correction of the RECORD.

Mr. MAYS. I will come to that in a moment. My statement, therefore, should read "three years ago" instead of "two years ago," and I ask that the correction be made accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman wishes to change the statement that he made?

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMPENSATION OF DISABLED OFFICERS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask unanimous consent for a reference of the bill H. R. 10835, to fix the compensation of officers of the National Army who incurred disability while in the service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, what is the request?

The SPEAKER. It is to rerefer the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Is there objection?

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the bill would more properly go to the Committee on Ways and Means under the resolution adopted the other day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. ESCH. It is a bill that involves very large expenditures.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have authority to so refer it, if the gentleman's suggestion is correct; but at first blush the Chair thinks that that is not so.

Mr. GARNER. This refers to officers and men who were in the service?

Mr. KAHN. It gives them increased compensation.

Mr. GARNER. Under the war-risk insurance act, and applies only to those who were wounded in the service?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. GARNER. If I understood the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], he stated that the purpose of his resolution was to take from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee only such matters that were general in their nature and which did not refer specifically to those who were wounded or who suffered injury in the service.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill belongs clearly to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does this increase war-risk compensation or increase the salaries of men on the retired list?

Mr. KAHN. It does not affect anyone on the retired list. These men were in the service and go out of the service as soon as they are honorably discharged. They are no longer connected with the service.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does it increase the pay while they are in the service?

Mr. KAHN. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO FARM-LOAN ACT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a conference report, which will be printed under the rule.

SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES IN ADMIRALTY (S. DOC. NO. 233)—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (S. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the conference report on the bill S. 3076 and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, has there been a full agreement in this matter?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; there is a full agreement, and it is substantially as it was passed by the House, with some slight changes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the conferees.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That no vessel owned by the United States or by any corporation in which the United States or its representatives shall own the entire outstanding capital stock or in the possession of the United States or of such corporation or operated by or for the United States or such corporation, and no cargo owned or possessed by the United States or by such corporation, shall hereafter, in view of the provision herein made for a libel in personam, be subject to arrest or seizure by judicial process in the United States or its possessions: Provided, That this act shall not apply to the Panama Railroad Co.

"SEC. 2. That in cases where if such vessel were privately owned or operated, or if such cargo were privately owned and possessed, a proceeding in admiralty could be maintained at the time of the commencement of the action herein provided for, a libel in personam may be brought against the United States or against such corporation, as the case may be, provided that such vessel is employed as a merchant vessel or is a tugboat operated by such corporation. Such suits shall be brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which the parties so suing, or any of them, reside or have their principal place of business in the United States, or in which the vessel or cargo charged with liability is found. The libelant shall forthwith serve a copy of his libel on the United States attorney for such district and mail a copy thereof by registered mail to the Attorney General of the United States, and shall file a sworn return of such service and mailing. Such service and mailing shall constitute valid service on the United States and such corporation. In case the United States or such corporation shall file a libel in rem or in personam in any district, a cross-libel in personam may be filed or a set-off claimed against the United States or such corporation with the same force and effect as if the libel had been filed by a private party. Upon application of either party the cause may, in the discretion of the court, be transferred to any other district court of the United States.

"SEC. 3. That such suits shall proceed and shall be heard and determined according to the principles of law and to the rules of practice obtaining in like cases between private parties. A decree against the United States or such corporation may include costs of suit, and when the decree is for a money judgment, interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum until satisfied, or at any higher rate which shall be stipulated in any contract upon which such decree shall be based. Interest shall run as ordered by the court. Decrees shall be subject to appeal and revision as now provided in other cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. If the libelant so elects in his libel suit the suit may proceed in accordance with the principles of libels in rem wherever it shall appear that had the vessel or cargo been privately owned and possessed a libel in rem might have been maintained. Election so to proceed shall not preclude the libelant in any proper case from seeking relief in personam in the same suit. Neither the United States nor such corporation shall be required to give any bond or admiralty stipulation on any proceeding brought hereunder. Any such bond or stipulation heretofore given in admiralty causes by the United States, the United States Shipping Board, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, shall become void and be surrendered and canceled upon the filing of a suggestion by the Attorney General or other duly authorized law officer that the United States is interested in such cause, and assumes liability to satisfy any decree included within said bond or stipulation, and thereafter any such decree shall be paid as provided in section 8 of this act.

"SEC. 4. That if a privately owned vessel not in the possession of the United States or of such corporation is arrested or attached upon any cause of action arising or alleged to have arisen from previous possession, ownership, or operation of such vessel by the United States or by such corporation, such vessel shall be released without bond or stipulation therefor upon the suggestion by the United States through its Attorney General or other duly authorized law officer, that it is interested in such cause, desires such release, and assumes the liability for the satisfaction of any decree obtained by the libelant in such cause, and thereafter such cause shall proceed against the United States in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 5. That suits as herein authorized may be brought only on causes of action arising since April 6, 1917, provided that suits based on causes of action arising prior to the taking effect of this act shall be brought within one year after this act goes into effect; and all other suits hereunder shall be brought within two years after the cause of action arises.

"SEC. 6. That the United States or such corporation shall be entitled to the benefits of all exemptions and of all limitations of liability accorded by law to the owners, charterers, operators, or agents of vessels.

"SEC. 7. That if any vessel or cargo within the purview of sections 1 and 4 of this act is arrested, attached, or otherwise seized by process of any court in any country other than the United States, or if any suit is brought therein against the master of any such vessel for any cause of action arising from, or in connection with, the possession, operation, or ownership of any such vessel, or the possession, carriage, or ownership of any such cargo, the Secretary of State of the United States in his discretion, upon the request of the Attorney General of the United States, or any other officer duly authorized by him, may direct the United States consul residing at or nearest the place at which such action may have been commenced to claim such vessel or cargo as immune from such arrest, attachment, or other seizure, and to execute an agreement, undertaking, bond, or stipulation for and on behalf of the United States, or the United States Shipping Board, or such corporation as by said court required, for the release of such vessel or cargo, and for the prosecution of any appeal; or may, in the event of such suits against the master of any such vessel, direct said United States consul to enter the appearance of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such corporation, and to pledge the credit thereof to the payment of any judgment and cost that may be entered in such suit. The Attorney General is hereby vested with power and authority to arrange with any bank, surety company, person, firm, or corporation in the United States, its Territories and possessions, or in any foreign country, to execute any such aforesaid bond or stipulation as surety or stipulator thereon, and to pledge the credit of the United States to the indemnification of such surety or stipulator as may be required to secure the execution of such bond or stipulation. The presentation of a copy of the judgment roll in any such suit, certified by the clerk of the court and authenticated by the certificate and seal of the United States consul claiming such vessel or cargo, or his successor, and by the certificate of the Secretary of State as to the official capacity of such consul, shall be sufficient evidence to the proper accounting officers of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such corporation, for the allowance and payment of such judgments: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be held to prejudice or preclude a claim of the immunity of such vessel or cargo from foreign jurisdiction in a proper case.

"SEC. 8. That any final judgment rendered in any suit herein authorized, and any final judgment within the purview of sections 4 and 7 of this act, and any arbitration award or settlement had and agreed to under the provisions of section 9 of this act shall, upon the presentation of a duly authenticated copy thereof, be paid by the proper accounting officers of the United States out of any appropriation or insurance fund or other fund especially available therefor; otherwise there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay any such judgment or award or settlement.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of any department of the Government of the United States, or the United States Shipping Board, or the board of trustees of such corporation, having control of the possession or operation of any merchant vessel, are, and each hereby is, authorized to arbitrate, compromise, or settle any claim in which suit will lie under the provisions of sections 2, 4, 7, and 10 of this act.

"SEC. 10. That the United States, and the crew of any merchant vessel owned or operated by the United States, or such corporation, shall have the right to collect and sue for salvage services rendered by such vessel and crew, and any moneys recovered therefrom by the United States for its own benefit, and not for the benefit of the crew, shall be covered into the United States Treasury, to the credit of the department of the Government of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such corporation having control of the possession or operation of such vessels.

"SEC. 11. That all moneys recovered in any suit brought by the United States on any cause of action arising from, or in connection with, the possession, operation, or ownership of any merchant vessel, or the possession, carriage, or ownership of any cargo, shall be covered into the United States Treasury to the credit of the department of the Government of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such aforesaid corporation, having control of the vessel or cargo with respect to which such cause of action arises, for reimbursement of the appropriation, or insurance fund, or other funds, from which the loss, damage, or compensation for which said judgment was recovered has been or will be paid.

"SEC. 12. That the Attorney General shall report to the Congress at each session thereof the suits under this act in which final judgment shall have been rendered for or against the United States and such aforesaid corporation, and the Secretary of any department of the Government of the United States, and the United States Shipping Board, and the board of trustees of any such aforesaid corporation, shall likewise report the arbitrations awards or settlements of claims which shall have been agreed to since the previous session, and in which the time to appeal shall have expired or have been waived.

"SEC. 13. That the provisions of all other acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes, submit the following statement:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agrees to the same with the following amendments:

1. Section 1 of the House amendment has been rewritten. As amended it eliminates the provision declaring all vessels of the United States to be public vessels, and excludes the Panama Railway Co. from the operation of the bill.

2. In section 2 the words "or intended to be employed in the carriage of cargoes or of passengers for hire" have been stricken out, and the words "as a merchant vessel or as a tugboat operated by such corporation." The effect of this change is to exclude from the scope of the bill certain public vessels not employed as merchant vessels but that occasionally carry persons and property for hire, and to make certain that tugboats employed as auxiliaries to the merchant fleet are made subject to the proposed act.

3. Two verbal changes have been made in section 5. The word "only" has been inserted after the word "brought," in the first line of the section, and the words "approval of this act" have been changed to "taking effect of this act." The word "only" was inserted to make certain that only suits on causes of action originating after April 6, 1917, are authorized.

4. At the end of section 7 the following words have been added: "in a proper case." This effects no change.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As I understood this bill as it passed the House and the Senate, it was to take away the right of libel of certain Government-owned vessels where that right now exists?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the purpose.
